Mr. Rowell will arrive in Peterborough at seven-fifty-five, C.P.R. from Toronto, on Thursday evening and will be accompanied by Mr. George G. S. Lindsay, K.C., Toronto, who will also address the public meeting in the theatre. G. A. Gillespie, besides other local speakers, will be present. So many seats have been called for to be reserved that it is very necessary, for the public to be there before eight o'clock in order to get seats.

ROWELL AT THE OPERA HOUSE.

The indications are that there will be a crowded house to hear Mr. Rowell at the Opera House to-morrow night There is certain to be a large attendance of ladies, for the main issue is one that concerns primarily the welfare of the home, the husband and the boys and the mothers, too. Women will want to hear Mr. Rowell who believes in women's right to have a voice in deciding questions that affect them directly and indirectly. Men will want to hear a man whose policy involves the greatest issue in the interests of Ontario hood ever submitted to an electorate. Electors who want to hear a straightforward, manly presentation of the issues in this campaign will go to hear Rowell,the man that made Massey Hall, Toronto, echo to the applause that greeted the opening speech of his sweeping campaign. No tickets of admission will be issued; so that those who wish to get places will do well to go early.

MR. ROWELL AND MARRIED WOMEN.

Mr. Rowell, the Liberal leader, can consistently invite the ladies to attend his meeting in the Opera House on Thursday night. He is the champion of their rights. He is in favour of extending to married women, otherwise qualified, the same right to vote in municipal elections that are now enjoyed by spinsters and widows.

There has been almost as strong public demand for this right as for tax reform. The demand has come from forty municipalities in different parts of the Province. Mr Rowell and the Liberal party favour this reform because it is a right of married women and because it is in line with Liberal principles, to which we owe all the franchise enlargement passed in British countries for either men or women, and because it is granted by all progressive countries. It is in force in Great Britain, several European countries, and in Australia and New Zealand and some of the United States.

Who opposes this reform? The Ontario Government which voted down Mr. Rowell's proposal to give the municipal franchise to married women. Did the Government take this stand at the dictation of the liquor interests which oppose the extension of a vote to married women, because they can be counted upon, if they have the franchise, to vote almost solidly in favour of restricting the liquor traffic; to vote almost solidly for local option and carry it in many municipalities, where, owing to the three-fifths' clause, it is defeated by a few votes. When the liquor interests and the Government act together in denying the vote to married women, who will be friendly to the three-fifths clause, it is become support for the suggestion that in the matter of opposing temperance reform the two interests are in rather close alliance and are acting together?

No temperance man, with honest convictions, will take the chance of helping the traffic to maintain its deathly grip upon this fair Province by helping the candidates of the Government which shows so much consideration for the traffic and so little interest in moral reform.

AN UNPROGRESSIVE GOVERNMENT.

The Government of Ontario, in its practice, aims to be supreme; to be superior to the people, and unwilling to give the people what they want, and what is good for them—will not allow the people to exercise a choice as to the way they shall do things. The Government is opposed to local option in regard to the liquor license system; it shows this by retaining the three-fifths' clause, which helps and has helped, to defeat the will of the people as expressed by a majority vote.

The Government opposes local option—to be exercised by municipalities—as to the principle of tax reform; refusing councils' permission, if they want to do so, to assess lands at a higher rate than improvements. This reform would encourage building and give increased employment to labour, and would help the working man to get land on which to erect a house; and would not fine him by imposing a grievous tax on his buildings, whose erection would increase the value of vacant land in the vicinity without any expenditure by the owners; but, on the contrary permit them to enjoy the increased value made by the work of others, and, at the same time, escape with low taxation.

This reform in taxation, which municipalities can adopt as they see fit if the Government would give them the power, is regarded by thousands as something for the public benefit. Yet, the Government insists upon refusing this permission.

The Government's attitude in this thing is contrary to the will of the people, though it claims that there has been and is no real demand for it.

Is this correct? Not at all. One hundred and sixtynine newspapers, both Liberal and Conservative, have come out in its favour; 220 municipalities—six cities, 33 towns, 36 villages and 144 township municipalities—have petitioned for the privilege of tax reform, and 268 labour organizations have demanded it. The City of Toronto—even good Tory Toronto that sends a solid phalanx of supporters to the Whitney Government—voted for tax reform on June 1st, 1913, by a majority of 19,020—a majority of four to one. And Conservative and Independent journals, and individuals have denounced the Government for its stolid indifference to the popular will and the general wish so forcibly expressed. In another column will be found a record of these opinions, in which the Government is condemned by its own friends.

The reason of this attitude, of the Government's "stolid stupidity on the question of tax reform" as the Conservative Ottawa Journal called it, is that the Government is not progressive; it stands still and seems to think that its past record should justify its continued existence.

Nearly all the reforms it has been guilty of should not be laid to its charge, for they have been forced upon it by the Liberal opposition and an overwhelming public opinion.

In regard to the Workmen's Compensation Act the Government allowed this extremely important matter to drag from 1907 till 1914, when after being prodded by the Liberal opposition the Government had to take action,and put a bill on the statues of 1914. But the Government will not put the Act into force till they have selected a commission. The Government has made the working men wait seven years for a Compensation law, and if there is the same spirit of indifference shown, the same delay used, it will be another seven years before the Act is put into force and the workman is able to get compensation, if the present Government is given the chance.

A Government that shows such absurd hostility to popuar reform and the rights of the people does not deserve continued existence; and it looks as if its autocratic reign were drawing to a close.

ROWELL MEETS WHITNEY'S REQUIREMENTS.

The Review and Mr. Soden charge Mr. Gillespie with insincerity and with opposing the policy of his leader, because he pledged himself for the abolition of shop licenses, which are not included in Mr. Rowell's policy directly. A man can't be considered as antagonizing his leader because he not only supports his leader's policy but goes a little further. Whether it it a merit in the eyes of his enemies or not, Mr. Rowell's policy is in conformity with the theory of Sir James Whitney. Sir James is opposed to abolition of the bar because it is, he says, in advance of public opinion.

Mr. Rowell has formulated his abolish the bar policy on this principle. As far back as 1902 a resolution was passed at a meeting of the Dominion Alliance, attended by representatives of the various churches and social and moral reform organizations. The resolution embodying the definite conclusions of these representative people called for:

> "The abolition of the bar, the treating system and drinking in clubs and such other restrictions of the liquor traffic as shall most effectively curtail its operation and remedy its evils."

This resolution which has been repeatedly reaffirmed in demand, up to the present time, is a reflection of public opinion and as such the basis of Mr. Rowell's policy. He has met the demand of the organized and moral friends of temperance advance. His policy meets the approval of those representatives of public opinion, and is being acted upon in this spirit by the people at large. Mr. Rowell's policy of abolish the bar, meets even Sir James Whitney's stipulation that we should not go beyond the demands of public opinion, which, as concretely expressed, calls for the abolition of the bar and club licenses.

Mr. Soden's subterfuge to evade the issue, his bluff proposal to abolish shop license too, was not included in the popular opinion which formed the basis of Mr. Rowell's policy. He refuses to support Mr. Rowell because he requires only the abolition of the bar, club licenses and treating, while he follows a leader who is vowed against abolition of the bar, club, licenses and treating, and of course, of shop licenses, too. As to the abolition of shop licenses that is, in great part, already accomplished. In nine-tenths of the province there are no shop licenses, and with the abolition of the three-fifths clause at the first session of the Legislature, if Mr. Rowell is returned, the people, by local option which is retained, will make short work of the few shop licenses remaining. With a leader and Legislature returned to abolish bar and shop licenses, there won't be any undue delay in making the clean sweep.

A POINTER FOR LABOUR.

Jollied for years over a workmen's compensation law not yet in effect, and with their candidate, Mr. Studholme, opposed in East Hamilton, the workmen should be able to discern what they are likely to get from the Conservative Government. — Globe.

Since 1905 the American Red Cross has brought relief in over seventy-five disasters, due to earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, fires, floods, famines, mine explosions, and wars in this and foreign countries, for which it has received, expended, and directed the expenditure of about $12,000,000.

GOVERNMENT'S ATTITUDE TOWARDS TAXATION REFORM

How the Government's Hostility Has Aroused Hostile Criticism of Its Own Party Friends

What is the tax reform policy of the Liberal Party? It is Local Option for municipalities to assess and tax improvements, including buildings, business and income, on a lower basis than land. No municipality need adopt the law unless it so desires.

Whom would it benefit, and how?

(a) All progressive citizens who are improving their property and thereby benefiting the community, because it would decrease the tax upon their improvements.

(b) The Manufacturer and Merchant, because it would reduce their business tax, as well as the tax upon the factories and stores or shops occupied by them.

(c) The workingman and men receiving a moderate income, because it would substantially reduce their municipal taxation.

(d) The farmers, because it would place a premium on industry and thrift; it would relieve the progressive farmer who is improving his property from being penalized by increased taxation for the improvements he makes; and it would discourage the holding of land idle and unimproved, which is to the detriment of the community.

(e) The average dweller in city and town, because:

(a) It would take for the benefit of the community a portion of the increased value of lands which the community itself creates;

(b) It would discourage the holding of lands idle for speculative purposes, and tend to bring it into the market, either for sale at a reasonable price to the party who desired to purchase and erect a home of his own, or it would induce the owner to improve it by building on it in order to earn a revenue to pay the increased taxation. In either case it would be helping the average man to secure a home at a reasonabl price for rent.

(c) By discouraging the holding of land idle and forcing it into the market or forcing its improvement, it would help solve the question of overcrowding in our cities and towns, which is rapidly becoming one of the grave social problems of our time.

What has the Liberal party done to secure tax reform? Each year durin the last Legislature, the Liberals have brought in their Tax Reform proposals, both by way of resolutions and amendments, and by bills.

In 1914 three distinct proposals were made by the Liberals.

1st. Tax Reform as stated in the Liberal Policy, for the whole Province.

2nd. When the Government voted down the general proposal—a proposal that Local Option in taxation be granted New Ontario.

3rd. Tax Reform for the City of Toronto alone.

What is the Government's attitude? All the Liberal proposals for Tax Reform voted down by the Government.

What Sir James said:

"Tax Reform proposals of the Leader of the Opposition belong to the Henry George brand of Socialism. The next step would be the abolition of the home, marriage and the religion."

What Hon. W. J. Hanna said:

"That there existed no need for assessment reform, because there had been no real demand for such legislation within the Province, and he could not see that any such demand was rising."

GOVERNMENT VOTE AGAINST TAX REFORM.

The Government voted down Tax Reform in the Legislature on Feb. 26, 1914, by a big majority.

WHO HAS ASKED FOR IT?

One hundred newspapers have petitioned in favour of amending the Ontario Assesment Act to enable municipalities if they so desire to tax improvements in which are included buildings, business assessments, incomes, etc., at a lower rate than land values.

MUNICIPALITIES ALSO.

Two hundred and twenty Municipalities have petitioned in favour of amending the Ontario Assessment Act to enable Municipalities if they so desire, to tax improvements in which are included buildings, business assessment, incomes, etc., at a lower rate than land values.

Two hundred and thirty-three Labour Organizations have asked for it and the Citizens of Toronto, by the following vote, on Jan. 1, 1913:

For Tax Reform	25,494
Against	6,404
Majority for Tax Reform	19,090

Toronto Methodist Conference, June 1913, declared in favour of it.

CONDEMNED BY ITS FRIENDS.

The following, Conservative and Independent journals and persons have said these things:

Ottawa Citizen (Conservative):

"The Tory attitude towards Tax Reform in Ontario may soon give this banner province the proud distinction of being more reactionary than Spain. Ontario is becoming the Rip Van Winkle of the World. The Liberals are awake to the fact that public opinion will sweep from Office those who are obstructing Local Option in taxation."

Toronto World (Conservative):

"The Opposition has awakened up. The members on the Government benches have gone to sleep."

Ottawa Journal (Conservative):

"If Sir James Whitney is going to maintain his present attitude against Tax Reform, we think that the Province can afford to retire Sir James Whitney from power. The Liberals in Ontario have a good man and a clean politician at their head, are as much supporters of the Hydro-Electric Policy as the Conservatives are, and we see no conclusive reason why Ontario need hesitate to put the Liberals in power again if a majority of the Conservatives wish to stand in the way of progress. A stolid stupidity on the question of Tax Reform."

Toronto Saturday Night (Independent):

"Sir James Whitney is proving himself a reactionary. Ontario's Premier has his head in the sand, his coat-tails in the air, and refuses to budge. This blustering Big Boss may imagine for the moment that he can by some magic process set his face against fundamental reforms and against the will of the people and still prosper as the Big Chief, but the people of Ontario will not long tolerate an obstinate obstructionist."

Resolution Passed Unanimously by the Dominion Grange (Farmers):

"We note with pleasure the growth of public opinion in favour of Local Option in taxation, and we again protest against the injustice of denying to municipalities the right to exempt improvements from taxation if they so wish."

Farmers' Magazine (Independent):

"The movement for Assessment Reform is growing stronger in Ontario. Farmers for years have suffered for their thrift in erecting new buildings and in improving the soil, to be taxed at a higher rate. Their shiftless neighbours have thus been bonused."

Statement of J. H. Burnham (Conservative M.P. for West Peterborough):

"If Sir James Whitney realized that to take off the tax on buildings meant the virtual obliteration of the slums; if he knew that much of the two per cent. of the municipal tax would go to the tenant of the tenement, he might talk less about wrecking homes by Tax Reform. But he will neither do it, nor allow those who pay the taxes to do it."

Cobalt Nugget (Independent):

"It is not necessary to go far in this country to see evidences of the vicious effects of the present system (of taxation). With the examples that we have in this district, he inhabitants of Northern Ontario, if called upon to vote, would cast an almost unanimous vote in the same direction as the citizens of Toronto (in favour of Tax Reform)."

Toronto News (Conservative):

"There is strong sentiment in favour of reducing taxation on improvements, and most people realize that the business tax is unfair and oppressive."

Peterborough Times (Independent):

"The next election will find this question of Local Option in taxation an issue which even the roaring lion in Toronto will not be able to resist."

Mail and Empire (Conservative):

"That there are assessment grievances, no one will deny. It is notorious that the assessment system, as at present worked, distributes the burden of taxation unfairly. Assessment, as we now have it, is erratic rather than systematic."

Toronto Telegram (Conservative):

"The Ontario Government's adherence to unjust and unprogressive methods of taxation."

Galt Reporter (Conservative):

"The tax reformers may be erratic, visionary, incapable of taking a practical view of things, and otherwise unbalanced, but lined up behind Mr. Rowell, the combination would make a formidable one. Does Sir James Whitney feel strong enough to drive them into the Liberal ranks? That is the question."

Industrial Canada (Organ of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association):

"The Special Committee of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, which had the subject under consideration for several months, came to the unanimous conclusion that public opinion and the experience of other jurisdictions justified and, in fact, demanded at least two further changes in the assessment system: The abolition of the business tax, and the imposition of some form of tax upon unimproved land. We have no hesitation in saying that if Sir James has been accurately reported as saying that there is no demand for radical changes, he has been ill advised."—Feb. 10, 1913.

Lethbridge, Alberta, News (Conservative):

"Sir James Pliny Whitney, Premier of Ontario, has surely reached the limit of absurdity in his consideration of the very reasonable proposals of the Tax Reformers of that Province."—Feb., 1913.

Humour as a Commodity.

A pessimistic humorist is responsible for the statement that there are only seven original jokes, and that around these jokes as a foundation has been built the humour of the world.

Whether or not this assertion is true, it is undoubtedly a fact that there is very little original humour. Most of that which masquerades under the name is rejuvenated, revised, and readapted. Comparatively few men are really humorous or witty, and half of the so-called professional and amateur humourists are more likely to stimulate a groan than a laugh. It is a fact, indeed, that the majority of great men in every walk of life are able neither to create nor to use humour, and have not a keen sense of the humorous.

The capacity to appreciate humor seems to be an integral part of every form of desirable ability. He who cannot smile, or find opportunity to laugh, is to be pitied. There is something the matter with him, and the world is not anxious to keep him.

While a sense of humour is probably a natural gift, it can be cultivated to some extent.

Try not to take life too seriously. See the lights as well as the shadows. Smile when it rains and laugh away some of your troubles.

If you are not naturally witty, don't try to be, and don't attempt to tell a funny story unless you can tell it well. Yet cultivate a sense of humour so that you can appreciate with others and be a good listener, if not a good entertainer.

The majority of successful salesmen not only have a sense of humour but they are able to create it, to handle it. This faculty can be carried to an excess and injure its possessor; but, unless one is able to appreciate the lighter things of life, as well as the more serious ones, he is at a great disadvantage, and cannot as successfully meet the public, socially or in a business way, as can he who loves the sunshine of the world.

Conversation is neither entertaining nor instructive if it is all cloudy and heavy. The right proportion of lightness intensifies the strength of its opposite.

I should advise every young man and woman to be familiar, not only with current literature, but with modern humor. The bright, funny article in the newspaper, and in the humorous magazine, is as worthy of attention as is that dealing with sterner reality.

If you know how to make cheerful those with whom you come in contact, if you know how to appreciate the funny side of life and how to make others recognize it, people will be glad to see you, they will want to stop and have a word with you. You will be a welcome guest, a welcome salesman, a welcome addition to the office force.

I know of nothing which will better dispel gloom and smooth over the hard rocks in the road of everyday life than will a good, hearty laugh.

Stoney Lake Breezes

STONY LAKE, June 16—Mr. and Mrs Ackerman of Norwood are enjoying a short holiday at their summer home in Upper Stony.

The cottagers of the Upper Stony Lake section will regret the departure of Mr. and Mrs. Coutts of Georgetown, who are moving to the North West.

Commencing Monday the Stoney Lake Navigation Co. will put on the usual two-trip-a-day service.

Mr. Tarbaux of Toronto, who purchased "Britannia" from Mr. B. F. Ackerman, will make some alterations to his cottage.

Mr. Murray Carlisle has arrived at "Upsidedown" for the season.

Mrs. Morrow, Edinburgh Street, Peterborough, has taken Mrs. Carey's cottage, "Portree," for the month of July.

Contractor Cassidy is making good progress with the new Anglican Church at Hell's Gate. It is beginning to assume quite a "Churchy" appearance with its Cathedral windows.

A large camping party has located on Juniper Island just behind 'Shelta."

The white buoy off Big Otter, on the way to Mt. Julian, has been carried away by the spring ice jam.

"Oakdene," the summer home of Mr. George Morrow, might, with a great deal of appropriateness, be called "Oakdene Villa," so numerous are the buildings on his islands. They are all resplendent in new coats of paint, white, with trimmings of red.

Mr. Callender is spending a short holiday at his cottage above Bosch ink.

Mr. Thompson has the contract for carrying the mails this summer. His gasoline yacht "Viking" made the first trip Monday, the 15th, passing Kawartha Park at 1 o'clock, on the way down, returning at 5 o'clock, which is one hour later than last summer's schedule.

Mrs. Wilmott and family of Belleville, have taken Claude Rogers' cottage on Big Island for the season.

PRE NATAL CHILD CULTURE

Editor, The Evening Examiner:

Sir,—There is great need of a general awakening to the wonderful possibilities of consecrated motherhood. In the light of recent investigations in the new science of eugenics, we know that the vital and mental forces of the expectant mother profoundly influence for good or, ill the plastic body and mind of the unborn babe. We have reason to believe that every absorbing thought and heartfelt desire she entertains stamps its impress upon the forming brain cells — "a chisel that cuts to make or mar the statue of a soul." "Hundreds of mothers have assured me," says Prof. Newton N. Riddell, "that they could trace their existing states at this time in the lives and dispositions of their children."

Then is the mother's golden opportunity to implant noble, inborn talents and tendencies. If she will cherish only beautiful, kindly, happy thoughts and aspirations, and a fervent desire or prayer that the coming little one may be lovely, pure and good, experience proves that it will almost certainly be so. It is infinitely better to form the new life aright in the beginning than to attempt to reform it in after years.

Inspector's Report To County Council On The House Of Refuge And The County Jail

Yesterday afternoon the County Council received reports from Helen McMurchy, the Government Inspector, who had visited the House of Refuge at Lakefield and the County Gaol since the last meeting of the Council.

Miss McMurchy's report contained gratifying praise for the business-like manner in which the farm and buildings of the House of Refuge at Lakefield were being conducted. The food was good and well served, and she had found the management of the farm, the house and the inmates to be on a splendid business-like basis.

The report included the observation that the main corridor of the House of Refuge was rendered partially fire proof by fireproof doors. The building was comfortably and suitably furnished, the halls, rooms and dormitory were found to be clean and in good condition and not crowded, and the quarters of the staff and the dormitories were adequate and in good condition. The kitchen and laundry were adequate and well equipped.

The Inspector recommended that the walls be repaired in some places, and that an infirmary ward be established as soon as possible. This was on account of the condition of James Nugent, one of the inmates of the Refuge, who was totally blind, and whose mental qualities were seriously impaired. The arrangements for this man, said the report, were not harmful, but were crude and should be remedied as soon as possible. According to the report the net cost for the House of Refuge for 1913 (with 33 inmates, none of whom contributed to the upkeep) was $4,074.

The County Gaol.

The comments on the government and management of the County Gaol, the looking after of the prisoners and the conditions in general, were all complimentary to those in charge of the gaol, and spoke highly for the system under which the jail is being conducted at present. The general conditions as regards cleanliness were found to be good and it was noticed in the report that work was provided for the prisoners, none of whom were allowed to remain in idleness. It was recommended, however, that they be given more outdoor work in the summer time and that a few minor changes and additions to the equipment of the gaol be made. The statistical portion of the report showed that there were 18 cells, 8 prisoners (at the time of inspection), and 136 commitments during the year. As a place of custody the jail was secure.

THE POSITION OF THE TWO CANDIDATES IN EAST PETERBOROUGH

Mr. W. A. Anderson is Endorsed by the County Temperance League--J. J. Thompson Refused to Pledge Himself in Regard to Temperance.

The following statement has been addressed by the County Temperance Association to the electors of East Peterborough:

Peterborough, June 15, 1914.

To the lectors of East Peterborough:

On May 19 the County of Peterborough Temperance Association held a largelly attended convention in the City of Peterborough. This convention was held before the political parties had placed their candidates in the field. It was then unanimously decided that the Association would support the candidate who would undertake if elected to vote for the abolition of the bar and shop and the cancellation of club licenses and who would undertake to support all advanced temperance legislation by whichever party it was introduced. A resolution was also passed instructing the officers of the Association to wait upon both candidates, after their nomination, and obtain from them signed statements setting forth their stand on the temperance issue. The officers of the Association were authorized to make a pronouncement in favour of the candidate whose assurances were most satisfactory to the temperance interests.

Candidates Interviewed.

In accordance with these instructions of the convention the president and a vice-president of the County Temperance Association duly waited on Mr. James Thompson, the Conservative candidate, and Mr. W. A. Anderson, the Liberal candidate.

Both candidates were asked the following questions:

"Are you in favour of the abolition of the three-fifths handicap?

"Will you vote with either political party for its abolition and favour a straight majority vote on every possible occasion in the Legislature?

"Will you vote with either political party on every possible occasion for

"(a) The abolition of the open bar.

"(b) Club licenses?

"(c) Shop licenses?

"(d) And all other legislation looking for the restriction and abolition of the liquor traffic.

Mr. Thompson's Stand.

Mr. Thompson, when interviewed, replied that he would not sign any statement. He said that his answer to the questions aske by the Association would be given at a meeting to be held in his interests at Grady's school house on June 8. At this meeting Mr. Thompson referred to the questions that he had been asked by the County Temperance Association and then made the following statement:

"If a representative can't go to the Ontario Legislation without absolutely pledging himself as to how he would vote on such issues I would not go at all. I will not tie myself up or pledge myself."

Mr. Anderson's Stand.

Mr. Anderson, when interviewed, gave a signed statement in which he answere all six questions in the affirmative. Furthermore, he promised to give his unqualified support to all temperance legislation no matter by which party introduced.

A False Trap.

The night of his meeting at Grady's school house, Mr. Thompson, in the presence of several witnesses, showed a number of people two maps. One of these maps, he said, showed temperance conditions in Ontario after 32 years of Liberal administration. This map showed only 28 municipalities in Ontario to have been "dry" when the Liberals went out of power. The second may showed temperance conditions in Ontario after nine years of the Whitney administration. It showed the greater part of the province, or between 500 and 600 municipalities to ed the greater part of the province, or now be dry. Mr. Thompson made the to prepare and use this map.

It has since been ascertained that this map is false and innacurate. There is evidence that it was prepared with a deliberate intention to deceive the electorate.

Instead of there having been 26 municipalities dry when the Liberals went out of power there were 184 or seven times as many as Mr. Thompson claimed.

Instead of the rural municipalities in Peterborough County having been all wet—as shown on the first map—they were practically all dry.

Instead of Algonquin Park having been "wet" under the Liberal administration and having gone "dry" under the Whitney government, there has never been a license issued in that sections of the country.

The map does not show that to-day open bars and shop licenses exist in urban centres such as Peterborough, Lindsay and Port Hope, which supply liquor to the surrounding "local option" or so-calle "dry" territory.

After Mr. Thompson has been using this map at his meetings and in his private canvass, a similar map was used by Hon. Jas. Duff, Minister of Agriculture, at the meeting which he addressed in the Opera House, Peterborough, June 12.

Mr. Thompson's Votes.

When Mr. Thompson first came before the electorate several years ago he pledged himself to vote, if elected, for the abolition of the three-fifths requirement. Temperance people helped to elect Mr. Thompson, and on vote against the government on the vot against the government on the three-fifths requirement. Since then he has voted with the government against the temperance measures introduced by the Liberals. In April 10 1913 he voted against having club licenses wiped out by the adoption of Local Option by-laws. On April 23, 1913, he voted against a resolution to the effect that no tavern or club license should be issued after the 30th day of April, 1914. On the same day he voted against a proposal to have all bars closed at 12 o'clock noon on Saturdays, instead of 7 o'clock, and at 8 o'clock on other evenings, and not to open until 8 in the morning. On the same day he voted against having Good Friday added to Christmas as days on which the bars must be closed, although the government has since adopted this last piece of legislation, and carried it as its own. In 1912, 1913 and 1914 Mr. Thompson voted with the government against proposals to abolish the bar.

Mr. Anderson Favoured.

Having these facts before them the executive of the County Temperance Association has decided to endorse Mr. W. A. Anderson as the candidate who has given the most satisfactory assurance of his support of the temperance platform. We would therefore urge all who are interested in advancing the cause of temperance to give him all possible assistance and support.

The present election presents an unparalleled opportunity to secure the enactment of measures for which the temperance interests have been working for years. ELECTORS! Let us rise above party feeling and strike such a blow for temperance as will ensure victory for our cause on June 28th.

Signed on behalf of the County Temperance Association,

H. B Cowan, Peterborough, President; Samuel Armstrong, Jermyn, 1st Vice-President; G. A. Brethen, Norwood, 2nd Vice-President; A. B. Cunningham, Peterborough, Acting Secretary.

PETERBORO' COW GIVES 1690 POUNDS OF MILK

Figures Given by the Dominion Department of Agriculture

During April and May a great many poor cows have been milked, giving, in some cases, only 800 pounds of milk and 17 pounds of fat in the month; some have contented themselves with producing even less than this.

One wonders if the owners of such cows are contented with records like that, and if the owners of the various factories concerned are content to let their plants be run with such poor support.

It is a common occurrence to find groups of 50 and 100 cows at a factory giving on the average 300 pounds of milk more than similiar groups supplying the same factory.

Supposing a factory is supported by only 200 cows it should be comparatively easy to have an extra three thousand six hundred dollars flowing through it in six months to the patrons if they had better cows. That is a good "six months' hoist".

The factory management is therefore directly interested in recommending cow testing to the patrons, and in providing for its operation. Some of the good records received at the dairy division, Ottawa, (where full information may be obtained about cow testing) for April and May, are: 90 cows at Ayer's Cliff, P. Q., with an average of 25 pounds of fat, 85 cows at Atwood, Ont., with 30 pounds of fat; 53 at Wallace, Ont., giving 1,005 pounds of milk and 32 pounds of fat. Three grade cows at Cornwall, Ont., averaged 40 pounds of fat, and a five-year-old grade at Peterborough, Ont, gave 1,690 pounds of milk and 62 pounds of fat. This cow gave more than four times as much fat as many poor cows in the month.

Participating versus Non-Participating Life Policies Again

FIFTEEN YEARS AGO a Publisher of this City at age 43 took out a Ten Pay 15 year Endowment Policy of $2000, No 81226 in The Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada paying therefore an annual premium of $187.20.

The Non-Participating Premium would have been $170.40.

The extra paid for profits per year (for 10 years only was $16.80.

On the 1st of May 1914 the above Policy matured and he received in cash $2620.25.

Had this man taken a Non-Participating Policy he would have saved $168.00 extra in premiums paid for profits during the ten years but he would have lost $620.25 at maturity of Policy as he would have received only $2000.00 instead of $2620.25 as he did.

Where is there a man that would not like to invest money at such a rate and that too in the Largest and Strongest Life Insurance Company in the British Empire?

You are invited to call and investigate.

Guarding Against Business Blight

SUMMER dullness is more a fiction of the imagination than an inevitable fact. The wants and needs of men and women do not cease when summer comes.

The summer brings its own new demands—for clothing, food, beverages, enjoyments, and pleasures and comforts of many kinds.

The summer has its own activities and plans which call for the expenditure of money.

Money is spent just as freely in summer as at any other season. Advertisements of merchandise and service of every description are read in summer with undiminishing interest and responsiveness.

Those who find business dull in summer are those who relax their own efforts to maintain and develop business.

It rests with the business men of this community whether or not the so called "summer dullness" blights their businesses during June, July and August. Let them withdraw their public appeals—their newspaper advertising—to the buyers of this community, and the money which their customers and possible customers are spending or are ready to spent will be spent with others or else may not be spent at all.

You can obtain helpful advice on advertising free of cost and without obligation by consulting the Business Department of the "Examiner".

THE CANADIAN PEACE CENTENARY ASSOCIATION

The movement for celebrating the hundred years of peace between the British Empire and the United States is, judging by a circular just issued by the Canadian Peace Centenary Association, taking rapid hold in Canada, Great Britain and the United States.

The general proposals contain four main features: (1) Monuments and other memorials; (2) Thanksgiving services in the Churches; (3) Educational propaganda; (4) Festivities.

The Circular enumerates various suggestions regarding the erection of monuments and states that the matter has been referred to an International Committee.

February 14, 1915, has been selected for Thanksgiving services in all the Churches of the British Empire and the United States. This date is the nearest Sunday to February 17, 1915, the centenary of the ratification of the Treaty of Ghent.

The educational propaganda includes several important features, among which may be mentioned the preparation of a series of pamphlets dealing with the various treaties which have made the long peace possible, which it is intended to send to all the schools in Canada. Tableaux and masques are in course of preparation which will also be sent to the schools for production upon a date to be hereafter arranged. A somewhat unique proposal is that schools in Canada and the United States, in places bearing the same name, should be invited to exchange Shields. It is intended to arrange for the writing of competitive essays on Anglo-American reations and provision is being made for Provincial and Dominion prizes.

About 100 centres have been chosen for special celebrations in Canada, and strong local committees have been arranged for in a majority of these.

The circular also reports the progress made in Great Britain and the United States and contains replies received last Christmas from world rulers to a message sent in connection with the celebration by the American Committee.

The Dominion Government has arranged for an appropriation to meet the preliminary organization expenses. In announcing this the Rt. Hon. R. L. Borden said: "The cause which the Canadian Peace Centenary Association and the corresponding bodies in the United States and the United Kingdom have set before them is one with which we are warmly sympathetic. It is a triumph of humanity that during a century of rapid development, despite the existence of serious international differences and problems, the British Empire and the United States have found wiser and more humane methods of adjusting differences than the arbitration of war. We welcome the achievement of a century of peace, and hope that it will prove to be but the first century of peace, the forerunner of a long series stretching into the future as far as human anticipation can trust itself.

The list of members is a most representative one and contains the names of all the Lieutenant-Governors, all the Ministers of Education, and nearly all the Premiers in Canada. Among those prominent in this Province who have identified themselves with this movement may be mentioned:

The President of the Canadian Peace Centenary Association is Sir Edmund Walker of Toronto, and the Honorary Secretary, Major Hamilton.

Those desiring copies of the circular should address M. E. H. Scamell, Organizing Secretary, Hope Chambers, Ottawa.

MANY "IFS" IN EMPRESS ENQUIRY

"It was."

"And at the same time you ordered your engines ahead. Do you think that it is right?"

"Not at the same time."

Mr. Aspinall—"Well you said yesterday that it was a matter of practically seconds.

Capt. Anderson.

On the conclusion of the evidence of his chief officer, Capt. Anderson of the Storstad was called. He said his ship must have been going very slowly when she struck the Empress. With her weight at that time she would have gone nearly through the Empress if she had been travelling her usual speed of ten knots an hour. Captain Anderson told the story of what was done on his ship for the rescued after the collision. Mr. Aspinall, who is the lawyer for the Empress owners, admitted that the evidence indicated that the Storstad people had done all possible for the survivors after the accident.

Captain Anderson said the first thing he did when his chief officer called him to the bridge was to have his engines put astern.

Lord Mersey— "If that had been done before, the collision would not have occurred."

Capt. Anderson— "If anybody had expected the steamer to cross our bows it would have been done before." The witness said that if it had been done sooner there would have been no collision.

TWO SMALL FIRES WERE EXTINGUISHED

There were two fires yesterday afternoon, but neither of them gave the brigade much trouble to extinguish. As Fire Chief Howard is on his annual vacation just now, the Assistant Fire Chief is in charge of the Department, and the way he handled both small blazes yesterady showed that he is quite capable of the task which falls to his lot during the absence of the Chief.

The first fire was a chimney fire at the residence of Mrs. Mary Kelly at 210 Prince Street. The fire brigade answered the summons with their usual alacrity, and soon had the blaze extinguished. No damage was done.

The second fire broke out at the shed of Adam Hall, and was caused by sparks from the cupola. An alarm was rung in and the fire brigade had little difficulty in sending the blaze with the chemicals. No damage was done.

Following on the operation, however, her throat started to swell, and she died from septic poisoning, contracted from swallowing the halfpenny.

A desire for money to buy sweets was the cause of four boys making their appearance at Leith Juvenile Court when they were charged with having on two occasions entered a motor garage and cut up the lining of two motor cars and stolen 22 lbs. of hair padding, which they sold. The estimated damage was $40. The eldest of the boys, who is thirteen years of age, was sent to a reformatory.

At Glasgow Sheriff Thomson dismissed as irrelevant a charge against the Glasgow Dairy Company for failing to give an employee the weekly half-holiday. The employee in question was engaged selling milk from a cart in the streets. The sheriff held that the word "shop" did not include a vehicle on the street, and, consequently, a person who sold milk from a cart on the street could not be a "shop assistant."

While James T. Yuille, Craigmore, Rothesay, was sitting in his summer house some days ago he observed a white object drop on the lawn. He found it to be a new golf ball, dropped by a bird as it flew past. A day or two afterwards exactly the same thing happened, except that the ball turned out to be of a different make. What makes the occurrence still more unusual is that Mr. Yuille's house is not near the golf course.

Council in Committee

The County Council, which is meeting in the regular June session, is having a busy time threshing out everything in committee. They sat in committee all this morning and up to the time of going to press this afternoon, and no open session was held during that time at all. Consequently, although they are actively engaged, there is nothing to publish of their doings at the Court House.

manhood of this country. Can anyone deny these facts? Young men who were the pride and hope of their parents, who might have been an honour to this country, some of whom might have taken part even in the councils of the nation, have gone to the untimely grave of the drunkard.

Don't Make a Mistake.

Don't make any mistake at this election. Realizing the extent of this traffic, how are you going to deal with it. You are not concerned as to who is the best temperance man. You are not called upon to decide whether Mr. Soden is a stronger temperance man than Mr. Gillespie, or Mr. Gillespie a greater temperance man than Mr. Soden. Don't confuse this issue. If Mr. Soden tries to convince you that he is prepared to go farther on the temperance question (which he can't do) that is not the issue.

Your question is—do you want to abolish the bar? Do you wish to cut off the liquor traffic. When you have concluded that you should do so, the next question is—how is it to be done? There are only two ways of answering that question. First there is the Whitney administration. It is not promised by Mr. Soden nor anyone else that the Whitney Government will abolish the bar. Sir James has said send me the men and I will give the measure.

How is he going to know he has the men when there is not a temperance plank in his platform. Only two or three Conservative candidates have pledged themselves on this issue. You can't consistently demand of the Conservative party the abolition of the liquor traffic.

Rowell Is Clear.

On the other hand Mr. Rowell stands out firmly and promises his first step will be towards the abolition of the bars and clubs, and also the provision of legislation to abolish shops by local option with a simple majority.

Clergy Present.

Just as Mr. O'Connell finished speaking, an automobile arrived with Rev. R. Pogue and Rev. C. E. Cragg. They were returning from Selwyn, where they had participated in a temperance meeting at which the attendance was eighty-five. Asked by Chairman John Telford to speak to the Bridgenorth men, Rev. Mr. Pogue said that four of those who had spoken at Selwyn pleading for the abolition of the bar were strong Conservative temperance workers. That's only what is taking place all over the country. It took very little away back in the days of the Ross Government to wipe it out, and any number of Liberals who felt that a square deal had not been given voted against the Government. There was an unexpected slide over the reciprocity question. A few votes here and there were responsible. Scores of Conservatives have decided to leave their party for the present on the temperance question.

Reference to Mr. Soden.

I was one of the first to whom Mr. Soden stated that he had made up his mind to run in this election. The second time he mentioned the subject he was flatfooted, as they say, for temperance. The third time he mentioned it he said some frinds advised him that it would be better if he kept the temperance issue a little in the background until he was sure of the nomination. Afterwards he could come out and announce it.

He told me he sent for or went to see Mr. Gillespie and they had agreed to drop the temperance issue as they were both in favour of it. No man was sorrier than I when Mr. Soden refused to sign the statement submitted by the Temperance Association. I talked to him earnestly and told him of my disappointment.

Men, if you want to vote the temperance ticket that means something, vote for Mr. Gillespie.

Rev. Chas. E. Cragg.

"I feel very much out of place," Mr. Cragg remarked in response to an invitation to speak. "This is the first time I have ever spoken from a political platform. But I feel that in this issue we have to deal with a question that is larger than party. We have to deal with higher and larger interests of the people generally. I have wished for temperance legislation without politics, but it is impossible. It must come through a political party. Rowell has declared to us that he will give us what we ask. It is then our duty we who have prayed for temperance measures, to support him. That is why I am here. I am glad because the church has spoken so strongly on this issue.

Rev. Mr. Cragg referred to the recent incident in Toronto when Rev. Dr. Rankin, who never cast a Liberal vote, told Hon. Thos. Crawford, a member of his congregation, but a candidate opposed to Rowell, that he could not support him. On account of the moral aspect of the issue Rev. Mr. Cragg said he felt any minister was warranted in taking a part in this campaign.

PETES WIN THRILLING FIFTEEN INNINGS BATTLE FROM HAMS BY 6 RUNS TO 4

Bob Sterling Went the Whole Route for the Blount Aggregation and Pitched His Best Game of the Season--Two Runs After Six Extra Innings Gave Petes the Decision

HAMILTON, Ont., June 16.—Curley Blount and his tailenders made it two in a row from the Hamilton Athletics here this afternoon, to-day's encounter going fifteen innings before the visitors finally got a six to four decision. It was a nip and tuck struggle throughout with the Petes proving that they had the punch by hitting Dougherty for a pair of hits in the final inning and winding up the proceedings. Gorman, The Petes' first-baseman, tried hard to hand the Athletics the game in the ninth innings by a bonehead play of Gilhooly's infield hit, but the locals failed to take advantage of the opportunity, and were eventually subdued. Bob Sterling went the full route for the visitors and pitched fine ball, especially in the pinches. He was ably supported, excepting a few cases, and while the erros behind him came at critical moments, his team-mates generally managed to pull out unharmed. Frank Dolan started for Hamilton, but was yanked in the ninth to allow Heffner to hit for him. Dougherty, who heaved Monday's game, was then sent in and pitched the last six innings. He pitched good ball, but the strain of 15 innings in two days proved too much, and he weakened in the fifteenth innings. Catches by Corns, Dudley, White and Blount featured the long drawn out affair, along with five double plays, three of them being made by the Petes.

WHAT HOUR DO YOU WANT GAMES TO START? FANS ASKED TO VOTE

For some time the directors of the Peterborough Ball Club have been debating the question as to the most popular hour for commencing local ball games. So far this season, as in the last two summers, week-day games have been started at 3.45 o'clock. This season the suggestion has been made that a later hour would enable more fans to see the game. The ball club directorate is anxious to meet the wishes of the fans and has therefore decided to hold a voting contest. On this page appears a ocupon. Fans are asked to mark an X opposite the hour at which they want the games to start and send the coupon to Jas. Lynch, druggist, Hunter Street. The coupons will appear again Thursday, and the result will be announced on Friday.

BASEBALL

At the Monday evening meeting of the Junior Church League baseball executive, the following points were decided upon:

1. The protested games—(1) Charlotte vs. Knox; (2) George Street vs. St. Andrew's will be replayed on convenient dates.

2. The official Church League umpire has the authority to prolong a game beyond five innings with the consent of both Captains.

3. Evening games start promptly at 6.30; provided that five players of each team be present.

4. No boy shall be allowed to play as substitute who has played in a Senior Church League.

5. No absent player may be substituted by a junior member of another Sunday School.

Good old 'Buck' Freeman, the only and original fence-buster, who led the world in homewallops not over a hundred years agone, looked anything but natural at the Island yesterday, when he strode out in a little suit of blue. There were a number of fans in the stand who retained vivid recollections of the times when he drove many pitchers to despair by pickling the ball in the brine, and they gave the veteran a cordial greeting. "Buck" is as lively as of yore, the passing years having dealt very lightly with the erstwhile doughty club-swinger. Freeman not only led the old Eastern League in circuit clouts, but also the National and American. He played actively until two years ago.

Four players who acquired their early knowledge of baseball on local sand lots were seen in action yesterday at the Island. "Eddie" Taylor, who some years ago played in the Toronto City League, held down second base and right field for Brantford, and played nice ball. He is a pitcher by trade, but is a useful man anywhere. Auld, also a graduate of the local senior league, was in the box for the Beavers, and Graham, from the Don Valley League, "warmed up" with him. These two youngsters would not look out of place in a Leaf uniform. Charlie Isaacs, who three years ago was a bat boy for the Park Nine, pulled off some nice fielding stunts at third and made a tidy hit. All four performers are fast enough for any company.

NOTES.

Some game to win.

Bob Sterling evidently had control yesterday. Three passes in fifteen innings is steady pitching.

King handled twelve chances at second base without an error. Since he has ben shifted back to his right position at the keystone station, he has accepted forty-five chances with ony one boot.

Jimmy Gorman made his first miscue in several weeks, yesterday.

Blount had eight fielding chances yesterday, seven put outs and an assist.

Frank Fox lead the Peterborough hitters with three safeties in five times up, his assortment consisting of a single, double and triple.

Two defeats in two days for Patsy Dougherty.

Joe Byrne had three hits in seven appearances at the plate.

The Petes finish with Hamilton today and open a three-game series with Brantford to-morrow.

Long-distance games such as yesterday's, bring your batting averages down when you are not hitting. Blount was up six times and Gorman seven, yesterday, without a safety.

The Petes are blessed with a pair of catchers that can hit. Kelly has been stinging the ball hard and consistenlyand Miller has been going at a.300 clip this week.

The League's two leading pitchers, Urban Stockton of Ottawa, and Boo by Heck of London, were both beaten yesterday.

The Saints are going at a great clip. They have taken two out of three from the Senators in the present series.

Bob Sterling's record is now three wins and six losses. He has won three of his last four games.

The Canadian League race closing up. Only 2 1-2 games separate the Petes in the cellar from the Hams in fourth position. With that protested game in Toronto deducted, the Petes are only a game behind Toronto, a game and a half behind Brantford and two and one half behind St. Thomas and Hamilton.

WAGER WAS VERY NICE TO ROYAL PARTY

Treated the Duke of Connaught Very Affably During Ball Game

The following from the Ottawa Free Press will be read with interest, none the less keen on account of the fact that Wager happens to be a catcher and not a box artist:

Canada's Governor-General saw game of baseball in Ottawa the other day. It was Canadian league Class B baseball, and rather better than the Montreal club could show him. The Royal party had for guide one Malcolm Bryce, who is manager of the Ottawa team, and on the side edits the Free Press sporting page, helps to run a lacrosse league or two, arranges bowling tourneys, holds a clock at the local race track and plays a little golf and pea pool. All this is only on the side, however. With Malcolm the Ottawa ball team is the leading issue.

The Royal auto was given a position of vantage in front of the seventy-five cent section. While the players were "warming up" before the commencement of the game, His Royal Highness expressed some curiosity as to the size and weight of the ball. Manager Bryce immediately called out to "Old Man" Wager to bring the ball in. "Old Man" is one of the Ottawa team's pitching staff, and makes use of what is familiarly known to baseball fans as a "spitter," a ball which is moistened by the pitcher before it is thrown in order to make it curve. A pitcher who employs the "spitter" requires a ready store of both good judgment and saliva. Wager had just made certain of being able to give the ball plenty of personal attention during the game by taking a big mouthful of eating tobacco. The ball was not a thing of beauty. Fact is, it was rather the reverse. But "Old Man" was not embarrassed. He ambled over to the Royal auto, held the stained and gritty sphere up in plain view, smiled in a cheery, friendly way, and remarked in pure, well-modulated Basebalese:

"Some pill, eh, Dook?"

Right there "Old Man" Wager made what his team mates would call a "boneheaded" play. He evidently got his signals crossed. According to Royal etiquette, which is not referred to in the Baseball Guide, and therefore is unknown to Wager, he should have done this: After carefully polishing the ball on his shirt, he should have advanced to within a few paces of the Royal party, bowed gracefully, then handed the ball to the first assistant aide-de-camp, who would have passed it to the second assistant secretary, who would have passed it along to the next official in rank, until it ultimately reached the hand of His Highness. Then, had the Duke addressed him, he should have murmured "Yes, Your Highness—No, Your Highness," and so on. Had the Duke not addressed him, he should have remained standing as respectful and as silent as a cigar store Indian until dismissed.

One in Many Thousands.

That is what "Old Man" Wager should have done, and had he done it the Duke most probably would have been very bored. As it was, he returned the friendly smile, examined the ball, asked a few questions and, with a courteous nod intimated to "Old Man" that he was at liberty to return to his warming up and his method of securing saliva.

Wager did not neglect the proprieties through any wish to show disrespect for the official representative of his adopted sovereign—for Wager, I understand, is a Canadian only when playing in the Canadian league. A democratic sort of person, with a friendly feeling toward all men, except, perhaps, baseball umpires, is Wager. He is perfectly well satisfied with his present status in society. If it were his choose between a bid to a Government House luncheon and a plate of beans, "Old Man" would take the beans. Talking to Royalty gives him no more thrill than talking to an umpire. He is not the least bit ambitious socially. In this respect he differs from 134,999 people in Ottawa. The population of Ottawa is 135,000.

"Full Of Pep" Says Herald "Lifeless" Crabs Spectator But We Won Anyway

There is a funny contrast between the comments of the Hamilton Herald and the Hamilton Spectator on Monday's game. Bobby Robinson is evidently suffering from a bad attack of indigestion. Any way we always liked the Herald. Here is what they say:

Hamilton Spectator—

The Petes uncorked a little speed on the paths and had the edge on the day's work, but at no time shaped up like a crowd that would start any excitement, their work being done in a lifeless, mechanical way that easily explains their position in the league race.

The Petes shaped up like a very listless aggregation and the spirit or rather lack of it, seemed to be catching, for the game was absolutely lacking in interest. Second division, and last place, at that, appears to be the limit for the Lift Lock crowd as they are at present. They are lacking in all the good qualities which marked the play of the other clubs to visit here this season.

Hamilton Herald—

If that old "pep" alone would win pennants, Peterborough would soon be so far out in front that there'd be no use of finishin out the schedule. There is considerable life bottled up in Curley Blount's outfit.

While Peterborough apparently has a second-division cub by virtue of its present position, the performance shown by Curly Blount's cohorts on their first appearance here was worthy of victory. They dispayed more of that necessary "pep" than any club seen here this year, and this spirit makes them a shifty looking club.

Just how they act when the game is going against them may be learned to-day, but they certainly shewed plenty of fight in their opening appearance before Hamilton fanfolk.

Fox, the Peterborough shortstop, owns a grand arm. His pegs to first were as good as anything seen this season.—Spectator.

Curly Blount has plenty of speed. He stole two bases, one of them being a clean pilfer of third. Fisher had the ball down to Baldwin in time to tag the Petes' manager but he slid under the local third baseman.

TWENTY-FIVE PLAYERS OUT BIG GAME FRIDAY

There were about twenty-five lacrosse players out at practice last night and a splendid work-out resulted. The team should be in good condition for Friday's game at Riverside Park with Havelock. This game will commence at 4.45 and should be finished at 6 o'clock, allowing plenty of time to get home for supper. There will be another practice to-night and everything looks promising for future games. George Hardy, a new defence candidate, showed decided class. He is a nice stick handler and knows the game. Larry Tracey looked decidedly good and would be a big asset to the team. Fred Kelly was going nicely on the home end the team only needs a little more finish to their system and they will surprise some of the natives

BASEBALL

To-morrow there will be a baseball practice at Nicholls Oval at 6.30 for the Y.M.C.A. seniors and a large turnout is requested.

WEDDING BELLS

SMITH—ROSE.

At the George Street Parsonage, this afternoon, a quiet wedding took place, at 2 o'clock, when Miss Mildred Rose, of this City, was united in marriage to Mr. Hugh Smith, also of Peterborough. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. R. G. Peever of the George Street Church, and after the ceremony the happy couple will leave for a wedding trip, and on their return will reside in Peterborough.

JONES—LIGHTFOOT.

An exceedingly pretty but quietly celebrated wedding took place this afternoon at 2 o'clock, at the residence of the bride's brother-in-law Mr. W. H. Collier, 405 Walton Street, when Miss Minerva Kathleen Lightfoot, daughter of Mrs. John Lightfoot of Peterborough, was united in marriage to Mr. Ellis Henry Jones of St. Catharines, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry R. Jones of Stamford, Conn.

The bride, who looked unusually charming, in a beautiful gown of Duchess satin, and shadow lace, en train, generously trimmed with pearls, was given away by her brother-in-law, Mr. W. H. Collier. She carried a shower bouquet of roses and lilies of the valley. She was attended by Miss Mayme Montgomery, who wore a gown of pink silk crepe, with an overdress of shadow lace, and a pretty lace cap of pink, trimmed with rosebuds. She carried a bouquet of sweet peas.

The wedding music was played by Miss Florence Corcoran of this City, who wore a becoming dress of white crepe silk, with touches of blue, and a blue lace cap with pink rose buds. During the signing of the register Miss Ethel Winslow sang "Because" in beautiful voice. She wore an attractive gown of rice cloth, with touches of pink.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. R. J. Williams of Wales, Wis. The groomsman was Mr. Brayton Jones of Stamford, Conn., brother of the groom.

Mr and Mrs Jones left this afternoon for Montreal, Boston, New York Stamford and other points on a wedding trip. On their return they will reside in St Catharines. The bride's going-away dress was of blue silk, and she wore a white picture hat.

Among the numerous wedding gifts was a cabinet of silver from the employees of the Yale and Towne Co., St. Catharines, of which the groom is Superintendent. There were present at the ceremony only relatives and a few immediate friends of the bride and out-of-town guests were present from Wales, Wis., Stamford, Aurora, Buffalo and Toronto.

COURTNEY—TOOLE.

At 2 p.m. on Wednesday, June 10 at the Methodist Church, Omemee was the scene of a pretty wedding when Myrtle Luella Emma, only daughter of the late Robert C. Toole and Mrs. Toole, Omemee, was married by the Rev. J. F. Chapman to Mr. William Alvie Courtney, son of Mr and Mrs. Jas. Courtney, of Emily.

The bride was given away by her brother, Mr. Alfred Toole, of Trenton, and wore cream duchess satin with corsage and tunic of lace, trimmed with pearls. The wedding veil was arranged in Juliet cap, with orange blossoms.

Miss Hilda Toole, cousin of the bride, in blue and white striped silk and blue hat, attended the bride, and Mr. Errol Woodruff performed the duties of groomsman.

After the ceremony the bride's mother held a reception at her home, King Street, which was attended by about fifty guests.

The happy young couple left on the 6 o'clock train for Hartford, Conn., and other points in the United States, the bride travelling in a white serge suit and panama hat.

The groom's gift to the bride was a pendant of pearls and emeralds, and to the bridesmaid a cameo brooch, while the groomsman received gold cuff links.

Orchard And Garden Notes

J. S. P., Lincoln Co., Ont.

I do not consider pruning as important an operation as it is usually supposed to be. I know that many growers consider that pruning decides the amount of growth, that it can control the fruit and everything else in connection with the orchard. My own theory is that the more pruning we do the more injury we do.

Let us look at it in this way. The foliage of the tree is the manufacturer of raw material into plant food. Hence the tree must have plenty of foliage if it is to manufacture the food necessary for new growth and a good crop of apples. Particularly is this true of young trees making rapid growth. In the case of a young orchard all the pruning that I would do would be merely to shape the head according to the type of tree that we want to grow. In taking off branches I would prefer to cut them off when they are small, rather than wait for an annual pruning. Prune when the knife is sharp, is a very good rule, and I always plan to have mine sharp. I don't believe in butchering the orchard, as some growers do, and I believe that the best growers are coming around to this point of view.

Alice A. Ferguson, York Co., Ont.

Celery has rightfully won first place as a delectable table vegetable. Its culture is comparatively easy. While it luxuriates on black, loamy soil—which we rarely have in gardens—it will grow in almost any soil, provided food and water is supplied, and these are necessary to insure quick, robust growth and crisp, nutty flavor.

I prefer to grow my own plants for while the tiny seeds are slow to germinate, when once they get a good start the plants grow rapidly, and they are so full of vitality that thrist alone will kill them. I then have plants by the score or even hundreds, instead of dozens. Choose an early variety—white plume, or autumn celery, which keeps well the greater part of the winter, and a winter kind, which gives you celery nearly the whole year round.

STARTING THE SEEDS

The seeds should be started in the house in March or even in late April, in hot beds. I find that the hot bed planted catch up to the earlier sown plants. These should be transplanted into flats or cold frames, but as my time for gardening is squeezed in, just when I can get it I do not transplant my plants, except into the open trench, and I write this for the benefit of other busy people. It is now too late for celery from seed for this year but plants all ready to be set in the trench can be bought at any green house.

I prepare the trench as early as I can, usually after the garden is planted, early in May. I dig the trench the depth of the spade, and rather wider. Into this I place plenty of food — good manure. Cover with earth and conserve the strength, and the trench is fairly well filled again. If I can obtain good loamy soil I add it to the other, and give the tender seedlings a soft earthy bed.

WHEN TO TRANSPLANT

Transplant in June after a shower, or should rain not come at your convenience, soak the ground well before putting in the plants. Plant their roots in mud; plant four to six inches apart; press oil firmly around roots. If weather is cloudy and moist they will not require covering, but if the sun's heat is strong, cover with boards set on blocks over the rows, till the roots have taken hold. Water daily. To insure stocky plants, trim roots and clip off top of plants, but if this is the first transplanting you cannot do this, but later, I trim off the tops and use the green stalks in soup.

Stir the earth frequently around the roots, and as the plants grow, bank the earth higher and higher around them, holding the plant together with one hand so that the earth does not get between the stalks. The plant grows from the heart outwards, so do not cover the crown, but as the plants grow rapidly keep the earth banked around them. Frequent watering and stirring of the earth and banking, will insure quick growth.

PREPARATIONS FOR HARVESTING

For early varieties bleach between boards, staked closely at each side of the rows to exclude sunlight. White Plume should be ready in August, and by the time it is at its best, the later variety will be nearly ready. The first frosts do not injure celery, but it should not be frozen through.

When digging for winter packing, take in considerable earth which adheres to the roots, pack in more earth on the cellar floor. I arrange a shallow trench in the earth on the floor; fill with a row of celery, water the roots well, and pack earth around them tightly, then another row treated similarly, till I have a forest of green in my celery corner. And it is a favorite corner, too. The table is supplied with the crisp, succulent appetizer, while soups and salads owe their flavor to this delicious vegetable.

Lillian G. Crummy, Leeds Co., Ont.

Many people wonder why they have no success in raising rhubarb. They have none fit for use until perhaps late in May or early in June, whereas it should be one of the earliest spring luxuries.

They do not know that rhubarb needs attention and cultivation as much as any of our garden stuffs. I have often seen a few bunches set in the fence corner or in a remote corner of the back yard with sod up to the roots. It is treated like some hardy perennial, and in time this rhubarb becomes unfit for use and finally dies out.

We have success in growing rhubarb and have it fit for use in April, although we never force it as some do. But we have it in a sheltered and sunny spot in the garden, where it is well cultivated and enriched by plenty of fertiliser; one can scarcely apply too much. Then too the roots should be separated in the fall as if done in spring the early crop is lost. If many roots are left together the stalks grow up as a spindle and never mature properly. It should be planted in a straight row in the garden so the cultivator can be used.

To sum it all up in a few words, the secret of rhubarb success is, in strong healthy clumps, and liberal annual (fall) dressings of well-rotted stable manure.

—Farm and Dairy.

The Sheffield education committee decided to instruct the school management committee "to take such action as would ensure that scholars were taught an elementary principle of citizenship—the duty of keeping to the right on public footpaths." Councillor S. G. Harrison said Sheffield was very much behind other cities in regard to footpath civility, but it was a case of errors through ignorance.

Bennet Burleigh is Dead.

LONDON, June 18.—The death occurred yesterday of Bennet Burleigh, oldest and most widely known of war correspondents. A Scotsman, born in Glasgow nearly seventy years ago, he early followed the drum, for he joined the ranks of the Confederates in the Civil War and fought through the entire campaign, being twice captured and sentenced to death by the Northern troops.

Later he turned to newspaper work and reported a number of campaigns for a news agency. In 1882 he began the connection with The London Daily Telegraph, which lasted till his death.

Lumbermen Testify to Campaign Collection in N.B.

ONE FIRM GAVE UP $15,000

ST. JOHN, N.B., June 18. — The hearing of the charges brought by L. A. Dugal, M.P.P., against Premier Flemming of New Brunswick, that the latter exacted toll of lumbermen for campaign funds was continued yesterday. The witnesses brought by Mr. Dugal were lumbermen who testified to having made contributions upon the request of W. H. Berry, a civil servant who made a round of them.

J. B. Snowball, trustee for Lawrence MacLaren said he had paid $7,200 after July 10, the date on which timber lands were classified. This, declared counsel for Premier Flemming, ruled it out of the scope of the hearing, but the commission permitted the evidence. The court expressed the view that such testimony would not affect Mr. Flemming unless it was shown that he directed Berry to make the levy or assented to the transactions subsequently.

The payment of $4,500 by the Miramichi Lumber Co. to J. W. Brankley for a political fund was described at yesterday morning's session.

Angus McLean, manager of the Bathurst Lumber Co., told of interviews with Premier Flemming respecting the renewal of his own leases, and said that Mr. Flemming had stated that nothing could be done until the whole matter of leases generally was settled. He was going to employ Mr. Berry to work it out. No one else but Berry, however, had come to witness about payments. The Bathurst Company paid in $10,000.

Allan Ritchie, in describing a payment of $4,500 into Brankley's office, said he was told to take it there by Berry and put it on the table.

Evidence was given indicating that the lumbermen interested held a meeting to discuss whether or not they would yield to Berry's demands. At that meeting it was decided to do so.

The Dominion Pulp Co. paid in $4,500 and the Sinclair Lumber Co. $3,000.

Made Huerta Angry.

VERA CRUZ, June 18. — British subjects who arrived here from Mexico City yesterday report a recent clash between Provisional President Huerta and Sir Lionel Carden, the British Minister.

The dispute arose out of the advice volunteered by Sir Lionel that the President should resign and leave the country immediately. The British Minister also offered Huerta a British safe conduct and a warship to take him away to any port he might name, together with his family.

Huerta is said to have threatened to arrest Sir Lionel if he ever repeated the proposal.

City's Fate In Doubt.

DURAZZO, June 18.—The fate of Durazzo is still in doubt. The Mussulman insurgents returned to the attack on the city yesterday and were repulsed, but loyal troops sent against the insurgents on one of the outlying hills were completely defeated after fierce fighting.

NOTHING LIKE IT FOR COLDS

Mrs Holland Ferguson, Sheffield, N.B., writes: Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine has cured my children and myself of severe colds. We are never without it in the house. There is nothing like it for colds and throat trouble, and it is so soothing and pleasant to take, my children would drink a whole bottle if they were permitted."

BIG LINER DAMAGED

Grain Steamer Collides With Kaiser Wilhelm II.

SAVED BY THE BULKHEADS

SOUTHAMPTON, Eng., June 18.—The North German Lloyd steamer Kaiser Wilhelm II., which left Southampton shortly after noon yesterday, bound for New York with 1,800 passengers and a crew of 640, lies at anchor off Netley, three miles to the southeast, with a big hole in her side amidships, caused by a collision with the Liverpool grain steamer Incemore, bound from a Black Sea port for Antwerp.

The Incemore, a smaller craft than the German steamer, of 2,000 odd tons, is in dock here with her bows badly smashed.

The collision occurred in the English Channel, 13 miles south of the Nabe lightship, in a dense fog. Just how it occurred and on which vessel lies the responsibility cannot be ascertained at the present time. The officers of the Kaiser Wilhelm II. have permitted no communication to be held with anyone on board, and they themselves have refused to give out any information whatever. Such scant details as have been obtained came from the Incemore. That vessel, it is stated by those aboard had virtually come to a stop because of the danger continuing under way in such a thick fog, when suddenly there loomed up just ahead of her the huge bulk of the Kaiser Wilhelm.

Both captains did their best to avert a collision, but the short distance separating the two vessels rendered their efforts ineffectual, and the Incemore struck the liner on the starboard side amidships. The force of the impact crumpled up her own and tore a big gap in the Kaiser Wilhelm's side. It was the impression of those aboard the Incemore that the hole was entirely above the water line.

The two steamers stood by each other until it was ascertained that neither needed immediate assistance; then both started slowly for Southampton.

The forepeak of the Incemore rapidly filled with water, but the stout bulkhead confined it there and, although so much down by the bows that the propeller was half out of the water, she managed to crawl into port. There it was found that the damage to the bows extended for a length of twelve feet and a width of ten feet.

Saved By Bulkheads.

LONDON, June 18.—The London office of the North-German Lloyd Steamship Co. made the following statement last night regarding the collision:

"The Kaiser Wilhelm II. was run into a 2.30 o'clock this afternoon by the steamer Incemore in a dense fog, ten miles southeast of St. Catharines Point. The Incemore rammed the Kaiser Wilhelm at right angles and scraped along for some distance, but the watertight doors in the bulkheads kept back the water, which leaked into one compartment. Directly the fog came on Capt. Dahl had closed his watertight doors, to be ready for any contingency.

To Test New Device.

LONDON, June 18.—An interesting experiment in navigation in the fog will be carried out by the Canadian Northern steamer Royal George, which left Avonmouth yesterday for Quebec. She is fitted with an apparatus enabling a vessel in the thickest weather, without the aid of compass or sextant, to ascertain her position, when she is within a radius of fifty miles of a fixed wireless station or a wireless-fitted ship whose position is known.

PROBING OCEAN RATES.

Enquiry Preliminary To Big Investigation Is Begun.

OTTAWA, June 18. — Announcement was made by Hon. Geo. E. Foster yesterday that the Department of Trade and Commerce had started an inquiry into the ocean freight rates question, and particularly the complaints of the Dominion millers that flour is being discriminated against as compared with wheat rates.

This investigation is preliminary to the fuller inquiry which will be undertaken by the Dominion Royal Commission when it tours Canada this summer. The information which has been secured by the Department will be placed at the disposal of the commission in order to facilitate their work.

Youthful, Wrinkleless Skin Easy to Have

You who desire to regain a youthful appearance will do well to make the acquaintance of the two simple, but valuable, prescriptions here given.

To make an effective wrinkle remover, mix an ounce of powdered saxolite and a half pint witch hazel. Bathe the face in the solution—immediately every wrinkle is affected. It acts wonderfully on sagging facial muscles, also the lotion has amazing remarkable astringent and tonic properties.

To get rid of an aged, faded, freckled or discoloured complexion, buy an ounce of common mercolized wax at any drug store and apply nightly as you would cold cream, erasing this mornings with soap and water. This will slowly absorb the undesirable surface skin, revealing the younger, brighter, healthier skin underneath. There's nothing to equal this treatment as a facial rejuvenator.

MANIFESTO

THE ONTARIO ELECTIONS AND TEMPERANCE REFORM

The following manifesto has been issued in the name of the Methodist Church of Ontario, by Dr. Carman, General Superintendent, and T. Albert Moore, General Secretary, of Temperance and Moral Reform:

To the Methodist People in Ontario:

The Ontario group of the Department of Temperance and Moral Reform of the Methodist Church, realizing the importance of the present provincial political campaign to the great temperance reform, and through it to every phase of social service, would urge upon you the following considerations:

1. The Methodist Church and Temperance.

The attitude of the Methodist Church towards the liquor traffic has always been relentless opposition. We have never compromised with the traffic in strong drink. We have ever been determinedly aggressive in the unceasing struggle to destroy this enemy of the health, happiness, homes and hopes of the people. Our readiness to participate in this great reform is demonstrated in our resolutions in General and Annual Conferences and other Church courts, and our hearty co-operation in every community with those who labour for the cleansing of our statutes of courts, and our hearty co-operation in every community every legal sanction of a traffic which knows no law, nor holds sacred any fireside, nor any age, nor sex, and is the principal cause of crime, the occasion of much poverty, suffering and sorrow, and the greatest factor in much of the degradation of humanity and destruction of our race.

2. The Issue is Upon Us.

The present attitude of industry, commerce and society is largely favourable towards total abstinence. This attitude demands advanced legislation to eoctually curtail the operations and remedy the evils of the liquor traffic. We helped to produce this attitude. It is our unquestioned responsibility to stand unfalteringly upon our well-known principles, and put forth every possible effort to secure the nomination of candidates known to favour and support prohibition, and to use our votes as a solemn trust to elect such candidates.

3. The Opportunity is Upon Us.

We are in the midst of a Provincial election. The first place in the campaign has been given to the cause of temperance. Other issues are important, but the dominant note is: (1) The abolition of the bar, including therein the abolition of all hotel and club licenses, and therewith the treating system; (2) The enactment of such other restrictions upon the residue of the traffic as will limit its operations and remedy its evils; (3) The removal of the three-fifths clause from the local option laws of the province, and the use of that law for the removal of all shop licenses which may exist in any municipality. It is our conviction, in view of our persistent purpose to secure the prohibition of all legislation favouring the traffic in strong drink, that it is our duty as citizens and as Christians to do our utmost to secure the nomination and election of members of the Legislature from every constituency, who will in the Legislature fairly represent us in regard to these issues which are of such supreme importance.

4. The Responsibility is Upon Us.

With great earnestness, we urge all our people to stand loyally by these principles, preferring them to political partizanship, and in every possible way to use their influence to elect as members of the Legislature those candidates who, regardless of party affiliations, will undertake, if elected, to introduce and support such legislation. This is the more important because we are to a large extent responsible for this movement to abolish the bar. In 1902, subsequent to the referendum, we united with others in urging upon the government of that day the enactment of a law for "The abolition of the public bar, the treating system, and drinking in clubs, and the imposition of such other restrictions on the liquor traffic as shall most effectually curtail its operations and remedy its evils." Our Church Courts, our pulpits, press and platform have many times endorsed this declaration. We must support this policy to consistently meet our responsibility.

5. Let Us Act Strongly and Unitedly, Now!

Believing there is no other issue of such importance before the people in this election, and in view of the increasing anxiety of the leaders in commerce, industry, and society to destroy this greatest menace to the prosperity, happiness and comfort of the people, we earnestly urge all our people to united and strong-hearted effort in every possible way to secure the election of such representatives as will secure for us the most advanced temperance legislation that may be within the jurisdiction of the Legislature.

Let us fight as independently and earnestly for our principles, as the liquor interests will fight for their licenses, and the next Legislature will surely "Abolish the Bar-Room."

Signed on behalf of the Ontario Group of the Department of Temperance and Moral Reform.

A. CARMAN, Chairman.
General Superintendent.
T. ALBERT MOORE, Secretary.
General Secretary of Temperance and Moral Reform.

How You Can Have a Clear, Hairless Skin

(Boudoir Secrets)

Here is an inexpensive and time-saving hair remover every woman should keep handy, for with it the skin can be kept entirely free from hair or fuzz: Get a small original package of powdered delatone and when hairy growths appear make a paste with a little of the powder and some water. Apply, and after two or three minutes rub off and the hairs will have vanished. The skin should then be washed to free it from the remaining delatone. This is quite harmless, but be certain you get delatone.

CONFUSION GROWS

Evidence at Enquiry Throws Little Light on Wreck.

STORSTAD SLOW REVERSING

QUEBEC, June 18.—Out of a welter of testimony that threw very little fresh light on the loss of the Empress of Ireland, which sank off Father Point after a collision with the collier Storstad on May 29, the Dominion commission enquiring into it yesterday managed to extract a few new points, which only serve to make the confusion worse.

At the morning session Butler Aspinall, K.C., acting for the C. P. R., extracted an opinion from Chief Officer Tuftenes of the collier, that, according to a diagram that had been drawn of the respective positions of the ships when they saw one another just before the collision in the fog, he thought the Empress, which was traveling fast, should have cleared the Storstad. Mr. Aspinall tried to prove by this the C. P. R. claim that the liner was standing still, otherwise she would have passed across the Storstad's bows, but the witness clung fast to his contention that the Empress was moving. Later, Mr. Aspinall sought to show that because the collier rammed herself straight into the liner for 12 feet, the Storstad must have been going at a high rate of speed, while the liner was stationary, because if the coal boat was going slow the only other way this could have been accomplished would have been by the Empress approaching her like a crab, and that was ridiculous.

To substantiate the theory of the Storstad officers that the collier struck the Empress a glancing blow as she rushed across her bows, Mr. Tuftenes contradicted Capt. Kendall's claim that the boilers were pierced, as shown by the sheet of flame that poured out at the collision.

The witness said he only saw friction sparks, while there was no rebounding of the Storstad, as sworn to by Capt. Kendall, only a slight jar being felt.

Capt. Andersen of the Storstad dealt a heavy blow to Mr. Aspinall's theory that the 12 feet penetration of the collier's nose indicated that her speed supplied the striking power, by saying that, loaded as his vessel was she would have gone clear through the Empress, traveling at ten knots.

From the comments made by Lord Mersey, the fact that Mr. Tuftenes, who was in charge of the Storstad just prior to the accident, did not call Capt. Andersen directly he saw the fog coming, in accordance with his instructions, assumed a grave aspect, though Capt. Andersen while agreeing that he should have been called earlier, said it would have made no difference, as his reversal of his engines directly he came on deck was only due to the appearance of the Empress, which was not expected. Lord Mersey pointed out that had the Storstad's engines been reversed earlier the calamity would not have occurred.

Edward Jones, first officer of the Empress of Ireland, who was on the bridge when the collision happened, told much the same story as did Capt. Kendall. He claimed the Empress was stopped and the collier moving, and C. S. Haight, acting for the Storstad owners, tried to indicate by his cross-examination of this witness that the Empress' master had disobeyed the navigation rules by stopping in the fog when the regulations required him only to go slow and under the other ship's stern after ascertaining the position of the Storstad. The confusion over the whistles—that is as far as the stories of the two sides are concerned — was only heightened by Mr. Jones, Mr. Haight claiming that misleading signals were given. Lord Mersey pointed out that the officers of the Empress seemed to have followed the rules in this connection.

"THE TERMS OF SURRENDER"

By Louis Tracy

So Power, in self defence, took to artifice. He discovered that they possessed two kegs of gunpowder, but owned no guns. He learned, too, that once there had been three kegs, but a careless experiment with one had removed a chief and his family. With some difficulty, and only by tickling their imagination by promising an exhibition of magic, he obtained some of the powder, and, on a dark night, electrified the community by a display of fireworks. Catharine wheels and Roman candles achieved wonders among the foothills of the Andes. From that instant his supremacy was established. A squib or two enforced edicts; a rocket set a constitution squarely on its feet. In less than three years he had become the Indians' trusted guide and teacher. The day came when the store of powder was almost gone; yet he was strong enough to prohibit the manufacture of that season's supply of chi-chi.

But there was one thing he could not do. He could not calm those wild people's frenzy when a hunting party came in hot haste from the plains and announced that a cavalcade of white men was forcing a passage along the river being evidently bent on penetrating the valley of the apple-trees.

Power was asked to repel this invasion by black art: failing which, the Araucanians decided to massacre the explorers in a neighbouring canyon. He had not the least doubt as to the success of the scheme. He knew the natural difficulties of the place. The upper end could be barricaded, the lower blocked by spearmen hidden in the dense vegetation, and every intruder caught in the trap would be battered to death boulders flung from the crests of opposing precipices.

Very reluctantly the Indians allowed him to act as their ambassador. By sheer force of will he bore down opposition, and was taken to a point whence the smoke of campfires was visible above the trees. It was hard to say whether the faith his friends placed in him was stronger than their fear and loathing of the white strangers; but he exacted a promise that, if he persuaded the members of the expedition to retreat, they would not be molested. Oddly enough, neither he nor the Indians gave a thought to any other possible development. These savages believed that the white god who had dropped upon them from the skies would never leave them, and Power himself had almost forgotten the existence of the outer world. Most certainly, he paid no heed to the fact that his seven years of expiation were nearly sped. He was happy among these simple people. In his way, he was a king, and the habit of ruling had become second nature.

By chance, that day he carried the spear which had been his faithful ally in crowning the Andes, and a weird and barbarous figure he must have presented when he walked into an almost ungarded camp which had been set up for a few hours on the right bank of the river. Clothed in skins, his face bronzed to a deep brown by constant exposure to the elements, his hair falling over his shoulders, and a long beard sweeping to his breast, he looked a veritable wild man of the woods.

A halfbreed peon who was the first to see him whipped out a revolver, and shouted a warning; but Power held his spear crosswise above his head, showing, by this Indian sign, that he came in peace, and he was permitted to approach.

"Where is your leader?" he asked in Spanish.

The peon seemed to be vastly astonished; but he turned to a tall, thin, elderly man who had dired out of a tent at his cry, and now strode forward.

"Where have you come from?" he said; but his speech betrayed him, and Power added to the sensation he had already caused by saying:

"You are no Spaniard, at any rate."

"Good Lord!" cried the other. "It's an Englishman!"

"Next thing to it, an American," said Power.

"What is your name, and how do you happen to be in this outlandish place?" was the bewildered demand.

"I am here to explain all that, and more. Are you the head of this expedition?"

"Yes."

"Well, what about discussing matters in that tent of yours?"

"Come right along," said the stranger, leading the way.

CHAPTER VX.
THE NEW LIFE.

Nearly seven years had elapsed since Power had either seen a man of his own race, or heard civilised speech. During all that time, save when he spoke aloud in self-communing, or hummed the half-remembered words of a song, he had neither uttered, nor read, nor written a word of English. One literary treasure, indeed, had come his way, and he made good use of it.

Some men of the tribe, digging one day for truffles, broke into a cave, in which there was a skeleton. Among the bones, wrapped in soft leather and parchment, the Indians found a book, which they brought to their white leader. It was an illuminated Book of Hours, or "Horæ Beatæ Mariæ Virginis," written in Latin and Spanish, and, as Power ascertained subsequently, the work of an Italian of the fifteenth century. No more beautiful example of the exquisite classical Renaissance period could be produced by the Vatican library. The character in the figures and naturalness in the landscapes bespoke a ripe art, and many of the vellum pages were bordered by the solid frame which gives full scope to the artist's fancy by its facilities for the introduction of medallions, vignettes, twisted Lombardic vines, cupids, fawns, coloured gems, and birds of brilliant plumage. Veritably, this "Horæ" was more precious than if its leaves were of solid gold; its value to Power in those lonely hours was of a spring in the desert to a parched traveller.

Despite such an invaluable stimulus to his mind however, it was almost with difficulty, and certainly with marked hesitancy, that he was able now to arrange the words of a sentence in their ordered sequence, and often he found his tongue involuntarily lending an Indian twist to idiomatic expressions. But his labored utterance was either not so marked as he imagined, or his host was so surprised at meeting a white man so far from civilization that he could not repress his own excitement. At the outset, too, the instinct of hospitality helped to relieve the tension.

"Can I offer you anything in the way of refreshment—some whisky, or tea, or a cigar?" came the courteous inquiry.

"A cigar, by all means. I have not smoked one for so long a time that I have forgotten what it is like."

"It is pretty evident you have been living among the Indians," said the other, passing him a cigar-case. "How in the world did you contrive to get lost in these parts? You did not come through Patagonia, I fancy?"

Power took thought before answering. Some half-atrophied emotion stirred within him.

"Patagonia? Is this country Patagonia?" he said at last.

"Yes. Do you mean to say you don't know that?"

"I had a notion that it was the Argentine. My Indian friends invariably speak of the white inhabitants as Argentinos."

"But how did you get here?"

"By crossing the Andes."

"With a party?"

"No, alone."

His questioner whistled. "By Jove!" he cried, "you had your nerve with you."

"I couldn't help myself. I was a prisoner in the hands of a Trans-Andean tribe, and they turned me adrift. I had to win through somehow, or die."

"What's your name, anyhow?"

"John Darien Power."

"Mine's Sinclair—George Sinclair. Well, Mr. Power, this is a fortunate meeting for both of us. You could never have reached the coast if you had not fallen in with just such an outfit as mine, because there are the devil's own breeds of Indians prowling about the last hundred and fifty miles of this river. Luckily, they dare not attack forty well-armed men; but, if looks count, they are willing for the job should an opportunity offer. We simply couldn't secure a guide; so decided to follow the river all the way, especially as it made transport fairly easy, except at the rapids. Now you, on the other hand, can tell us just what we want to know. Is the stream practicable much farther? What sort of country lies between this point and the snowline?"

"Yes, I can tell you those things, and a good deal more. What is the object of your expedition? Gold?"

Sinclair laughed rather constrainedly. "I suppose that is the bedrock of the proposition," he said. "A bit of science, a bit of prospecting, a last glimpse at a country which is not marked on any map before I leave Patagonia for good—there you have the scheme in a nutshell."

"Are you willing to turn back now?"

WEAKNESS AND PALPITATION OF THE HEART.

When the heart begins to beat irregularly, palpitates and throbs, skips beats, and sometimes seems to almost stop, it causes great anxiety and alarm.

Many people become weak, worn and miserable, and are unable to attend to either social, business or household duties.

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are a specific for all weakness and heart disorders, and are recommended by us with the greatest of confidence that they will do what we claim for them.

Mrs. George Berridge, Cobocouk, Ont., writes:—"Just a few lines to let you know what Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills have done for me. I have been troubled with weakness and palpitation of the heart. I tried many remedies but got none to answer my case like your pills did. I can recommend them highly to all with heart or nerve trouble."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50 cents per box, or 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

A skin you love to touch

Why it is so rare

A skin you love to touch is rarely found because so few people understand the skin and its needs.

Begin now to take your skin seriously.

You can make it what you would love to have it by using the following treatment regularly.

Make this treatment a daily habit

Just before retiring, work up a warm water lather of Woodbury's Facial Soap and rub it into the skin gently until the skin is softened, the pores opened and the face feels fresh and clean. Rinse in cooler water, then apply cold water—the colder the better—for a full minute. Whenever possible, rub your face for a few minutes with a piece of ice. Always dry the skin thoroughly.

Use this treatment persistently for ten days or two weeks and your skin will show a marked improvement. Use Woodbury's regularly thereafter, and before long your skin will take on that finer texture, that greater freshness and clearness of "a skin you love to touch."

Woodbury's Facial Soap is the work of a skin specialist. It costs 25c a cake. No one hesitates at the price after their first cake.

Do this today—now! Tear out the illustration of the cake below and put it in your purse as a reminder to get Woodbury's and try this treatment. Tear out the cake now. Take it to your druggist today. Begin tonight to get the benefit of this facial soap. For sale by Canadian druggists from coast to coast, including Newfoundland.

A Proud Woman.

The marriage of Princess Louise with the late Duke of Argyll, it is said, did not meet with enthusiastic approval in England for it was unusual for a daughter of the reigning monarch to marry a subject; but in Scotland the match was regarded as appropriate in every way, for there the Campbells are considered the equals of royalty. Indeed, one old Highlander, on the day of the wedding, was heard to remark:

"Ah, it's a proud woman the Queen must be to-day, to think that her daughter is marrying the son of McCallum More!"

Compositors Read Aloud.

Reading aloud was once an occupation in London — and among the most persons you can imagine—compositors. There may possibly be members of this "chapel" who can recollect the time when one of their number was told off to read the newspaper or the latest book while their busy fingers set up the type. This is probably the best instance of the ability to do two things at once, for the reading of MS. and composing and listening to and comprehending spoken words are both of them intellectual tasks.—London Chronicle.

Needles.

The earliest record of needle-making in England is 1545, and the art is supposed to have been introduced by a Moor.

THIN PEOPLE CAN INCREASE WEIGHT

Thin men and women who would like to increase their weight with 10 or 15 pounds of healthy "stay there" fat should try eating a little Sargol with their meals for a while and note results. Here is a good test worth trying. First weigh yourself and measure yourself. Then take Sargol—one tablet with every meal—for two weeks. Then weigh and measure again. It isn't a question of how you look or feel or what your friends say and think. The scales and the tape measure will tell their own story, and most any thin man or woman can easily add from five to eight pounds in the first fourteen days by following this simple direction. And best of all, the new flesh stays put.

Sargol does not of itself make fat, but mixing with your food, it turns the fats, sugars and starches of what you have eaten, into rich, ripe fat producing nourishment for the tissues and blood—prepares it in an easily assimilated form which the blood can readily accept. All this nourishment now passes from your body as waste. But Sargol stops the waste and does it quickly and makes the fat-producing contents of the very same meals you are eating now develop pounds and pounds of healthy flesh between your skin and bones. Sargol is safe, pleasant, efficient and inexpensive.

Druggists sell it in large boxes—forty tablets to a package—on a guarantee of weight increase or money back.

Dr. Chase Is No Stranger

In This Home — Receipts Book and Medicines Kept at Hand All the Time.

There is no better safeguard against disease and suffering than a good cathartic medicine. In the great majority of homes Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are constantly kept at hand, because they quickly awaken the action of liver, kidneys and bowels, and cure the most common ills of life.

Mrs. Thos. Smith, Jamestown, Ont., writes:—"Dr. Chase is no stranger in our home, for we have two of his Receipt Books in the house. My father and my husband's father each had one, and I have been familiar with it ever since I can remember. It was only natural that we should use the Kidney-Liver Pills, and we found them so satisfactory in regulating the digestive system and curing the common ills of life that we always keep them on hand. Many a time these pills have saved me much suffering and prevented serious disease. We also keep the Ointment in the house all the time."

Farm and Dairy Market Report

Toronto, Monday, June 15.—As haying approaches the big question that farmers are asking is, what are the prospects for this year. Reports from almost all districts that usually have a surplus of hay for sale are to the effect that grass made a good start in the spring, but that rain has been lacking since. Consequently the crop will be short. A dealer who toured recently through the hay producing sections of Quebec province found that prospects were for a short crop. As this district largely determines the price of hay, those farmers who have held over a portion of their crop believe that they are "in right."

A feature of the farm produce market is the activity in grains, which, excepting wheat, have advanced almost all along the line. Cattle have closed the week even stronger than in the previous week. Hogs, however, are the weak feature of the live stock market.

WHEAT

Conditions in the winter wheat belt continue to be A 1, and winter wheat markets, such as Chicago, have showed a tendency to drop their prices on stored grain and on futures. Ontario winter wheat, however, is in good demand at steady prices. Brokers tell another story about Northern wheat. It is not going well and offers from the other side are too low to induce much trade. Quotations are as follows: No. 1 Northern, 99½c, No. 2, 96½c; Ontario, $1.02 to $1.04.

COARSE GRAINS

Barley and oats have been particularly active. Numerous export offers have been received for both, and where possible have been filled at advance prices. Other grains too are advanced. Quotations follow: Oats, C.W. No. 2, 43½c; No. 3, 43c; Ontario, 41c to 41½c; corn, 78½c; peas, 90c to $1.03; buckwheat, 82c to 90c; barley, malting, 57c to 59c; feed, 54c; rye, 62c to 64c.

POTATOES AND BEANS

There is no sign of a potato famine this year. Receipts are coming in liberally and there will be a sufficient supply to carry the county until the new crop is on the market. At the same time prices are at a profitable level and it would seem that the days of 40c potatoes are over. Ontario's, $1.25 out of store; $1.15 in car lots; New Brunswick's, $1.35 and $1.25. At Montreal potatoes are quoted at 85c to $1.10 in car lots.

Beans here are quoted $2.15 for primes and $2.30 for hand picked. This is a recession from the quotations of last week.

EGGS AND POULTRY

Every report indicates that grain are more plentiful this year than for several years past. Farmers are keeping better laying stock and giving it more attention. The general prices in the country range around 18c to 19c and wholesalers quote to the trade at 20c to 23c. At Montreal quotations are similar.

Poultry quotations are: Dressed fowl, heavy, 16c to 17c; light, 14c to 15c; live, fat, 15c to 16c; chickens dressed milk fed, 22c to 23c; ordinary, 18c to 19c; live yearlings, 15c to 16c; broilers 20c to 22c; dressed turkeys, 19c to 20c; alive, 17c to 18c.

DAIRY PRODUCE

June butter is the best butter and there has been considerable buying for storage purposes in the Eastern Townships at Cowansville buyers paid as high as 25½c. This was regarded as excessive, and towards the end of the week prices went down, and on Friday large consignments were sold at 24½c to 24¾c. Several cars have been shipped to the middle West and British Columbia, but mainly competition has been for local requirements and cold storage purposes. On this market fresh creamery prints are moving at 23c to 25c; farmers' separator prints, 19c to 20c and dairy prints, 17c to 19c.

Sales of cheese to the Old Country are slow owing to low bids. Buyers on the other side are relying on larger shipments from New Zealand, and do not seem to be fully convinced that the Canadian supply will not be up to last year. At the same time the cheese markets of the United States are advancing, top grades of new cheese in New York being quoted at 15½c to 15½c, and there is an impression in the trade that more of our cheese will go to the United States this year than last. So far our exports are 94,694 boxes short of shipments up to the same date last year.

LIVE STOCK

At this season of the year the majority of farmers are more interested in buying in feeders and stockers than in marketing finished beasts. Consequently receipts at the stock yards have only been moderate in quantity and have been met by a brisk demand. The yards this past week were easily cleaned out, as high as $8.50 being paid for choice heavy steers, running down to $8.10. Handy steers brought $8 and $8.35; butcher cows, to good, $7.40 to $8.15. Other quotations are: Heifers, $6.75 to $8.20; choice cows, $7 to $7.50; com. to good, $4.50 to $7; butcher bulls, $5 to $7.50; feeders, $7.25 to $7.50; stockers, $6.50 to $7.50; canners and cutters, $3 to $4.50.

Milch cows do not seem to be in as active demand as was the case a month ago. Choice ones bring $65 to $90; com. to med., $45 to $65; springers, $40 to $90. Calves are in exceptionally good demand at $5 to $12.50.

Heavy sheep are one of the weak features of the market at $4 to $5. Other quotations in the mutton line are spring lambs, $6 to $9 each; wether lambs, $8 to $8.50; buck lambs, $7.25 to $7.75; light ewes, $5 to $6.25; culls, $3 to $4.

A shipment of hogs from the Canadian West on Thursday numbered 1,600. Receipts from Ontario points numbered 2,000. Prices have receded to $7.65, but this may be considered a steady price when receipts are taken into consideration.

At Montreal also continued small supplies account for a firm market. Choice steers brought $8.75 to $9.25; good, $8.50; fair, $7.50 to $8 and down to $5.75; cows brought $6 to $8; bulls, $6 to $6.25. In the mutton line sheep brought $6 to $6.50; yearling lambs, $7.50 to $7.75; spring lambs, $3 to $10 each. There is an easier feeling in the market for hogs as supplies are liberal. Trade was slow for selected lots at $8.75 to $8.80, weighed off cars.

A Leaf From a Woman's Diary

Tuesday, June 9th—A very warm day, but a pleasant one for me. Scarcely stirred from the cool, shady porch all day. Was to have gone shopping—principally to get Marie a new dress for her school closing. Happened to see an advertisement in the newspaper of the dearest little frock that just looked like Marie. So, instead of going down to Brown's as I had intended, I just phoned Smith's and had them send up one of these dresses on approval. And, while I had them on the phone, I thought of their ad. about Winston Churchill's "The Inside of a Cup." So I had it sent up too and spent the whole day enjoying it—cool too, thanks to the new porch shades and the electric fan John brought home last week. The dress came in the afternoon and I tried it on Marie in the evening. She looks sweet in it and said "Mummy won't you please get all my clothes at Smith's." And I think I will. These hot days it is so convenient to feel you can pick out the very thing you want from an advertisement, and just have it sent up with no more trouble than phoning.

Just a few days previous, Brown had said to his business manager of his local paper: "You can't get people to pay attention to ads. in such hot weather—no more advertising for me until it gets cooler."

About the same time Smith was arranging a splendid series of ads. for that very paper designed to appeal to the women who find it too hot to shop in the ordinary way, but who will phone their orders.

Brown doesn't know yet that he has lost a customer. Smith knows he's gained one—for the lady on the cool, shady porch has some mention of a purchase at Smith's store in her little nook almost every week now.

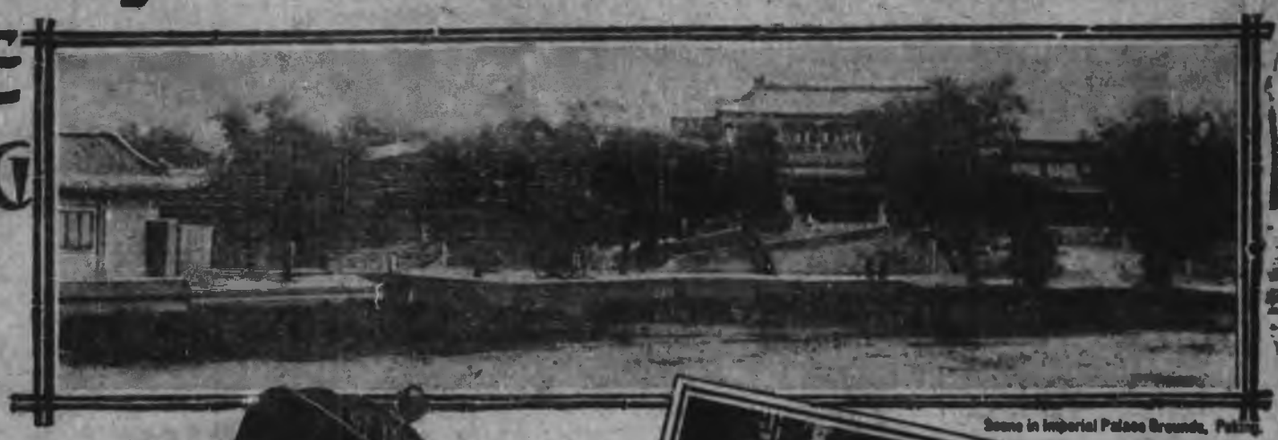
Does it pay to advertise in the warm weather? Ask Smith.

You can obtain helpful advice on advertising, free of cost and without obligation, by consulting the Business Department of the EVENING EXAMINER.

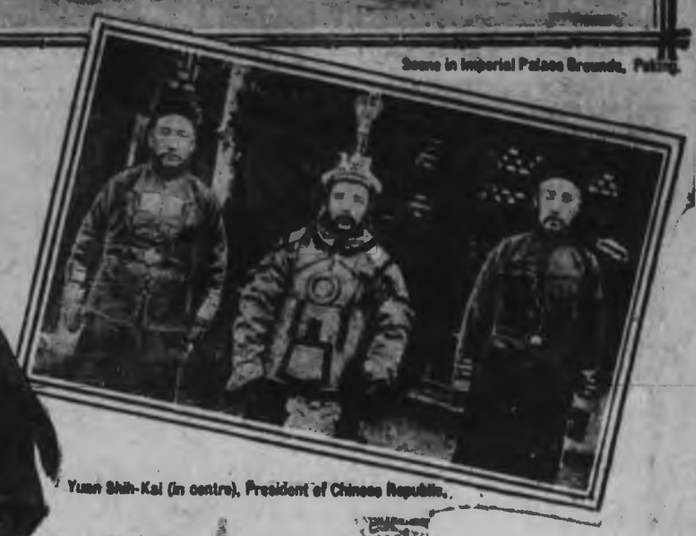
To While Away an Idle Moment

HOW THE CHINESE REPUBLIC IS NURTURING THE DEPOSED BOY EMPEROR

P'u Yi, One-Time Emperor of China.



Scene in Imperial Palace Grounds, Peking.



Yuan Shih-Kai (in centre), President of Chinese Republic.

God of War Temple, Main Court, Peking.

Prince P'u Lun, Guardian of P'u Yi.

"In the garden of Schoenbrunn Lies the little King of Rome."

VISITORS in Vienna, recalling the sympathetic stanzas of Heinrich Heine, pax long and regretfully upon the spot which marks, even more than the Lion of Waterloo, the grave of an empire.

In Paris many have blanched and shuddered as the guide led them to those places made sacred by the sufferings of a lovely but foolish Queen, a King who possibly meant well, according to the lights of his time, and a child who, starved and tortured, was denied the quick release of the guillotine which decapitated his father.

Here one thinks of Louis and his mother, Marie Antoinette; of that Prince who later was condemned by Hebert to an extremity of brutality such as even shocked and disgusted the murder-mad Marat.

Louis, the Dauphin, was but a few days past eight years old when he collapsed from the effects of the mental and physical sufferings he had undergone.

This is the third year of Chinese liberty, as that was the third year of French liberty.

On February 11 little P'u Yi, last Emperor of China, celebrated his eighth birthday. Torn from Paris to Peking and say how different was this birthday anniversary of little P'u Yi from the last birthday of Louis, the Dauphin, spent in the prison of the temple in the capital of France.

P'u Yi lives in a pretty pavilion in a secluded part of the Forbidden City, a stone's throw from the palace occupied by President Yuan Shih-kai and his suite. The little Emperor's private palace is beautifully situated near a charming artificial lake, upon the surface of which flaunts the lovely lotus and beneath whose waters flash the gorgeous fins and bodies of rare goldfish. He has, in addition to his guardians and servants, three professors, two Chinese and one Manchu, who are responsible for his education. It is likely that a distinguished American scholar will shortly be engaged to direct the education of this "Son of Heaven," along Occidental lines; it is entirely possible that little P'u Yi may one day study in the classrooms of an American college.

Financially, little P'u Yi is well provided for. Though his throne was taken away, the founders of the republic scrupulously conserved for the deposed Emperor and his kinsmen everything in the form of private property that the imperial family might fairly claim. Included in the wealth allotted to P'u Yi is income producing property representing capital amounting to more than $20,000,000. This is in addition to palaces, gardens, jewels of great value and priceless art treasures of porcelain and bronze.

A Prince for Guardian.

To act as "chief guardian" of P'u Yi's person and property Yuan Shih-kai has appointed Prince P'u Lun, a great-grandson of the Emperor Tao Kuang and the most enlightened of Manchu princes. P'u Lun is the most popular member of the imperial clan among the Chinese. He is one of the princes who remained in Peking to meet the representatives of the new self-governing regime. He visited the United States in 1909 as imperial commissioner to the St. Louis Exposition, and in his palace in the Tartar City many distinguished Americans and Europeans have been entertained. P'u Lun speaks English, has adopted Occidental dress and is deeply interested in Western educational ideas. Under the supervision of P'u Lun P'u Yi will receive a thoroughly modern education.

Rightly or wrongly, the Manchu Shih-hsii, formerly Grand Councilor, President of the Provisional Senate and predecessor of P'u Lun as guardian of P'u Yi, was looked upon as ultra-conservative. Yet, in appreciation of services rendered in 1908 Prince Chun, Regent, attributed extreme measures against Yuan who now heads the Chinese government, President Yuan Shih-kai made Shih-hsii the temporary guardian of the imperial household. Now, when the government is more firmly established and a change is naturally in order, the President of China, as an object lesson to the country, puts P'u Lun, the most progressive of the Manchus, in the place of Shih-hsii.

On the death of the young Empress Dowager, more than a year ago, the first wives of the two preceding emperors quarrelled with each other as to who should have charge over P'u Yi. Yuan Shih-kai, who had early in the revolution and later in the reconstruction period interposed his stubborn will between reactionary Manchu and ultra-reformist agitators, confided the imperial child to two of the secondary wives of Kuang Hsu, the previous occupant of the imperial throne.

Little P'u Yi is just awakening to the wonderful changes that are taking place around him, to the fact that fate, which might have made him one of the last bulwarks of autocracy, has preserved him to be a proof of the progress of mankind.

In his person, well nurtured, happy, with the promise of rare capacity, China and Yuan Shih-kai are proving that a great change has come over the world since Hebert twisted the thumbs of poor little Louis, the Dauphin, and tried to make "Capet's son" bear false witness against his own mother.

P'u Yi May Serve China.

P'u Yi has dainty food, healthful and beautiful surroundings, fine and rich apparel, and farsighted, polite Yuan is taking pains to see that he is growing up as befits one who may play an important part in the future history of China. Perhaps one day he may be a candidate for the Chinese Presidency.

What a heart moving contrast—this little, living boy celebrating his eighth birthday in the pretty Peking pavilion and poor Louis, the Dauphin, tortured, starved, forced to press his pale, pinched cheek and scared, straining eyes against the window pane of the temple while his poor, lovely mother is borne to death in the terrible tumbril, amid the screeching and shouts of the rabble of Paris! Surely the contrast is full of happy omen; and it is China, Nestor of the nations, that is once more teaching the world.

Yet China has for centuries been conserving human life, economizing real wealth. She is the great pioneer peace power of the universe. She has been acting world peace during centuries before so-called civilized nations began talking world peace. Some of the things China has done, and is doing, are told by Mr. Edward T. Williams, Professor Jeremiah W. Jenks and Yat Ing Kao, the foremost Chinese student now in the United States.

Mr. Williams, who is in charge of the division of Far Eastern Affairs in the Department of State, brings to his work the knowledge and the experience he gleaned in the diplomatic service in the Orient and is one of the few Americans who can speak from personal observation of the "most interesting little boy in the whole world."

"It is contemplated that he shall travel and complete his education abroad," said the former Chargé d'Affaires at Peking. "It is very likely that the boy Emperor will spend some time at an American college and cross the continent on his return to China."

Mr. Williams, who talked with one of P'u Yi's three tutors and saw several specimens of "the Son of Heaven's" handwriting, says:—"It is a remarkably good hand, unusually strong for a child of his years. His writing is like himself—sturdy, virile"——

"Chinese characters, of course?"

"Oh, yes. The ideograms, which are far more difficult to master than English or German script. I have noticed, by the way, a statement that he has begun the study of English. That is not quite correct. I understand that he will take up English, but he has not yet done so."

P'u Lun's Splendid Record.

Mr. Williams makes it clear that there is a great contrast between the healthy, happy child and the Manchu, Kuang Hsu, who dreamed of evolving great reforms, but lacked the health and force to "make his dreams come true."

"The son of Prince P'u Lun, who has just succeeded Shih-hsii as guardian of the imperial family, goes to school with the boy Emperor.

"P'u Lun is the only one of the Manchu princes who is really progressive and helping the republic along. He is progressive to the backbone, and is doing his best to aid President Yuan Shih-kai and the republican administration. President Yuan appointed him Lieutenant General of one of the eight Tartar banners. A prince of the blood, who might have been Emperor of China, he is now serving as a lieutenant general under the commoner head of the commonwealth. His important services to the new régime have endeared him to the Chinese and will give him a very important place in history.

"When many princes and most of the great dukes fled from Peking, P'u Lun remained to welcome the leaders of the revolution and the chosen heads of the provisional government. When Yuan was inaugurated as President, the Prince eulogized him in an excellent speech and offered the compliments of the imperial household. Yuan, representing the plain people of new China, decorated the princely progressive with an order of the first class.

"China and the boy Emperor are therefore to be congratulated upon the new appointment. And the companionship of the little son of this representative Prince of the world's most progressive period will be a splendid thing for P'u Yi.

WOMEN ON MEXICAN BATTLEFIELDS----EMPEROR MAXIMILIAN'S RULE

ONE curious feature of warfare in Mexico is the position which women occupy in the conflict.

With us women go to the field and the firing line only as nurses.

In Mexico women and children pack up their belongings and follow the husband and father on the warpath.

They share with him in the fortunes of war. They eat soldiers' fare, which they themselves prepare. Warfare in Mexico is very different from the scientific, organized operations of the present day. It is full of unexpected local color, much of which is contributed by the women of the army.

They are known by the musical term of soldadera. These women of the army are of the lower classes in Mexico. That means they are either pure Indian or have a strong mixture of Indian blood in their veins. Hence their stoicism and endurance.

Following the army over the mountains of Mexico or through the desert wastes is no easy task. The soldadera of Mexico is not anxious for the robe. She is for many masculine privileges and hardships.

Yet she is essentially feminine, and this femininity shows itself in various ways.

For instance, no matter how coarse or ragged or cheap her gown may be, it is invariably made picturesque by the silk mantilla which is draped about her head and over her shoulders.

When it comes to cooking her woman's ingenuity is at once called into play. Despite the scarcity of water in a desert country and the paucity of food stuffs in a war scathed country side, the soldadera scurries about and in twenty minutes evolves a savory meal.

To accomplish this she has dug the long roots of the mesquite for firewood, piled a few stones around her fire, stretched a bit of tin across it for pots and pans and in a few minutes has evolved a cooking arrangement as effective as a modern range in a New York apartment house.

From the pack on the back of her burro she has drawn her bag of beans or grain and dried beef in strips. If fortune has been kind small game or a quail or two help to make the meal more savory.

Her dishes are washed by a running stream when she is fortunate enough to find one. Her clothes are washed at the same spot, soaked over the stones to remove the dirt.

She lives her busy life, even attending to the duties of childbirth without attendance out under the stars.

In the towns the stay at homes are equally patriotic. Their work is at times as strenuous as that of the women who take to the field. In addition to household labor they make uniforms and fit their men for war. They have even dug trenches and built embankments about the town before a threatened attack.

Another romantic but ill-fated figure in Mexican history is its second Emperor, Maximilian. His rule was later and longer than Iturbide's, but ended as his did, in execution.

There are those who use a shorter and uglier term for this abrupt conclusion of one of the many rulers of Mexico. Murder is nearer the truth.

All that remains of Maximilian's pomp is the tawdry gilt crown in which he used to ride about the city of Mexico. It is now preserved in a convent of the city in that historic city.

Napoleon III., Emperor of the French, was responsible for setting up the Empire of Mexico, when Juarez, the republican executive, refused to [illegible] and England [illegible] intervention and enforcement of the claims of their bondholders against the defaulting Mexicans.

The three Powers sent a fleet which arrived at Vera Cruz toward the end of the year. After a preliminary agreement the Spanish and British ships put back home.

The French remained and began a war of conquest or subjugation. At first they were not successful, for the Mexicans, under the able leadership of generals whom Juarez appointed, fought like tigers. Diaz, afterward famous, or infamous, in Mexican government, was among these commanders.

But the French, under General Forey, were finally successful, entered the City of Mexico and set up a junta of Mexicans to decide on the government.

Was it at the prompting of the French that they decided on an empire with Maximilian, Archduke of Austria, at its head?

The Prince of the Hapsburgs, summoned from his castle on the Adriatic, arrived with his wife, Charlotta, daughter of [illegible] of Belgium, and [illegible] pomp and circumstance was crowned [illegible] Emperor of Mexico in June, 1864.

This was all the more readily accomplished because [illegible] was in the throes of a civil war.

[illegible] the Emperor [illegible] the country [illegible] the history of the world [illegible] country in the world was Mexico [illegible] Juarez [illegible] republicans in control.

Maximilian, deserted by the French, wavered between abdication and remaining on his throne to the bitter end.

He left the besieged city and intrenched himself and his court in Queretaro. Twenty-one thousand Mexican republicans advanced upon him.

Through the treachery of Lopez, one of Maximilian's supporters, the city was opened to the republicans, and the Emperor was captured.

Maximilian was court martialed and condemned to death. It is said that at the moment when Juarez held his pen in hand to sign the death warrant Maximilian's proud and beautiful wife knelt before the Indian President, the son of a [illegible] race, and begged for clemency.

Juarez wavered. But an inexorable [illegible] whispered the words that afterward became a [illegible] in Mexico. [illegible] for the good of his country's salvation."

Maximilian was executed. His wife went [illegible] under the shadow of her un[illegible]

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

THE TAMING OF JUDITH

"Judith," began George, as his wife arose from the table one Saturday noon, "you do not get out of doors enough. You are looking pale and thin. You've stayed in too closely this winter. Now that it is spring, you must drop all this tom-fool indoor exercise — your embroidering and bridge, and such nonsense—and spend your time getting back the plump, rosy cheeks you had last fall."

"I know, George," she replied, "but I simply must keep my bridge engagements the next two weeks. They're the last of the season, and the most important of the whole year. After these are over, I will go out more."

"That's the trouble. You have engagements for two weeks ahead all of the time, and you are continually saying you will ease up on yourself when those two weeks are up. If you would only walk, it would do you some good.

"Yes, I suppose so," she answered, wearily, "but it tires me so much that I just haven't the courage."

Her husband walked slowly to the window before replying. His eyes fell upon the garage.

"Which in itself shows that you are all run down," he said, "and need to build up again at once.

"I have it! You must take out the car every afternoon and have a good spin in the country."

"Oh, George, you know I can't drive. I don't know the least thing about a machine! I can't do that."

"But you can learn, Judith. It's a very easy matter to operate a car. I can teach you in a very short time.

"No, no. I don't want to drive. I do not want to know how."

"Silly! You do, too. The idea of not wanting to drive an automobile. Why, Mrs. Smythe and Mrs. Barryman drive their husband's cars and go anywhere. Surely you want to do what they do. You're always telling me 'Mrs. Smythe does that and Mrs. Barryman does that'; of course you want to do it."

"But, George, I know I do not."

"Oh, you're afraid, are you? A wife of mine afraid to drive an automobile! I'm ashamed of you, Judith! 'Fraid cat! I dare you to deny it!"

Her eyes blazed at the challenge. She hotly exclaimed:

"You do dare me, George, do you? You do dare me? Well, I'll show you whether I'm a coward or not. You just wait until I get my coat and we'll see whether I'm afraid to drive an auto or not."

George chuckled as he went to back out the car.

"I knew I could awaken her if I put it strong enough," he said to himself. He took the car around to the curb, his wife clambered in, and soon they were outside the city limits.

After driving some distance a faster car fairly shot ahead. He shouted and Judith was allowed to take the wheel. She was very careful and attentive as he explained the fundamentals, and they rode along slowly, while he rested his hand lightly upon the wheel to guard against a sudden veer into the ditch. He had her change gears, apply brakes, stop and start again, until she was thoroughly familiar with the use of all the levers and pedals.

They had travelled a considerable distance in this manner, when they came upon an exceptionally straight and level piece of road. Before George could realize what she was about, she threw in the high-speed and advanced the control so that the car fairly shot ahead. He shouted to her to be careful, but instead of replying, she laughed and advanced the control still more. The speedometer leaped across the dial — 35 miles—40—50—60!

"Stop! Judith, don't take any chances!" George shouted.

She laughed again and tossed her head derisively. The car leaped ahead with still greater speed it seemed to George. The indicator on the speedometer struck the peg that marked its limit—65 miles an hour—and held there.

What was she thinking of? What if a team should suddenly appear? What if something should break? He paled a little.

"Stop, Judith, stop! I beg of you! You'll kill us. Oh, Judith, please stop, please!"

She laughed a merry little laugh and shouted one word in reply, "coward!"

She had won! He realized it in a flash.

"Yes," he shouted. "Yes, I am anything, only stop, I implore you!"

Still she kept on without slackening. He did not dare to try to take the wheel, lest in an instant the car might jump from the road.

"Am I a coward?" she asked as they shot up a hill.

"No! No! No! Please stop. You're not. You are brave. Oh, please stop!"

She slowed down and stopped. "You may drive home," she said.

Her husband took the wheel and turned the car around.

"Will you ever dare me again?" she asked, with a laugh.

"No, dear, I think not," he replied, as he threw in the high speed clutch.

"I think if I had been you," she said half musingly, "I'd have thrown off the switch if I'd been going faster than I cared to ride."

Had Nervous Dyspepsia

With Frequent Sick Headaches and Much Pain After Eating — Dr. Chase's Nerve Food Cured.

This letter is from a lady who gained 14 pounds by using the great food cure. It did wonders for her in improving her general health. She is enthusiastic in its praise, and refers to her neighbours as witnesses of the splendid results obtained.

Mrs. Susan oDbson, Spring Hill Mines, N. S., writes:—"It is with pleasure that I write to you in praise of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. I was troubled with dyspepsia, and could not eat without suffering much pain; also had sick headaches frequently, and my nerves were in bad condition. About ten years ago I took a thorough treatment of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, using altogether 21 boxes, and since then can eat anything, have been freed from headaches, and my health has been greatly improved in every way. I gained 14 pounds in weight, and feel sure I owe everything to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. You may use this letter, and my neighbours can tell you of my condition before using this treatment."

TO THE PUBLIC:

THE State of New York, through its Department of Insurance, has completed the examination of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company which it is required by law to make every three years. The Chief Examiner, in concluding the report, said:

"The treatment by this Company of its policy-holders in the prompt payment of their claims, in the voluntary payment of millions of dollars in bonuses, and in its social welfare work—are features of the Company's business which deserve commendation."

The Superintendent of Insurance, the Hon. William Temple Emmet, in approving the report, wrote an extended review from which we make extracts:

THE COMPANY'S GROWTH AND MANAGEMENT.

"The administrative officers of the Company * * * have so increased the assets of the Company as to make these equal the resources of many states and even nations. They have at the same time steadily cheapened the cost of insurance to policy-holders, both by direct means and by the distribution of bonuses."

[The report shows that the Company has given back $35,367,293 in bonuses to industrial policy-holders in nineteen years.]

"They have extended the Company's business to such an extent as to bring it into contact now with approximately one-eighth of the population of the United States."

[The number of policies outstanding December 31, 1913, was 13,957,748.]

"That this notable growth has involved no sacrifice of efficiency in the handling of administrative details, but, on the contrary, has been the direct result of constantly increasing efficiency, is shown by the comparatively small losses sustained by the Company in proportion to the large investments made."

ITS POLICY-HOLDERS SATISFIED.

"The fact that the percentage of lapses due to the abandonment of their insurance by policy-holders is constantly decreasing, speaks eloquently to the same effect."

[The lapse ratio of Industrial policies has decreased 31.7 per cent. in eight years.]

"This last mentioned development is perhaps the most convincing evidence which could be offered that the Company's policy-holders are, broadly speaking, very well satisfied indeed with what they get in return for the premiums they pay. A very remarkable showing altogether."

ITS SOCIAL SERVICE.

"This Company waited for no changes in existing law before striking out as a pioneer among insurance companies along the pathway of social service on a huge scale.

"For years it has maintained for its policy-holders a nursing service upon a great scale; this has latterly become a veritable marvel of efficiency and practical helpfulness."

[Metropolitan nurses made 1,127,022 visits to sick policy-holders in 1913, for which the Company paid the bills.]

"Leaving out of consideration the mere numbers of those who have been directly benefited by these activities, I think that the example which the Metropolitan has set to other great business organizations by its early recognition of the new responsibilities attaching to all business enterprises which have attained a certain size, is one of the most beneficial of recent occurrences in the field of American business. For years it has through its publications upon the question of health conservation been serving multitudes of people as a sort of University of beneficial instruction upon this most important subject."

ABREAST OF MODERN THOUGHT.

"This great institution, having so very recently been under our critical scrutiny and presenting so many admirable illustrations of what an efficient and enlightened modern business organization on a large scale can do in the way of keeping abreast of modern thought, seems to be in a position where I may properly use it as an illustration * * * that private initiative and enterprise are at their best still capable of doing the finest possible work in fields from which, latterly, all the talk has been that these agencies should be compelled to retire."

GUN-RUNNING TRAFFIC

IT HAS ALWAYS BEEN A FAVORITE BRITISH SPORT.

The Ulster Episode Recalls Many Adventures In Which British Sailors Have Been Involved — Englishman Fooled Japanese at Vladivostok—Irishman Who Got Torpedo-Boat Out of the Thames.

The amazing gun-running feat in Ulster which resulted in the landing of vast quantities of munitions of war, estimated at 40,000 rifles and 3,000,000 cartridges, recalls some daring exploits of a similar character.

Strangely enough, English sailors have always been prominent in gun-running expeditions. During the Russo-Japanese War there was an English ship's captain in the Far East who was amazingly successful in taking great cargoes into Vladivostok. The Japanese exhausted their efforts to capture him, but in vain. The secret of his success was this. It was his custom to have two vessels, one steaming a mile or so ahead of the other. The Japanese fleets lying in wait around Vladivostok harbor would during the night hours observe the first steamer as their searchlights fell on her. Instantly they would rush to capture her, only to find that she was a harmless cargo steamer bound for a neutral port and with her papers all in order. Meanwhile the steamer lying behind, her hold full of contraband, would slip around the Japanese fleet and reach her port.

Quite a romantic instance of gun-running—or, rather, ship-running—about the same time was carried out by a lariat Irishman, who ran a torpedo-destroyer out of the Thames for the Russians. Acting for the Russian Government, he approached a great firm of torpedo-destroyer builders, representing himself as the agent of a millionaire who wanted a new form of yacht of very high speed. He was willing to pay a big price. He picked a finely-engined torpedo-destroyer as what he wanted, and all he required was a test of speed. The makers took him and his friends on an experimental run down the River Thames into the North Sea. As the ship entered open water and was about due to return, the Irishman and his companions drew revolvers from their pockets, covered the crew, overcame them, took over command of the ship, and conveyed it safely to the Russian fleet.

As interesting was the case of the famous steamer Ban Righ, which once ran as a passenger and cargo boat between Aberdeen and London. After being sold by the Aberdeen Steam Navigation Co., the vessel was fitted out by Gen. Matos, a candidate for the Presidency of Venezuela, under Castro. The customs authorities detained the Ban Righ for a fortnight, but at last they were satisfied that she was a pleasure yacht, chartered by a scientific gentleman who was exploring the Caribbean Archipelago. The Ben Righ left the Thames on her scientific mission, dropping down to the mouth of the river near Canvey Pand, where in the night barges came down and loaded her up with small arms and ammunition. Then she went across to Antwerp, where she took on board heavier guns and Gen. Matos and a number of Venezuelan patriots (or revolutionists), and sailed as the Libertador for the Venezuelan coast, where she landed her rifles and revolutionists.

The incident is also recalled of the British collier, John Grafton, which was blown up by her crew in the Baltic with 5,000 rifles on board. She was a Channel Islands coaster, and one morning was seen outside the three-mile limit northeast of Sark, a 6,000-ton steamer being anchored alongside her. All day large cases were being transferred from the steamer to the 500-ton collier, and then they parted. The John Grafton's crew, finding themselves chased by Russian gunboats, blew her up and escaped in boats to the Swedish coast of the Baltic, while rifles and revolvers were afterwards washed up in cases on the Finnish coast.

Gun-running is a particularly serious matter for Great Britain, for in the event of an outbreak on the northwest frontier all these secretly-imported arms could be used against her. The arms are sent to the Persian Gulf in a variety of ways. For instance, a few years ago a French expedition was planned in Paris. A steamer was chartered, and it was given out that the object was to engage in pearl fishing. An English lady resident in Paris gave the expedition considerable financial support. Later, however, it was stated that the vessel was to be used in a gun-running expedition. The lady withdrew from the project. She was sued in the Paris courts for breach of contract, and, although her defence was that she did not withdraw her support until she heard of the true character of the expedition, she was ordered to pay $12,000 damages.

When a gun-running vessel arrives in the Persian Gulf she is met by native dhows, into which the arms and ammunition are placed and taken ashore. They are then conveyed by Afghans in caravans, which make the journey to Afghanistan through two main roads to the Halmund river, on the border of Afghanistan, and thence to Kandahar and Kabul.

The British Government has repeatedly appealed to the Persian Government to observe the convention between the two countries and assist in suppressing the illicit arms trade, but the Persians have done practically nothing. Some years ago the British Government decided to inaugurate a regular blockade, and a number of cruisers and tugs were specially engaged to capture cargoes of arms and ammunition.

Fashion Frills.

Forest Notes.

Results from western white pine plantations three seasons or more old show an average of 87 per cent success. On average white pine soil planting can be conducted for from $5 to $6 per acre.

Western yellow pine comes to the amount of 6,377 bushels, obtained on the Bitter Root national forest, Montana, yielded 9,482 pounds of seed. The average cost of the extracted seed was 41 cents per pound.

Forest botanists recognize only one cypress in the United States. Its range extends from Delaware southward around the coast into Texas and up the Mississippi valley to Illinois and Indiana. It is one of the few cone bearing trees which drop their leaves in winter. The heart wood of cypress is noted for its decay resistant properties.

BIG CONTRACTS LET.

Hydro Commission Goes Ahead With Eugenia Falls Plant.

TORONTO, June 18. — Contracts for work involving the expenditure of $230,000 were awarded yesterday by the Hydro-Electric Power Commission for the dams, canals and penstocks at Eugenia Falls, on the Beaver river, near Owen Sound. This announcement made by Hon. Adam Beck yesterday marks the fruition of a great deal of preliminary work in this district, and is the second piece of power development undertaken by the commission itself, at other places the power being purchased from development companies.

The municipalities to be served by this development are: Owen Sound, Markdale, Durham, Flesherton, Chatsworth, Meaford, Thornbury, Walkerton, Chesley, Hanover and Mount Forest. When the work is completed this development will be connected with the Severn system at Big Chute, and the commission is also considering the linking up of Wasdell's Falls, where construction work is now under way.

To hurry the construction of the duplicate trunk line between Dundas and Niagara Falls, an order in Council was passed yesterday authorizing the commission to purchase the right-of-way for this new double line. The cost of the land will be about $200,000, and the completed work about $700,000.

Mr. Beck states that work has progressed so well on the Windsor-St. Thomas extension that power ought to be available by the end of July. The engineers are now getting ready to make the connection with the local distributing stations at Windsor and Walkerville. For the low-tension line connecting Dresden, Tilbury, Wallaceburg, Strathroy, Lambeth, Embro, Plattsville, Princeville, Fergus, Elora and other places, orders have been placed for the material, some of which has been delivered.

WOULD COST TOO MUCH.

Hobhouse Unfavorable to Cutting of Magazine Rates.

LONDON, June 18.—(C. A. P. Cable.)—A British Empire League deputation urged the Postmaster-General yesterday afternoon not to increase the magazine postage rates to Australia, New Zealand and South Africa. G. H. Perley, acting Canadian High Commissioner, said that the use and sale of British magazines had largely increased by the facilities given by Canada.

Mr. Hobhouse, in reply, pointed out that the whole of the penny-a-pound now charged for postage was absorbed by the cost of transmission from the office of posting to the port of departure. The cost of lowering existing rates to New Zealand, Australia and South Africa, would mean a loss of revenue of £27,000 a year, with an extra expenditure of £10,000.

Suffragette Chained To Statue.

LONDON, June 18. — A militant suffragette yesterday created a diversion in the centre of the city by chaining herself to the statue of the Duke of Wellington in front of the Royal Exchange. She then shouted on the passing business men calling on them to intervene in behalf of the imprisoned women. She was eventually removed by the police amid the jeers of a large crowd.

Rich Farmer Goes To Jail.

International Relations Involved In Hindu Trouble.

VANCOUVER, B.C., June 18.—The agent for the owners of the Komagata Maru have formally notified Gurdit Singh that the vessel would have to leave for Japan. The Hindus insist they will fight if any attempt is made on board to move the ship, or even hoist an anchor, while they are on board. Just how to place guards aboard, or otherwise to assist the departure of the vessel is a problem that is puzzling the authorities.

An International Affair.

OTTAWA, June 18.—The situation regarding the Komagata Maru, the vessel which brought 400 Hindus from India to Vancouver, is causing grave concern at Ottawa.

It is evident that the news of the captain's fear of a mutiny has reached the Japanese authorities, for two Japanese cruisers are on their way to Vancouver and will reach there on Friday. It is expected that these cruisers will escort the Komagata Maru to sea. When they have gone beyond the three-mile limit the Hindus will be under Japanese control.

Hon. Geo. H. Perley who is in England was cabled yesterday to confer with the British authorities on the question. The Hindus are British subjects and can command British protection. The difficulty is that beyond the three-mile limit the Hindus will be in Japanese territory in a Japanese ship, manned by Japanese.

The affair, therefore, has assumed an international aspect, and Mr. Perley's answer is awaited with considerable anxiety.

It is probable that the moral reform branch will take up the matter, as it was the impression of the ministers here that immorality was not so widespread.

GREAT ROWELL RALLY AT GRAND OPERA HOUSE TO-NIGHT

AT EIGHT O'CLOCK SHARP

Addresses by N. W. ROWELL, K.C., LIBERAL LEADER and G. G. S. LINDSAY, K.C. First Gallery Reserved for Ladies

THE TEMPERANCE ISSUE TAKES HOLD IN SMITH

Farmers in Past Three Days Have Given Gillespie a Splendid Reception—Township is Strongly Inclined Toward Temperance

F. D. KERR'S FINE SPEECH

The farmers of Smith are for the most part wise and well-to-do. They are also God-fearing, and regular church-goers. During the past three days a large number of them have listened to George A. Gillespie and his assistant temperance advocates on a presentation of the Rowell policy. By the time election day rolls around these same farmers will have given the present issue careful consideration. And it can be fairly safely depended upon that the Smith sentiment will be expressed in no uncertain manner.

This is not written in a spirit of flattery or cajoling. It is a statement of plain facts, particularly applicable to one big wide section that comprises almost the entire township. Here are farmers who buy and sell in Peterborough, who make some hotel or other their headquarters, but who, like the proprietor or bar-keeper, leave the whiskey to the other fellow. The average Smith farmer is as unfamiliar with the ructions of the red stuff in his inwards as is the average bartender. That is practically a clean sheet, for the proprietor of the hotel demands a sober man to watch his till and jolly his customers.

In short sobriety is a mark of wisdom and the main road to independent circumstances. In addition the Smith people are consistent churchgoers. Possibly that is one of the reasons why they have prospered, but anyway with few exceptions they are looking at this temperance question with manifest sincerity. Hence it is a practical certainty that they will give the right response to Rowell.

A Wealth of Speakers.

A feature peculiar to this campaign is the manner in which offers of help have been made to Mr. Gillespie.

The speakers have been especially eloquent and forceful, men have presented themselves to carry on the work in their neighbourhood, temporary associations have been formed, Conservatives have presided at some of the meetings, the attention from the gatherings has been perfect. And there are no hands out. The workers regard it as a duty and even a privilege to help in the good work of putting the lid on John Barleycorn.

Last Night's Meetings.

At Young's Point Wednesday night Mr. Gillespie spoke to about fifty men. Mr. Walter Young acted as chairman, and the speakers were Rev. C. E. Cragg, Rev. Robt. Pogue, Mr. R. R. Hall, Mr. D. O'Connell, and the candidate.

At Selwyn Reeve Fred McKee presided with Mr. Widdefield, Mr. Cowan, Mr. Kerr and Mr. Gillespie as the speakers.

Mr. Kerr's Fine Speech.

One of the most convincing addresses of the campaign in Smith was that delivered by Mr. Kerr. In a nice quiet way he turned the spot light upon an angle of the liquor traffic that hits home with every thinking man.

"I was interested," he said, "when Mr. Cowan urged you not to let the wool be pulled over your eyes. The danger is that men are holding it there themselves. The man who fails to appreciate the Rowell opportunity to abolish the bar, does not see, not so much because Mr. Soden has to hold the wool over his eyes, as it is because he has taken the wool from Mr. Soden's hands and is holding it over his own eyes."

Linked With Liquor.

Mr. Geo. H. Gooderham, a distiller of the firm of Gooderham & Worts, Toronto, and whip of the Whitney party, the man who marshalls the Conservative members for voting in the House, is running hand in hand with Hon. J. J. Foy. Mark Irish, son of a former proprietor of the Rossin House, which did, and is doing one of the biggest bar trades in Toronto, is running as team-mate with the Hon. Dr. Pyne.

Why was Mr. Doughty, who was duly nominated as Conservative candidate in East Toronto, and who came out in favour of abolishing the bar, although supporting the Conservative party on all other measures—why was Mr. Doughty considered not

SHOT AT WIFE THEN TURNED GUN ON HIMSELF

Farmer Commits Suicide After Firing Nine Shots, Several of Which Narrowly Missed Woman

HAD BEEN SEPARATED

KINGSTON, Ont., June 18—After firing nine shots, a couple of which narrowly escaped hitting his wife, Wellington Babcock, aged forty years, a farmer living a few miles north of Wilton, fired a shot from the revolver into his brain and died almost instantly. The shooting occurred at the home of his brother, O. Verton Babcock, at Odessa, where his wife has been living with her two children, for the past year, having been separated from her husband.

NOVELTY IN CORPORATE MANAGEMENT

Wider Scope of Modern Life Insurance

Superintendent Emmet Warmly Commends Metropolitan Company

The report of the New York State Department of Insurance on the triennial examination of the Meropolitan Life Insurance Company has just been published by the State. Under the law revised by Governor Hughes, this examination must be made every three years. About twenty examiners of the Insurance Department devoted nearly a year to the work, and Mr. Emmet, as Superintendent of the Department, wrote an extended review of the report. In this review Commissioner Emmet not only made an analysis of the Company's condition as a business corporation, but of its activities along the broader lines of social service among industrial workers, health education and the conservation or human life. He points out that the Company, now having more than thirteen million policies outstanding, has assumed such proportions that it is practically brought into immediate contact with approximately one-eighth of the population of the United States.

BAD FIRE IN GLASGOW

Examiner Special:

GLASGOW, Scotland, June 18—A fire, during which three firemen lost their lives, and caused a million dollars' damage to the City's water front occurred yesterday.

BIG CROWD IS EXPECTED TO HEAR MR. ROWELL

It is very probable that Mr. N. W. Rowell, K. C., will speak to a capacity house at the Grand Opera House to-night. Men in the country who are deeply interested in the temperance issue, want to hear the man who gives his word that he will bring in sweeping legislation if elected. The citizens of the same mind are advised to make sure of their seats to-night. The balcony will be reserved for ladies and their escorts. Those who have heard Mr Rowell know that the element of earnestness is most manifest in his platform presence. He is a forceful speaker ed is well worth listening to, no matter what the personal opinions of the audience may be on the points he takes up. His reception to-night will be as enhtusiastic as any in his itinerary.

THE SINKING OF THE EMPRESS OF IRELAND, as portrayed by the London Sphere's artists. Passengers standing on the side of the Empress just before she sank. The vessel, after being struck, careened over to the starboard. That side of the vessel soon became wholly submerged. The port side became flatter and flatter until, as the survivors from the liner state, they walked down the side of the vessel as on a sloping shore. The portion shown in this diagram is just the forward part of the vessel at the point where the navigating bridge rises high above the forward deck.

THE CZAR HAS CLOSE CALL

Attempt to Exterminate Russian Royal Family Was Accidentally Foiled—Wrong Train Blown Up

CZARINA COLLAPSES

LONDON, Eng., June 18—Despatches received here from Russia to-day indicate a dastardly attempt to exterminate the Czar of Russia and all his family by dynamite while they were travelling, near Kishineff. A passenger train, which had been unexpectedly sent ahead of the Royal train, was blown up. Many coaches were shattered and several passengers hurt. It is stated here that the Czarina, whose life has always been in terror, utterly collapsed when told of her narrow escape. She is now secluded in St. Petersburg.

The invalid Czarevitch is also believed to be badly effected by the shock.

ST. PETERSBURG, June 18.— It was officially announced this morning that two persons were killed and twenty-eight hurt by anarchists who attempted to blow up the Royal train.

HINDU SITUATION IS SERIOUS

Special to The Examiner.

OTTAWA, Ont., June 18. —The utmost secrecy is being maintained by the authorities here as to the Hindu situation at Vancouver, and there are indications that the seriousness of the situation is fully realized. F. G. Blair, the Assistant Superintendent of Immigration, was in receipt this morning of two long code telegrams from Malcolm Reid, the Department representative at Vancouver, which were kept secret. A Cabinet Council was held this morning and the situation was discussed at length. Hon. Geo. H. Perley has been cabled to in London to confer with the Imperial authorities. The Dominion authorities are in a position where they are strangely powerless to interfere. In the event of the Japanese captain requesting assistance from the Japanese cruisers to quell the mutiny which is altogether likely, then there is a prospect of a fight between Japanese and Hindus in a Canadian harbour, which would be a unique, not to say dangerous, situation.

UNITED STATES SHIPS HELP THE GUN RUNNERS

International Complications May Follow as Result of Operations Last Night. Several Thousand Rifles Were Landed and Coastguards Are Gagged.

Examiner Special:

TULLIMORE, Ireland, June 18 — There are grave prospects of an international complication between the United States and Great Britain, following the successful gun running operations by the United States steamers Gretna and Juniper, off these coasts, last night, when they succeeded in landing several thousand rifles with much ammunition, for the use of the National volunteers. This enterprise is said to have been attended by many sensational features, including the gagging of several coast guards on the Connemara Coast, where the landing was affected. Ships were met by boats containing squads of Nationalist volunteers who quietly conveyed this contraband to shore, where it was hurried off to caves and hiding places inaccessible to any but the residents of the district.

The Lord Lieutenant of Ireland has reported the matter officially to the Foreign Office, where action is awaited. Both vessels have disappeared.

CAMPAIGN NOTES

"In the Review to-night under the picture of Mr. Soden there is what I deem to be the most false presentation of any platform that I have ever read in my life."—Rev. C. E. Cragg, of Mark Street Methodist Church, at Young's Point last night.

"You appear to be taking this election quietly," said a Peterborough man to a Smith farmer.

"Yes, but you know the old saying, 'still waters flow deep.' We're doing a lot of thinking."

The temperance workers of the city can safely depend upon hearty assistance from Smith. Other townships will be reported upon later.

Mr. F. D. Kerr at Selwyn meeting —"If one liquor man were to say to another 'I'm going to vote for Rowell: I don't believe he is sincere,' his family would have him examined for incarceration in a lunatic asylum."

A farmer at Selwyn last night said to The Examiner—"Mayor Buller's insult to Mr. Pogue at the Opera House was a disgrace to the City of Peterborough."

Where is the man who can take his boy on his knee and say: "My boy, your father's anxious to see the time when you arrive at an age when you can accompany the old man to Peterborough, put your foot on the iron railing, your elbow on the bar, and tos s off a few whiskies with your dad?" Mr. F. D. Kerr at Selwyn.

Back in Smith the young men are taking a deep interest in the temperance campaign while, as a contrast, local youth dips the tango to the lilt of "This is the Life," at a certain place where a sign reads—"No profane language allowed." But then the country quiet breeds contemplation, while the city breeds much frivolity.

IMPERATOR REPORTED IN TROUBLE

LONDON, June 18.—(Bulletin.)—It is stated that the Hamburg American liner Imperator, which was carrying the Kaiser Wilhelm's passengers to New York, had gone ashore on the Isle of Wight in a dense fog.

Report Denied.

LONDON, Eng., June 18.— The report from the Isle of Wight that the Steamer Imperator was ashore, has been authoritatively denied by officials of the line. She has not yet left Southampton. A small steamer of the Hamburg line is the one ashore at Wight.

CHANGE OF VENUE WAS REFUSED

YOUNG MEN WERE FINED

Contributed About $20 For Being Disorderly on Excursion Steamer

COURT ROOM CROWDED

The county of Northumberland was more largely represented in Peterborough this morning than since the King's birthday, on which day an excursion was run from Bewdley to this City. The reason was that on the return journey of the excursion, which was made via the Steamer Geneva, three young men became decidedly unruly and interfered with the rest of the passengers to such an extent that Capt. Harris laid a charge against them.

In County Police Court this morning they pleaded guilty to be disorderly on the day in question, and were each fined $10 and costs, amounting in all to about $20. Mr. E. L. Goodwill conducted the prosecution, and as noted above, a very large number of residents of the surrounding country congregated in the court room to learn the punishment handed out to the defendants.

LITTLE HOPE OF SUCCESS OF NEGOTIATIONS

Examiner Special:

WASHINGTON, June 18.—For the first time since the Mexican negotiations, it was admitted at the White House to-day that there exists a serious possibility of their failure. Hope has not been abandoned, but the latest developments are regarded as extremely unfavourable.

LACROSSE FANS REMINDED OF THE GAME TO-MORROW

The lacrosse team had another good practice last night and will meet Havelock in good condition to-morrow afternoon at Riverside Park. The game will begin at 4.45 o'clock with Mr. Frank Doyle, the O. A. L. A. Secretary as referee. Mr Doyle officiated in Hastings yesterday, when Campbellford was defeated by 12 to 2. The local tea will take no chances with Havelock and intend to go through the district and wrench it from Hastings. The locals will be without Dillon to-morrow, but at that they have a strong team for the game. The home has been doing well of late with Robertson, McCoy, Kelly and Donovan. They played a smooth game in Hastings and if nothing prevents them from all turning out to-morrow the lacrosse fans will see a nicely balanced home department.

STORY IS DRAMATIC

Second Engineer Brennan of the Empress Tells of the Engine Room When Crash Came

INQUIRY PROCEEDS

Examiner Special:

QUEBEC, P.Q., June 18.—It was the story of the engine room this morning, a dramatic story of rapid orders on telegraph, swift flinging over engines to full speed astern, the quiver of the shock when the Storstad crashed through the side of the Empress of Ireland, and the flooding of the engine rooms.

"The water rose like that," said Second Engineer Brennan, rapidly raising his hand from the edge of the witness box vertically into the air.

"The water-tight door between the stokehold from which water was pouring and engine room was immediately closed."

"And," asked Lord Mersey, following up the point when Third Engineer Liddell was on the stand, "when the water-tight door was closed, was there much water pouring into the engine room?"

"O, quite a bit," the engineer laconically replied.

In the engine room word had come from the stokehold that the vessel was making water. Then from the stokehold came a few firemen and trimmers, then right at their heels the flood of water, "but," the engineer persisted, "there had been absolutely no lack of discipline in the engine room. We did not leave the engine room till the lights were going out."

To get out of the engine room to the deck they had to help one another up ladders. Brennan, who was in charge of the port engine, declared that after leaving Father Point the order was "full speed ahead." It would take the vessel an hour to reach her full speed of seventeen knots he thought with engines running full speed ahead. After leaving Father Point she ran about nineteen minutes when the order came to stop immediately. "full speed astern." "The Clock went right round," Brennan said. For about three minutes the engines were running full speed astern, then came an order to stop. Four or five minutes later there was the impact. "The ship never shook so far as I could feel," Brennan quietly told the court. "It sounded like a crash and a tear, a pretty severe crash." Afterwards there was an order, not from the bridge, but from the chief engineer, who had been speaking on the telephone to start the engines again. The order was unavailing. There was no steam.

As the inquiry proceeds the determination of Lord Mersey not to allow the evidence to drift into side issues is becoming daily more apparent. The counsel who would dwell on irrelevancies receives short shift. The president of the inquiry kept to the main point of the collision and its cause, and he permits none to turn aside.

Attorney Haight, who appeared for the owners of the Storstad catechised the engineers about the condition of the Empress' steering gear. Haight said he had been informed that it was out of order just before leaving Quebec. This was denied by all witnesses. Quartermaster Galway, who made this statement to Haight will be called as a witness this afternoon.

VALUABLE DOG WAS POISONED

Thoroughbred Collie of Mr. George Cochrane is Dead—$10 Reward

Mr. Geo. Cochrane, 705 George street, had his valuable collie poisoned last night, and is greatly incensed at the occurrence. The dog was seen last night about midnight, and was then very much alive, but this morning school children discovered it dead on the doorstep of Mr. Wm. Thompson, who lives immediately south of Mr. Cochrane.

The dog was a favourite in the neighbourhood, being especially friendly with the school children. It was a thoroughbred collie, and was the property of Mr. Cochrane for three years. Mr. Cochrane is willing to give a reward of $10 for information that will lead to the absolute identification of the party responsible for the death of the dog.

ROWELL TO-NIGHT.

Mr. N. W. Rowell, K.C., Liberal leader, an advocate of the abolish the bar policy, will speak in the Opera House to-night. There will doubtless be a big rush to hear him, for he and his cause have swept the province like wild fire. Never before have a leader and a cause sprung into such conspicuous popularity as Mr. Rowell and his policy have done during the past month. He has addressed crowded and enthusiastic audiences in other places as he will do to-night.

An address will be also given on general political issues by Mr. G. G. S. Lindsay, K.C., of Toronto. The meeting altogether will be an immense attraction and an immense stimulus to the cause of temperance and moral reform.

WILL IT DUPLICATE THE RECORD?

Will the Borden government be able to duplicate the record of financial extravagance of the Ontario government? This Ontario government has doubled the provincial expenditure twice in nine years. The Borden government has doubled the Dominion expenditure in three years, so that it has six years left to equal the Ontario government's record. And honours are so far pretty even, for, in addition to doubling the national expenditure in 3 years it has also virtually doubled the national debt by the help of the gift of 45 million dollars to the Canadian Northern Railway. This is how it works out.

The Canadian Northern aid legislation was introduced in the Commons by Premier Borden on May 13th. It passed its third reading in the Senate just four weeks afterwards on the eve of prorogation. Brought down in the Commons at the fag end of the session it was put through Parliament by the strongest, most insistent and boldest lobby in the history of Canadian politics. The people of Canada without being given a chance to pronounce upon or to adequately realise the importance of the question, have been irrevocably committed to a junior partnership with Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann. Canada has been made morally and legally responsible for obligations aggregating practically $400,000,000, or an amount larger than the present national debt. Canada has been made responsible for all the affairs of a complicated and quasi insolvent transcontinental railway system, owned and controlled by two men, who have built the system through public aid, who are given at least $60,000,000 of watered stock made valuable by the deliberate action of Parliament, and who have refused to pledge a single dollar of their own great personal fortunes to help their own enterprise out of the difficulties of their own creation.

WHERE DO YOU STAND?

Sir James Whitney, who is lending his name as leader for this election, but is merely keeping the place warm for Hon. Mr. Hanna or Hon. Mr. Beck, according to which faction works hardest and best, has issued a final "manifesto" to the electors.

In this he reviews the course of his government and boasts of the many things his government has done, built mostly on Liberal foundations. He boasts of having doubled the provincial revenue, the increase derived largely from sources established by Liberals. If he could have boasted of having increased the revenue by making the people more prosperous, by increasing the population of the farming districts he might have boasted with good warrant. It does not require much statesmanship to clap on taxes.

But Sir James did not boast as the fact is, that his government has doubled the provincial expenditure twice over in nine years.

Sir James is at his best in dealing with the 'advanced' temperance record of his government. On this point he says:

"The license laws have been faithfully enforced in honest fulfilment of pledges, and in accordance with the moral and temperance sentiment of the province, by many wholesome amendments, by the curtailment of the hours during which liquor is sold, and by provisions to aid in enforcing the Canada Temperance Act where that law is adopted." He says "Under existing laws, the people have the right to close shops and bars alike in any locality. This policy has resulted in nine years in the abolition of over 1,2000 liquor licenses, or nearly one-half of the whole number in the province. We believe that the people should be trusted to decide this matter for themselves, and that the dragging of the temperance question into the arena of party politics is not in the interests of the cause."

This would make fine reading for anybody that did not know better. "The license laws have been faithfully enforced"—in the interests of temperance or the traffic? Let Peterborough bear witness, where the government has left the most of the work of enforcement to the city police, and where hoodlums on Sunday, as was done last Sunday, can within hail of the city consume four or five casks of beer and insult pleasure parties on the river, without interference from the Inspector.

It is brave to boast of enforcing the Canada Temperance Act, but in this as in other things, the government has neutralized its good intentions—it has done as the cow which waits till the pail is full and then kicks it over.

If the government has helped enforce the Canada Temperance Act, it has helped kill its adoption. The government sent, or allowed to go into Welland and Huron, the provincial license inspector, Mr. Snider, to campaign against the Canada Temperance Act—in the interests of temperance? No, in the interests of the traffic. Mr. Hanna denied that Inspector Snider went into these counties with the government's sanction. But his denial loses a great deal of force from the fact that he refused investigation into the actions of his Inspector.

Sir James boasts that in his time local option has resulted in the abolition of 1,200 bars. He does not boast that the iniquitous three-fifths clause his government concocted retained some 400 bars that would have been wiped out but for this clause.

If the government record was so bright upon this point, why did the government find it necessary to author ize for distribution—if it did not order the preparation of it—of a lying map, a forgery, to give the electors a false idea of the government's record on local option. This lying map which was used by a Minister of the Crown, Mr. Duff, at the Opera House a week ago, shows that when the present government came into power there were only 26 "dry" municipalities in Ontario; when as a matter of fact there were 184 "dry" municipalities. This lying map shows that when the government came into power all of Peterborough county was "wet," when as a matter of fact it was, outside of Peterborough city, virtually all "dry."

If the government had done so much for local option why was it necessary to apparently lie about it, to deceive the people. A government which thus attempts to deceive and delude the people in an appeal for their support, cannot be trusted after it has got, if it gets, that support.

Sir James Whitney says "We believe the people should be trusted to decide this matter for themselves." Is feeding the people on falsehood a good way to let "the people decide for themselves?"

There is no way of dodging the real issue in this contest—it is a straight fight between the liquor interests and the forces of right and justice, which are battling for the abolition of the bar, as the type and essence of the most demoralising influence in this province.

Which side will the honest elector be on? The liquor traffic will vote solidly for its interests. That interest will vote solidly for the party that stands by it and antagonizes the efforts of the great moral forces of the country to sweep away the bar.

Any one in doubt as to the stand he should take; anybody that wants to hear a plain, single-minded, straightforward presentation of the issue; who wants to have any doubt removed as to his duty in this contest, is invited to go to the opera house o-night and hear Rowell, the man of courage, the man of determination, who has taken his political life in his hands and staked his political fortunes upon the outcome of a fight of good against evil, of a great right against a great wrong.

CANADIAN ORDER OF FORESTERS

Encouraging Reports at the 35th Annual Meeting

The 35th annual meeting of the Canadian Order of Foresters convened on Tuesday afternoon, the 16th of June, in the hall of the Knights of Columbus, in the city of Quebec, at 2 o'clock. As usual delegates were in attendance from all parts of the Dominion, this order confining its business entirely to the Dominion of Canada. A representative is present from every province in Canada, and though this society's 35th year will be completed in November next, while annual meetings have been held in the province, never previously has such a meeting convened in the city of Quebec. The mayor and aldermen of the city welcomed the delegates in felicitous terms, Mr. Stewart, the High Chief Ranger, replying in an eloquent manner on behalf of the Order.

The following officers were present at the opening session: J. A. Stewart, High Chief Ranger, Perth, Ont.; J. A. A. Brodeur, High Vice-Chief Ranger, Montreal, Que.; Alf. P. VanSomeren, High Secretary, Brantford, Ont., Dr. U. M. Stanley, Chairman Medical Board, Brantford, Ont.; R. Elliott, High Treasurer, Brantford, Ont.; W. G. Strong, Superintendent of Organization, Brantford, Ont.; W. L. Roberts, High Auditor, Brantford, Ont.; A. Shultis, Second High Auditor, Brantford, Ont.; W. M. Couper, High Registrar, Montreal, Que.; H. J. Stevenson, Toronto, Ont.; R. T. Kemp, Listowel, Ont.; A. R. Galpin, London, Ont.; F. H. Davidson, Winnipeg, Man., members of the Executive Committee.

In addition to the above, A. K. Berry, District High Chief Ranger, Holland, Man., John Murray, Past District High Chief Ranger, Hamiota, Man., D. E. McKinnon, District High Secretary, Winipeg, Man., were present as representatives of the District Court for Manitoba.

The annual reports of all the High Court Officers of the Order are again very satisfactory. They demonstrate that the year 1913, which is the period covered by the reports referred to, was no exception to the series of satisfactory reports that have occurred from year to year in order's experience. An interesting feature in connection with the business of the order is that since its inception in 1879 it has confined its busines entirely to the Dominion of Canada, and the excellent result which the chairman of the medical board has been able to report as to the death rate, which was 6.12 per thousand in 1913, and 5.28 over the society's experience, is no doubt very largely due to the original decision of the founders of the order to operate only within the Dominion. In all departments material betterment is shown in the finacial position of the order.

Petes Make a Clean Sweep of the Athletic Series, Winning Yesterday by 4 to 1. Blount Had Three Hits

PLAY BRANTFORD TO-DAY

HAMILTON, June 17. — The tail-end Petes made it three straight from Hamilton by taking the last game of the series here to-day. It was clean baseball with plenty of clean hitting on the part of the visitors and good pitching on the part of their twirler, Schettler. He allowed the locals but three hits, Jack White getting two of them and Harry Corns the other. He had the locals at his mercy at all times and was seldom in danger. Yates was on the mound fof Hamilton but although he was given good support was touched up for ten bingles. The score:

Double plays, Fox to King to Gorman; Miller to Fox. Two base hit, Stewart. Three base hit, Blount. Struck out, by Yates 1; by Schettler 2. Hit by pitcher, by Yates 1 (Gorman); by Schettler 1 (Dudley). Umpire—Reed. Time, 1.30

NOTES.

The Petes played fine ball in the field.

Blount led the hitting with three hits; one of them a triple.

King had another busy day, accepting ten chances without an error.

Welsh, after two or three days' slump, had two hits, stole a base and scored two runs.

Schettler secured revenge for the beating the Hams administered to him here, last Friday.

Hamilton Herald: In the first of the thirteenth inning Dad Stewart was banished from the game. He had disputed a strike decision by Umpire Reed in the twelfth and continued to argue when he came in again. He was ordered out of the grounds. At that "Dad's" kick was legitimate.

Jack White pulled down Joe Byrne's wallop to the left field limits in the fourteenth inning when it looked like a surg triple. Blount was on the paths at the time, and the catch saved the game for the time being.

Harry Corns' sensational effort came in the seventh when with Gorman and Fox on bases, he ran back into deep centre and pulled down Catcher Miller's healthy wallop. He caught the ball while running backwards. It was a dandy.

Miller looked 100 per cent. better in yesterday's game. He stopped several wild pitches by Sterling and hit like a demon. True he only had two hits in seven times at bat, but every one of his clouts sent the Athletic outfield to the extreme ends of the lot to bring the ball down.

Dolan deliberately walked Curly Blount in the seventh with two on and two out. His judgment proved good for Byrne, who followed, popped a fly to Teddy Baldwin for an easy out.

Paddy Dougherty attempted to walk Miller in the twelfth with one out and King and Fox on bases. The husky catcher, though, stepped out on one and rapped it smartly down first base way. Dudley speared it and doubled King on third. It was a lucky play for the Athletics, for Miller almost succeeded in making it safe. King had started the inning with a triple to centre and the Petes looked to have the game sewed up as a result.

Curly Blount is the best ball player on the Peterborough Club. He is exceptionally speedy on the bases. Merlin Kopp was always looked upon locally as the fastest base-runner in the Canadian League, but he has never shown anything here to warrant his preference over Blount.

KROY RELEASED TO THE BEAVERS

A despatch from President McCaffery, of the Toronto Baseball Club, from New York last night, stated that he had released Outfielder Kroy to the Toronto Canadian League Club, and that Pitcher Gilbert had been given his unconditional release, while Pitcher Zeiser had been sent to Scranton.

LACROSSE

The following players are asked to be at Riverside Park to-morrow for the game with Havelock: Fleming, Hardy, Main, Dunsford, Crough, Halsin, Manion, Robertson, McCoy, Donovan, Kelly.

GOOD RACING ON FIRST DAY OF THE TURF CLUB MEET

"Jimmy Direct" Won the 2:15 Class in Straight Heats and "Montalero" Captured the 2:30 Class After "My Girl" Had Won the First Heat--A Good Programme Well Carried Out.

Some splendid racing was seen at the first day of the local meet under the auspices of the Central Ontario Racing Association at the Driving Park yesterday, and from an artistic point of view the success of the event is assured. The crowd was not as large as the perfect weather conditions and the class of the fields should have attracted, but at that there were a good many lovers of the harness horse in the stand when Dr. Sinclair sent the first field away shortly after 2.30 o'clock, and they apparently enjoyed the programme immensely.

Two events were decided yesterday, the 2.30 class which was captured in straight heats by the well known campaigner, Jimmy Direct, owned by D. Teal of Wooler, and the 2.15 class won by T. Hodgins' Montalero, which came on and won three heats after "My Girl," a Hamilton owned mare, had breezed home a winner in the first heat.

The 2.15 brought together a classy field. In addition to the winner and My Girl, City Queen, winner of many hard fought races, Stealaway, a likely looking morefrom Dunnville, Dr. Johnston's good mare, Susie Hal, Esther D, and Montello faced the start. Jimmy Direct was the popular choice and justified the confidence of the public by easily winning in three straight heats. He was clearly the class of the field, negotiating the three heats without a skip and although challenged frequently, alawys responding when called upon. Susie Hal gave him a battle in the first heat and Montello proved the chief opposition in the next two. Jimmy Direct was never in trou following is the summary:

2.15 Class.

1, Jimmy Direct, D. Teal, Wooler 1 1 1
2. Montello, A. Hays, Kingston 3 2 2
3. Susie Hal, Dr. Johnston, Peterborough 2 3 3
4. Stealaway, T. W. Toor, Dunnville 4 4 4
City Queen, L. G. Bennett, Port Hope 5 5 5
Esther D. A. Johnston, Peterborough 6 6 6

Time—2.16 1-2, 2.15 1-2, 2.16 1-2.

The 2.30 class paraded a field of seven starters before Dr. Sinclair, and it was a field of considerable class too. The wise ones predicted the race would be between Montalero, the Orillia horse, and Ora Medium, a splendid looking mare owned by Frank Montgomery of Peterborough. The "dope" was good, too, as the chief contention was between the two, although "My Girl" captured the first heat and thereby clinched second money. In spite of the fact that she only won third money, Ora Medium finished in the place position in all four heats and gave the winner a battle all the way.

In the first heat Lucky Lou was out in front at the first quarter and then My Girl shot away from the field and won without much trouble. Ora Medium was second and Montalero third. The next three heats saw Montalero a clean-cut winner, with practically the only opposition coming from Ora Medium. The third heat saw George Eagle threaten to do some damage, but the Dunnville horse threw away his chance by a bad break in the stretch.

The summary:

2.30 Class.

1. Montalero, T. Hodgins, Orillia 3 1 1 1
2. My Girl, Field Bros., Hamilton 1 4 3 3
3. Ora Medium, F. Montgomery, Peterborough 2 2 2 2
4. Grey Eagle, T. J. Foreman, Dunnville 5 3 4 5
Yankee Bingen, E. G. Martin, Toronto 6 6 5 4
Lucky Lou, Wm. Elmhurst, Keene 7 5 6 6
Black Diamond, H. H. Ingram, Lidsay 4 7 7 7

Time — 2.22 1-4, 2.22 1-4, 2.22 1-4, 2.22 1-4.

BASEBALL

Hamilton Times: The Petes showed more pepper on the bases than any other team that has been seen in action here this season. Blount showed some speed on the bases by stealing second on two occasions and then performed a stunt which has never been pulled off here this season by stealing third, and to make matters worse he beat the throw a mile.

Several fast base runners have been seen in action around the ball park this season, but Blount surpassed all others in yesterday's struggle. He made Fisher look bad when he stole second on two occasions, and then stole third. Good job "Red" had his watch in the dressing room.

Ottawa Journal: The champs hit the road for their long stay with a mighty formidable bunch of sluggers in tow. Up to date just six of the Senators are stinging the pill over the coveted .300 mark, and three more are within a few points of it. In a club with fifteen players on the roster this shows up as about the heaviest hitting brigade in the circuit.

Shaughnessy's sudden rise has been about the most remarkable of the bunch. The big manager has found his hitting eye, and, strangely enough, it was during the series at Toronto, in which the club lost two of the three, that he commenced to wallop the ball. Since that he has been gaining rapidly. The Brantford series brought Lage back over the .300 mark, but dropped Bullock a few points below it.

Nill is still hitting consistently and Smykal marked his return to the club by three safe clouts in five times up, which brought him up over the .300. Petie Powers is yet 26 points below the mark, but the majority of his hits, when they come, are for extra bags, and usually mean runs. The Brantford series proved a regular gold mine to the champs for boosting the average, the Deneau twirlers yielding just 48 hits in four game.

Hamilton Spectator: Some were of the opinion that the Petes were a lively outfit. Lively with their tongues is about right. If they were all possessed of the earnestness which marks Dad Sewart's efforts, they wouldn't be down in eighth position. The veteran takes each game with all seriousness and is a good example to the younger element on th team.

The best ball player the Petes have got is Curly Blount, who is putting up a brilliant article of ball, even though weighed down with the managerial cares. Same cares are never light with a tail-end team. Miller, Byrne, King and Fox have all played good ball in the present series, but Welsh in left field, and Gorman, particularly the latter, have been very weak. Blount's greatest need seems to be that of a first baseman. Gorman is the worst seen here this year. Blount could do worse than give Art Dolan a trial.

Hamilton Spectator: Dudley's double came with two men on bases and one out in the thirteenth, and thereby hangs a tale. King, the Peterborough second baseman, had started the session by tripling to right field. The next batter was an easy out, but Fox drew a base on balls and stole second. This put it up to Miller, the hard-hitting catcher, and "Pop," as he has been christened, looked so dangerous as to warrant Dougherty passing him and taking a chance on the next batter, who was the pitcher. With three balls on him, however, Miller crossed things a bit by wading into what should have been his fourth ball and hitting it over first base at a mile a minute clip. Dudley stuck his gloved hand in the air and the ball hit the mitt and remained there. It was a simple matter then to relay the pill to second and then to home to double up King, who had started for the plate on the play.

STARKE SIGNED BY THE PETES

Tracey and Cresswell on the Hospital List so Spare Pitcher is Picked Up

Pitcher Eddie Starke has been added to the Petes' twirling staff. Starke was released by Hamilton on Tuesday and has been picked up by Manager Blount on account of the fact that both Cresswell and Tracey have very sore arms and Starke will be carried until the staff recovers. He was a winning pitcher with Guelph last year, winning 13 and losing 8 games, but has not done much this year. He may work in today's game against Brantford.

M. B. Cowan Lays Bare The False and Unfair Conservative "Wet" Map

At the Gillespie meeting in Selwyn last night, Mr. H. B. Cowan emphasized a deception which he said had been deliberately presented by Conservative speakers to deceive the temperance electors. Mr. Cowan attended the Thompson meeting at Grady's School House in the East Riding in the interests of the County Temperance Association.

"At the conclusion of the meeting," he said, "Mr. Thompson called a number of the men to him and produced something from his pocket.

I went up to see what it was, suspecting that there was something unusual being shown and found that it was the famous—infamous Mr. Kerr said—Whitney temperance map. On one side was shown the Province after 38 years of Liberal administration. Municipalities that were wet were marked black, and those that were dry were in white. There were only 26 white spaces to show what the Liberals had done for temperance in 38 years. On the other side it was almost entirely white to indicate what the Conservatives were supposed to have done. The men who saw the contrast were apparently deeply impressed. When Mr. Thompson saw us, he folded the map up and put it in his pocket. The Honorable Mr. Duff presented one at the meeting in the Opera House.

Fooling the Public.

I suspected that Mr. Thompson was trying to fool the public. I was in Toronto a day or two later, and I went to the office of the Dominion Alliance and asked them if they knew anything about a map which was being used in the campaign. They not only informed me that they had heard of it from all parts of the province, but they gave me this copy. Look at the duplicity employed. The Algonquin Park is shown all black under Ross and all white under Whitney. It never was black. It is nothing but a big natural park and never had a license in its boundaries.

Even Peterborough Misrepresented.

The one map shows Peterborough all black under Ross, and yet white under Whitney. The most of you men know that Ennismore, Smith and Douro went dry under Ross. Yet this map shows them wet under Ross and white under Whitney. The Conservatives introduced liquor into New Ontario giving licenses at various points, but the map does not show it.

It does not show anything to indicate the bars of Peterborough and their influence on the surrounding country.

"Do you think that men who prepared that map to fool you were playing square? Are you sure that having fooled you in that respect they will not fool you in others? How far can you trust them? There were 184 places dry under Ross, yet that map shows only 26.

These men fancied that they could produce this map to you who would not think of going to Toronto to investigate its reliability. You would not have time to follow it up to its source. And they thought that they could produce it and make an impression upon temperance men.

"Among The Breakers" Was A Splendid Success

Most Enjoyable Comedy Splendidly Presented by the Dramatic Club of the T. A. S. in the Lyceum Last Night.

AUDIENCE PLEASED

The comedy drama, "Among the Breakers," presented by the T. A. S. Dramatic Club in St. Alphonsus' Lyceum last night, was as usual with entertainments under the same auspices, a grand success. The large audience voted the programme one of the best of the season.

"Among the Breakers" is a very amusing offering and affords plenty of opportunities for comedy, and last night's cast took full advantage of every opening, the result being a very amusing performance that kept the audience convulsed. The work of the company was uniformly good, reflecting [illegible] Lillian Simons, who directed the rehearsals and was in charge of the training of the cast. The action was very smoothly carried and the delays and stage waits which usually mar amateur theatricals, were pleasingly absent.

Vincent McCabe in the exacting role of David Murray, keeper of Fairpoint Light, won many laurels by his clever portrayal of the difficult part. Miss Lillian Simons was as usual excellent in her work as Bess Starbright. Frank Grady as Larry, and Elric White as Scud, a coloured servant, were very amusing and provided much of the comedy of the play. Their funny actions and lines were responsible for frequent outbursts of laughter. Geo. Bain's work as the newspaper reporter was very clever. The other roles were in capable hands, and the whole performance was a treat.

Mr. Ed. Hanrahan and Mr. J. Minicolo contributed enjoyable solos between the two acts of the play. Miss Marion Gorman presided at the piano.

Following was the cast:

David Murray (Keeper of Fairpoint Light) ..... Vincent McCabe
Larry Divine (His Assistant) ..... Frank Grady
Hon. Bruce Hunter ..... Ed. Boyle
Clarence Hunter (His Ward) ..... Wm. Collins
Peter Paragraph (A Newspaper Reporter) ..... George Bain
Scud (Hunter's Coloured Servant.. Elric White
Minnie Dane (Hunter's Niece) ... Miss Josephine Collins
Bess Starbright (Cast up by the Waves) ..... Miss Lillian Simons
Mother Carey (A Reputed Fortune Teller) ..... Miss Annie Simons
Biddy Bean (An Irish Girl) ..... Miss Kathuleen Carr

The committee in charge were Messrs. Sam Houlihan, J. Hanrahan, J. Condin and V. McCabe.

COLLIDED WITH COLLIER

Examiner Special:

COWES, Eng., June 18 — Badly smashed in a fog by a collision with the collier "Etruria," in the English Channel, the British coasting steamer "Copsewood," arrived here to-day. Huge holes were torn in her hull and most of the bulwarks were carried away. The Etruria" was not badly damaged. This collision, closely following that of the Kaiser Wilhelm, in practically the same vicinity, has caused a great sensation.

Divers, after examining the latter steamer, say she can be repaired in a few weeks, but she narrowly escaped going down with all on board.

INTERESTING JUDGMENT IN INSURANCE CASE

The following is an extract from Canadian Insurance:

Chief Justice, R. (M. Meredith, dismissed on June 11th George Grainger's action against the Canadian Order of Home Circles in so far as plaintiff's injunction, which he asked for, restraining the order from putting into effect the new rate assessment passed last March, is concerned. Plaintiff is, however, awarded $100 damages. Mr. Grainger joined the order in 1898, taking a $2,000 policy. At seventy years of age he became entitled to $1,000, which, by a later regulation, was made payable in $100 annual instalments. From 1900 to 1913 plaintiff got such instalments. On the 1914 by-law it was alleged plaintiff must rejoin the association, owing to his present age, and pay a much increased premium.

The Chief Justice said the case was not one for an injunction. Plaintiff must stand by his bargain, whether wise or foolish. He might have maintained his rights by tendering the old assessment, were that the extent of his obligation, or defendants could have sued for a new assessment in the Division Court. The effect of the judgment means that the order is within its rights in increasing the assessment, but cannot cut off to members who pay such rates the life expectancy [illegible]

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE FARMERS' INSTITUTE

Successful Gathering Held at the Farm of Mr. J. H. Garbutt Yesterday—Officers are Elected

MR. COLLINS RESIGNED

The annual meeting of the West Peterborough Farmers' Institute was held yesterday afternoon at the farm of Mr. J. H. Garbutt, Smith Township, and was a most successful event. There was a large attendance and considerable interest was evidenced in the affairs of the Institute.

President C. E. Moore presided and opened the proceedings with a verbal report dealing with the activities of the Institute during the past year. President Moore urged upon those present to show greater interest. He referred to the regular and supplementary meetings and the short course in stock judging, the attendance at the latter not being as good as expected. Mr. Moore pointed out the need of stimulating the interest by adopting new methods in regard to meetings.

An interesting discussion followed, Messrs. Garbutt, Brown and Collins taking part.

The reports of the executive committee and finacial statement were presented as follows.

Secretary-Treasurer's Report.

Peterborough, May 30, 1914.

To the Members of West Peterborough Farmers' Institute:

Gentlemen and Ladies,—On behalf of the Executive committee and directors, I beg leave to submit to you for approval the 27th annual report of this Institute.

Since our last annual meeting, which was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. T. H. Graham, many important changes have taken place in our fair Dominion, and also in the Empire, of which we as Canadians, form an important part. We are enjoying peace ad plenty while other countries have had some very terrible wars. However, we hope the day is far distant when our people will have to engage in war and bloodshed.

We held our regular meetings at Ennismore and Lakefield on December 1st and 2nd. Our audiences were small owing largely to inclement weather. At the former place we had an audience of 40 in the afternoon and 160 in the evening. At Lakefield the number present was 55 in the afternoon and 150 in the evening. The delegates sent by the Department were Messrs. Paget and Denyes. In addition to these were our local speakers, Messrs. Smith, Peck and Elliott. McDowell and Gillespie. We had good meetings, although the attendance was small at both places.

The supplementary meetings were held on February 10th, 11th and 12th under very trying circumstances as the mercury was playing along at from 23 to 32 below zero. Hence our meetings were small, but they were good, and we cannot speak too highly of the delegates, Messrs. Murphy and James. At the 4th line the attendance was only one hundred, and thirty-eight at Stewart's Hall. We only held the evening meeting with thirty-five in attendance at Buckhorn, or Hall's Bridge. In the afternoon twelve were in attendance and in the evening eighteen came out.

Now, owing to our small meetings, as explained before, our membership has fallen off very materially, and we are at a loss to know how to increase it, as it is impossible for the executive to keep things going without the help of the other directors. We are sorry that the Women's Institute at Lakefield have discontinued holding their meetings.

We decided, along with East Durham and East and West Peterborough to run the Farmers' Institute excursion to Guelph, which we have done, but owing to the fact that the railways, making the rates for excursions so high, we had a very small excursion, and Prof. Creelman says it will be advisable to cease running them until the railway management realize that they are discriminating against their best friends and patrons.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

WM. COLLINS,
Sec.-Treas.

Messrs. Clayton Telford, A. B. Northey and T. D. Young, were added to the directorate.

Messrs. John Riddell and Jos. Barnard were elected auditors.

Mr. F. C. McRae, B.S.A., district representative at Norwood, Mr. Geo. A. Gillespie, ex-president of the Eastern Ontario Dairy Association, Mr. R. J. Soden, E.-A. Peck and County Treasurer F. M. Elliott, delivered interesting addresses.

After the business portion of the meeting was over an enjoyable picnic was held.

"DOWN THE BAR" SAYS ONE WHO HAS SUFFERED

Editor Examiner.

Sir.—I would like a little space in your paper to have a little chat with our dear Old Country friends. The Rose and the Thistle are loved by all in name; and through drink have been cursed. Many have seen father drunk, but what a dreadful sight to see mother drunk; also to see young girls drunk, and how many dear babies are born into the world drunk, and there is many a loving father dancing their darling little girl on his knee, growing up tender and loving, to be crushed and cruelly used by a drunken husband. Now, dear fathers and brothers, now is your time. Down the bar and protect your loved ones. This may be your last chance. God is calling us, one by one; sometimes by the thousand from one spot. I beg every father and young man of our City to give Mr. Gillespie this help, for this good cause and every Christian person will pray that the loving unseen hand will help them to do this good work. —Down the bar!

JOYS OF OUTDOOR LIFE AT "Y" CAMP

Opens at Sandy Point, Clear Lake, on June 29th for Two Weeks

Now is the time when the boy is longing to get away from the heat of the City, after the examinations are over. We see large numbers of boys going off to the woods, or sitting at the side of the river, enjoying the cool breezes and getting next to nature.

Without a doubt, a few weeks of a growing boy's time, spent as near the wild and nature as possible, affords not only a recreation, but a basis for healthful growth that places a boy far in advance of the one who in the same class does not have the same opportunity to live with Nature. The boy, who is not endowed with animal spirits is lacking in the first requisites for a perfect young manhood. He needs physical development. In the camp he is free to receive from Nature the benefits she delights to give. Let him dress in an athletic suit, minus shoes, if he wishes, and give his skin a chance to breathe the fresh air. You may call him an Indian if you wish, but let him gain the health and strength that only a free out-door life can give. It is well to encourage athletic field games that develop self control, but give him an opportunity to tramp through the woods looking for something. Give him a definite aim, whether a rock, or plant, or Indian relic. It little matters, but on his return to camp he will be physically tired and very hungry and possessed with the consciousness that he has learned something. The period for sleep should be long. A healthy boy, physically weary and not mentally fagged will, like the farmer boy, fall asleep at taps or before, and sleep till reveille is sounded, in the morning. For evening entertainments in camp there are concerts, camp fires, marshmallow roasts, mock trials and numerous other things.

In no station in life can a man come into closer touch with a boy than out in the open, away from the restrictions and formalities of City life. He can there help the boy to get along with his fellows, to adjust himself to circumstances, and to know that his life may be a factor for good in the world.

This year the Y. M. C. A. Boys' Camp promise to be the best in the history of the Association. The camp will be held at Sandy Point, Clear Lake, from June 29th to July 11th. Sandy Point has a safe beach for swimming and miles of water for boating and fishing. It has a good field for baseball and other sports, and is without a donot the best spot on the lakes for a boys' camp. This camp is for boys who are members of the Y.M.C.A. and who are twelve years of age or over.

The boys will be under the constant supervision of the officers of the Association, assisted by young men of character and ability, who are interested in the development of a manly character among boys.

The purpose is to give a boy a happy, healthy vacation, and an outdoor life brim full of fun and sport under the most wholesome influence and surroundings.

The cook house, which is a very important feature in camp, will be well looked after. A competent cook will be in charge, and an abundant supply of good, wholesome food will be supplied three times a day. We know the eating capacity of a boy in camp, especially after a long tramp, or a good swim, and we will have everything that a boy likes to eat.

The party will leave the Wolfe Street Wharf on Monday morning at 7.30 and go by steamer over the lift lock and arrive at Sandy Point about 11.00 a.m., when the boys will put up their tents and make everything ready for a long stay under canvas.

Any boy who wants to go to camp can get all necessary information from Mr. G. L. Galley, Boys' Secretary and as all applications must be in by Saturday, June 27th, boys who do intend to go would do well to come in as soon as possible.

MUNICIPAL FRANCHISE FOR THE MARRIED WOMAN

Proposed by Liberals in the Legislation Rejected by Reactionary Government

In these days of advanced rights for women when married women own property in their own right or jointly, with their husbands, it is contended that as a matter of justice, as a movement of progress, married women, who are qualified by property ownership, should have the right to vote on municipal questions, the same as spinsters and widows can now do.

Liberals in the Ontario Legislature proposed this self-evident act of justice, but they were voted down by the reactionary Ontario Government who take the ground that a reform, crying for inactment, should not he approached without there is a strong demand for it — without suffragette measures being adopted.

Yet there is a demand for this vote for married women.

In the City of Toronto Municipal Elections, in 1914, a vote for granting the Municipal Franchise to Married Women, otherwise qualified was taken. For 26,268; against 12,575.

Requests for this legislation have also come from Ottawa, Hamilton, Port Arthur, Fort William, Etobicoke, Bosanquet, Arthur, Tisdale, Medone, Artemesia,, Griffith and Matawatchan, Albemarle, Harley, Charlotteville, Bruce, East Zorra, Pittsburg, Blenheim, Strathroy, Ayr, Watford, Kincardine, Welland, Matheson, Keewatin, Gosfield, Biddulph, Paisley, St. Mary's, Onondaga, Galt, Chesley, Mitchell, Midland, Haileybury, Paris, Renfrew and Saice. Speaking on this subject Mr. Rowell said:

"With the possible single exception of Tax Reform we have not had in recent years a greater demand presented to this House in favour of any legislation than the demand in favour of this bill."

WHERE MARRIED WOMEN HAVE THE RIGHT.

Great Britain, and several European countries. Australia and New Zealand; the United States—9 States (complete women's franchise).

WHO IS OPPOSED?

1st—The Ontario Government, who voted it down.

2nd—The Liquor interests. Why? If the vote is extended to carried women in Municipal Elections it means the carrying of local option in many municipalities where, by reason of the three-fifths requirement, local option has been defeated by a few votes. Mr. Rowell:

"When the organized liquor interests of this Province undertake to oppose, and apparently successfully oppose, the extension of the Franchise to Married Women is it not time for every public-spirited citizen to arise and protest against such action, and against the Government yielding to the pressure to defeat this bill?"

CORPORATIONS VS. WOMEN.

At the Session of 1913 the Government, while denying to married women the right to vote in Municipal Elections on money bills, granted that right for the first time to Corporations.

OTHER LIBERAL PROPOSALS RE WOMEN'S VOTE REJECTED BY THE GOVERNMENT.

1. To extend the legislative franchise to those women qualified to vote in Municipal Elections.

2. The appointment of a select committee to consider the whole question of extending the Provincial Franchise to women and the Municipal Franchise to married women.

PERTINENT QUESTIONS FROM REV. MR. POGUE TO CONSERVATIVE CANDIDATE

Editor of The Examiner:

Sir,—I crave space in your columns in which to make reply to the letters of Elector and Mr. Soden in to-day's Review. I shall deal first with the letter of Mr. Soden. Mr. Soden repeats the misrepresentation of Mr. Gillespie's position which Elector made in his letter of a few days ago. I repeat again that Mr. Gillespie did sign all the questions submitted to Mr. Soden and that these questions included the one referring to the abolition of shop licenses. When the temperance deputation waited on him, the question was put to him blank: "Suppose the Whitney government should be returned to power, and suppose they should 'go one better' than the Rowell party and should introduce legislation including all three, bar-rooms, shop and club licenses, would you, if elected, even though your party should oppose you, vote with the Whitney government in favour of the abolition of the shop licenses?" His answer to this question was without equivocation: "Yes, I would, in that case, vote against my party in favour of the doing away of shops." I hope that is clear enough for Mr. Soden.

But again, in Mr. Gillespie's appeal to the electors which is being circulated in printed form, he includes the word "shops," Mr. Soden charges me with making a statement which is not correct. He gives the statement and then adds: "Mr. Gillespie did not say any such thing." Let us see which of us is right. I quote again from Mr. Gillespie's printed appeal, and which is scattered broadcast over the City and County. His words are:

"I will vote with either political party on ever possible occasion for the abolition of the open bar, club licenses, shop licenses, and all other legislation looking for the restriction and abolition of the liquor traffic."

Here is a something which I should like the Editor of The Review or Mr. Soden to explain. Mr. Soden quotes from a letter which appeared in the Review, written by the Temperance Association, and which appeared in The Examiner of the same date. In the original copy of that letter the word "shops" occurs. It also appears in the same letter in The Examiner. It does not appear in the article in The Review for whose insertion the Temperance people agreed to pay at the regular advertising rates. I should like an explanation and so would your readers, of this omission. Was it deliberate and of malice aforethought? Surely if politicians can descend to such methods as this it is nearly time that Christian men should enter politics and attempt to clean things up. Your readers will now see which of us is wrong, Mr. Soden or myself, in our statement of Mr. Gillespie's temperance creed.

And now for Mr. Soden's temperance position. Elector says that it is due to the electors that men of the standing of Mr. Peever and Mr. Pogue should place side by side in short paragraphs the aims of Sir James Whitney and Mr. Soden, and Mr. Rowell and Mr. Gollespie. If you, Mr. Editor, will publish these statements as I shall now give them, there will be no need to continue this discussion further, for temperance people will see how impossible, absurd and useless, for the temperance people of Peterborough, Mr. Soden's position is.

For the City of Peterborough Sir James Whitney's programme is twelve open bars, three shop and one club licensed. On two occasions, by an overwhelming majority, the temperance people of Peterborough have tried to change this condition, but have been hindered by the three-fifths handicap. Sir James Whitney refuses to do anything for us beyond what we now have. What is Mr. Soden's position? He stands for the abolition of all three, bar-room, shop and club licenses. But of what use is his stand for his constituency when he has no one in his party to stand with him? Sir James Whitney will not stand with him. He asks, therefore, that the temperance people of this City and riding send him up to Toronto as their representative to do a thing which he knows in his heart he is unable to do. I stand for the abolition of all three as does Mr. Soden, and for the abolition of the breweries and distilleries besides. But could I secure this legislation if I were sent to Toronto as your representative and as a member of the Whitney government? No more than Mr. Soden can secure that for which he now professes to stand.

If the temperance people vote for Mr. Soden they vote for a man, who, if elected, and who, if the Whitney government is returned to power, can do nothing to wipe out the twelve bars and the three shop and club licenses which exist in this City.

What now is the position of Mr. Rowell and Mr. Gillespie? If Mr. Gillespie is elected and Mr. Rowell returned to power all three drinking places will be wiped out in the City of Peterborough. Its bar-room and club licenses will be wiped out by special legislation introduced for that purpose. And its shop licenses will be wiped out by a straight majority vote by the citizens of Peterborough. Mr. Gillespie can therefore redeem his promise when he goes to Toronto, for he goes there as a member of a government whose legislation for the City of Peterborough covers all three evils and will succeed in wiping out all three.

And what about all Ontario? If Rowell is elected 1300 bar-rooms will be closed, 57 club licenses and fully one-fourth of the 215 shops now in existance, would be wiped out. There has been a great deal of misrepresentation on the part of many of your correspondents and in the Tory press, on Mr. Rowell's relation to shops. Rowell's policy will reduce the number of shops we now have. We have now 1,300 bars, 57 clubs and 215 shops engaged in this deadly work of making drunkards. Does any sane man believe that a reduced number of shops with bar-rooms and club licenses wiped out can do as much evil as 215 shops, plus 1,300 bars, plus 57 drinking clubs? Come, Mr. Soden, be honest and answer me this question.

Rebt. Pogue.

AT YOUR SERVICE

This is the keynote of a page advertisement a large electric light corporation is running in the newspapers of its home city in the United States.

It frankly sets forth the various forms of service this company has to sell to the householder and business man.

It shows how it can be made profitable to the users.

It is cited only as an instance of the great awakening of public service companies in fact as well as in name.

And as such they are quick to recognize that one of the most potential arms in constructive public service is the advertising in live daily newspapers.

POWER COMMITTEE HOLDS SESSION

By-Law for Expropriation Proceedings Has Been Prepared

The Power Committee held a meeting last night, with Aldermen Johnston (chairman), Dobbin, Anderson, Langford, and City Solicitor Gordon present, and a few matters in connection with the approaching taking over of the property of the Peterborough Light and Power Company by the city were discussed.

Mr. Gordon reported that he had drawn up the by-law for expropriation, and had submitted it to Mr. Cowan (the city's solicitor in Toronto), who still had the proposed by-law in his possession. A letter was to hand from Mr. Cowan, suggesting that it might be advisable to have the list of the company's property, which was given the city, and which is now in the hands of the Hydro Commission, further checked, but it was decided at the meeting last night that nothing further in this respect would be undertaken just at present. Already two engineers, acting for the city and Hydro Commission, had gone over the company's property and the Hydro Commission would further check it, so that should the matter come to be arbitrated upon (as it is most likely to) the city will know just what items they wish excluded.

As the matter stands now the city can pay into court or to the company a sum of about $100,000 and take over the company's plant. The Hydro Commission after inspecting the list of the company's property will put a value upon it, and if this does not suit the company the matter will go into arbitration. Then after the arbitration the city will pay the company whatever extra (over the $100,000) is due them and the matter is settled. If the city pays the money into court they will have to pay the interest on the value of the plant from the time they take it over to the time he arbitration is concluded, but if they pay the $100,000 direct to the company, then they will pay interest only on the sum in excess of that amount. It was therefore considered advisable by the committee to pay the money to the credit of the company, pending the arbitration. Then if the arbitrators fix a sum above $100,000 the city will pay the company the difference with interest on that difference. Thus by paying the money direct to the company they will save the interest on the $100,000 for that period of time between the date they take over the plant and the date that the remainder of the money is paid.

City Not Liable.

There came before the Power Committee last night the question as to whether the city was liable for damages or not in the case of Isaac Watson who was hurt in trimming one of the magnitite lamps on George street. Watson in doing so received a shock that caused him to fall and sustain a fractured hip. Mr. Gordon's opinion was that as Watson did not use his rubber gloves, as he had not received instructions, to trim the lamp in question, and as he was employed by Greer, the city was not liable.

It came out, however, that the man who was hurt is not financially in very good circumstances, and it was decided at last night's meeting that if Watson would offer to release the city and Mr. Greer from any further liability in the matter they would make arrangements to have his doctor's bill, hospital bill and his wages for a certain length of time paid. Mr. Greer expressed the opinion that this would satisfy Watson, and the matter was left in the hands of the City Solicitor, Alderman Johnston and Mr. Greer.

REDUCTION IN COST OF LIVING

Examiner Special:

OTTAWA, June 18.—The Department of Labour's figure for the month of May shows a slight reduction in the cost of living in Canada. The index number for the last month was 136.2 as against 136.8 for the preceding month. As compared with May of last year, however, the cost of living is still higher than it should be, the index figure for May, 1913, being 134.5 or nearly two full points lower than last month.

COUNTRY NEEDS RAIN AT ONCE

Hay Crop is Practically a Failure in Most Districts—Others are Suffering.

ANXIETY IS FELT

The country around Peterborough needs rain and needs it right away. The hay crop is already a failure, according to reports, alsike and timothy have suffered severely and other crops demand moisture right away. The skimpy hay crop is the worst feature of the present conditions. Last year it was decidedly short and apparently the conditions are worse right now. Frost heaved many fields of alsike and the decent-looking timothy fields are rather few and far between. The city dweller does not appreciate the present circumstances. A dry spell is usually met in July or August, but this is only the middle of June, and there has not been a decent mist in a long time. Hence, there is uneasiness in the hay belt, and there is considerable anxiety felt as the days slip by without the expected downpour. If the dry spell continues unbroken much longer the situation will assume real seriousness, in the general farm crops.

SPLENDID ADDRESS TO LOCAL WOMEN

Mrs. Stevens of the W.C.T.U. Gave Interesting Discourse in Y.M.C.A. Yesterday

A largely attended and most enthusiastic meeting of the ladies of Peterborough was held yesterday afternoon in the interests of temperance at the Y.M.C.A. hall. Mrs. Stevens, Provincial President of the W.C.T.U., delivered an address of an extremely interesting character. The hall was well filled with ladies, who followed Mrs. Stevens' remarks with the most attentive hearing, and at the conclusion asked questions in regard to several points.

The president of the local W.C.T.U., Mrs. Wilson Taylor, occupied the chiar and introduced the speaker.

In the course of her remarks Mrs. Stevens referred to the public statement of Earl Grey, during his tenure of office as Governor-General of Canada, to the effect that the future of the Dominion depended upon the mothers and school teachers of the land. In regard to temperance, Mrs. Stevens stated that she strongly approved of Mr. Rowell's policy of "Abolish the bar." Abolish the bar, she said, and the greater part of the evil will be done away with. It will then be an easy matter to get rid of the balance.

At the conclusion 1500 leaflets were distributed, relative to tax reform, municipal franchise for married women and "Abolish the bar." Among many other questions asked, one woman stated that Conservatives were stating that Mr. Rowell was receiving money from the liquor ships and that was why his policy did not eliminate them. To this Mrs. Stevens gave an emphatic denial, stating that Mr. Rowell has always been a strong temperance man as well as a Christian of the highest principles.

A vote of thanks was tendered Mrs. Stevens, it being moved by Miss Aldridge and seconded by Mrs. Peever.

SUCCESSFUL MEETINGS FOR MR. ANDERSON

Liberal Candidate is Being Enthusiastically Received in the East

On Tuesday Mr. W. A. Anderson held a successful meeting at the hall, in Douro Township, when Reeve Walsh occupied the chair, and interesting addresses were delivered by Messrs. Crowe, the Candidate, Ald. J. J. Duffus and F. D. Kerr.

A successful meeting was brought to a close with cheers for the King, the Candidate, and the Rowell policy.

On Wednesday evening Mr. Anderson held another very successful meeting in the Village of Warsaw, in Dummer Township, when a large audience were present to hear addresses of F. E. Ellis, the Candidate, W. A. Anderson, and Rev. Mr. Farewell of Toronto. The chair was occupied by Reeve Darling.

A most successful meeting was brought to a close by the customary cheers for the King and the Candidate, and N. W. Rowell.

Mr. Anderson is pursuing a very active and vigorous campaign and is obtaining the marked approval of the electors.

good enough to run? The Gooderham-Woorts distillery is east of the Don, and Mr. George H. Gooderham would not stand for a supporter of Whitney opposing the liquor traffic.

A Test of Sincerity.

And you hear a few men say Rowell is not sincere. Suppose one of Peterborough's liquor men were to say to another: "I'm going to vote for Rowell; he's not sincere." That man's family would have him examined by a committee and incarcerate him in an asylum.

You find prominent Conservatives leaving their party on this issue because they feel they cannot join hands with the licensed victuallers and their allies.

A Man to Respect?

I have the greatest respect, Mr. Kerr said, for the man who says after years of thought, "I have found the licensed bar to be a blessing and a benefit to myself and my family." But I seldom see any who can honestly say that. Has any man derived from your side of the bar anything but a skinful of booze and headache the next day? Where is the man who when he looks his children in the face can take his boy on his knee and say, "My boy, your father's anxious to see the time when you arrive at an age when you can accompany the old man to Peterborough, put your foot on the iron railing, your elbow on the bar, and toss off a few 'whiskies'?" How many of you men have said or intend to say that to your boys?

Mr. Soden has fallen into the same class Mr. Thompson of the East Riding fell into. Mr. Thompson told his electors he would vote against the three-fifths clause. When he arrived in Toronto he looked from the Government's 70 to the Opposition 18, and decided there was no chance of hurting Sir James. So he made the Opposition's number 19. Sir James never blinked an eye, but Mr. Thompson has never had the nerve to do anything like that since.

During the past two or three years he has helped vote down advanced temperance legislation, and Mr. Soden has been hustling to cover on the question of temperance even faster than Mr. Thompson. He has gone so for already as to the enthusiastic over the three-fifths clause.

Our allotted time in this world is very short. Is there any reason why we should refrain from helping to make the world a little better place for those who are to come after us. You have that opportunity now. You also have, perhaps, the chance for a little cheer on June 29. Oh; the futile cheers of a politician. I hope that no man here will ever live to regret voting for such a motive, that none of his dear ones will ever be struck down by the influence of the liquor traffic which he would help to perpetuate.

There is not a man here who has not had it come close to him in the persons of his intimate friends. In some cases it was a father, with another it was a son, again it was a brother. It doesn't matter where we go. All over this province this traffic has brought sorrow, sadness and desolation. On June 29 you can vote to wipe out 1,300 licensed bars which have been pouring out this influence over the province. Think of the influence that would be on the rest of the Dominion.

In Mr. Gillespie we have a man who has been tried and found trustworthy. There is no reason why we should falter behind him.

We know his leader, Mr. Rowell, who refused to lead his party until he was given a free hand to extend his ideas of moral reform.

Can't Deceive Yourself.

I cannot quarrel with the man who exercises his vote honestly and conscientiously on this question, who can decide to keep the liquor traffic flourishing. He may deceive his family and his friends, but down in his heart, back there behind his wool-covered eyes, he can't deceive himself.

CHARMING GARDEN PARTY

On St. John's Church Grounds

Last evening a very charming party was given on the pretty grounds surrounding the venerable looking Anglican Church of St. John on Hunter Street.

This function had been promoted by the ladies comprising the Church Womans' Association of that church and was a complete success from a society point of view, and, it is hoped, also from a financial aspect, as any profits arising therefrom are to be devoted to the reparation of the Sunday school buildings, in close proximity to the church.

At about five o'clock the proceedings commenced. There were the usual 'properties' appertaining to a function of this class; e.g., a large Marquee, where ice cream, candies and various other light and acceptable refreshments were dispensed.

The Band of the 57th Regiment (Peterborough Rangers) enlivened the proceedings with some bright, tuneful music, under the conductorship of Lieutenant Gliddon.

The cold snap of the three previous days had, in part, given way to a warmer wave, the result being that an altogether pleasant evening was spent by the somewhat considerable number of those in attendance.

At 10 o'clock the strains of the Nationals Anthem "God Save the King" were heard, and the party slowly dispersed to their respective homes, evidently well pleased with their evening's entertainment.

U.S. Explorers Soon Start for Alberta Bad Lands.

NEW YORK, June 18. — The American Museum of Natural History is sending a number of exploration parties to the South-West, the West, and the North-West to gather data, and specimens for its exhibition halls. A recent expedition organized by the museum will invade the Red Deer River region of Alberta, Canada, soon in quest of fossil dinosaurs, and will be under the leadership of Barnum Brown, who has been conducting exploring parties through the Bad Lands for the past four years. He has unearthed a large number of valuable "finds" in the canons of the Alberta country, placing the museum in the front rank of natural history institutions in the world, so far as the cretaceous dinosaur is concerned. This summer Barnum Brown will conduct his fifth expedition to the Bad Lands.

One of his lieutenants, P. C. Kaisen, of the American museum staff, will leave for the fossil fields this week to begin preliminary operations there, and to overhaul the houseboat, which the explorers will navigate in hunting for fossils in the summer months. A motor boat will also be operated in the Red Deer country. According to present plans the dinosaur hunters will explore this season the Belly River (or Judith) formation, and the vicinity of Stevesville, Alberta. It is a fertile field for fossils, and in the opinion of Barnum Brown one of the greatest in the world. The explorers located several important "fields" in this region last year, but discontinued work upon the close of the prospecting season. These skeletons of ancient dinosaurs, whose age is reckoned at 8,000,000 years or so, will be unearthed, and added to the collections gathered for the American museum.

ANCIENT ORDER OF FORESTERS IN PETERBORO TO-DAY

District Excursion From Lake Shore Towns—Splendid Parade This Afternoon.

Four hundred and fifty people from Trenton, Belleville, Port Hope, Oshawa, Cobourg, Campbellford, Bowmanville, Millbrook and intermediate stations invaded the City this morning to celebrate the Annual Field Day of the Ancient Order of Foresters District No 5.

Two special trains from Belleville and Port Hope brough' the excursionists to the City this morning. The train from Port Hope arrived at the G. T. R. station this morning about half-past ten o'clock, and on board were about three hundred Foresters and their friends from Bowmanville, Port Hope, Cobourg and Oshawa. Two Bands, the Dominion Piano and Organ Co's., from Bowmanville, and the Regimental Band from Port Hope were included in the number that lined up on the station platform after the arrival of the train and both musical organizations were fully represented.

On the arrival of the train, those who were not members of the Ancient Order of Foresters dispersed to different parts of the City, while the "brethren" formed into a line and marched from the station to the George Street Wharf, where they boarded a steamer for a trip over the lift lock. The parade was a long and impressive one. Headed by the Port Hope Band the Foresters, in full regalia, and with badges and girdles signifying their connection with the Order, paraded along Charlotte Street to George, and south on George Street to the wharf. The band of the Dominion Piano and Organ Company of Bowmanville was also in the line of march and both Bands dispensed martial music. The procession attracted a good deal of attention.

The train from Belleville pulled up at the Station about half-past eleven, and while there were nearly two hundred passengers on board the number was decidedly disappointing. It was reported at local headquarters that 1,600 tickets for the excursion had been sold, so that over five hundred at the very least were expected. Those who came on the Belleville train swelled the number of visitors to about four hundred and fifty. The excursionists, who arrived on the latter train were taken over the lift lock this afternoon.

Early this afternoon a grand parade of all the visiting lodges of Foresters was held. The parade formed up at Central Park and marched to the Riverside Park, and in it were three splendid bands—the 57th Regimental Band, the Dominion Piano and Organ Co's. and the Port Hope Band. In the parade were Mayor Buller and the two candidates for the Legislature, Mr. R. J. Soden and Mr. G. A. Gillespie. At Riverside Park a splendid programme of sports was run off, every event being keenly contested and handsome prizes being offered for the winners of every event.

The excursionists brought with them to Peterborough a large number of cameras, and as the weather was ideal they will leave the City with a large number of snapshots, as souvenirs of their visit here.

Saw Dust Is Burning Again

The sawdust at the end of London Street, just across the river, in East City is proving somewhat of a problem for the Fire Brigade. A portion of the brigade, under the Assistant Chief went to the sawdust area about 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and the firemen remained there, using all the water available, until 10 o'clock last night. This morning, early, they were on the job again, and will likely spend the greater part of the day there. It is not known how the pile became ignited, but whatever may have been the cause it is taking a great deal of hard work to put it out.

At 12.30 yesterday afternoon a fire broke out in Carey's blacksmith shop, at the corner of Hunter and Aylmer Streets. The fire of the forge had caught the wall and burned right through to the roof of the building. The Fire Brigade were called and extinguished it with one line of hose. There was little damage done.

THE CANADA TEMPERANCE ACT BEATEN

Majority Against in Muskoka Was About 400 Votes

BRACEBRIDGE, June 19. — The Canada Temperance Act was defeated in Muskoka by a majority which is estimated at about four hundred votes. The largest majorities against the act were in the townships while in the incorporated towns and villages the tendency was in favor of the act. Bracebridge gave a narrow majority of four for the act. Huntsville gave a majority of 42 for the act, Port Carling the large majority of 84 for. Gravenhurst defeated the proposal by sixteen votes.

Temperance organizers, when asked last night concerning the result, said the light vote for the act throughout the rural sections was explained by the fact that voters were unwilling to lose time on this polling when the provincial elections were so near at hand. They had expected the contest in January last.

The results in so far as completed at present are as follows:

Bracebridge town—Ward 1, 35 for, 59 against; Ward 2, 78 for, 42 against; Ward 3, 59 for, 54 against; Ward 4, 50 for, 57 against. Total: 217 for, 213 against.

Township of Cardwell—Majority for, 64.

Gravenhurst—Ward 1, majority against, 16.

Huntsville—Ward 1, majority for, 42.

Townships Medora and Wood—Subdivision No. 1, 24 for, 10 against; Subdivision No. 2, 3 for, 8 against; Subdivision No. 3, 12 for, 31 against; Subdivision No. 4, 11 for, 4 against; Subdivision No. 5, 27 for, 13 against; Subdivision No. 7, 12 for, 15 against.

Township of Monck — Subdivision No. 3, majority 13 against; Subdivision No. 4, 13 for, 37 against.

Township of Oakley — For 21, against 31.

Village of Port Carling—Majority for, 8.

Township of Stephenson—Subdivision No. 1, majority against, 72; subdivision No. 2, majority against, 2.

Townships of McLean and Ridout —Subdivision No. 1, 36 for, 31 against.

Township of Watt — Subdivision No. 1, majority against, 36; subdivision No. 2, 37 for, 39 against.

Township of Gibson — 3 for, 15 against.

PREMIER ENDORSED BERRY

ST. JOHN, N.B., June 19.—When the royal commission inquiry into the Dugal charges against Premier Flemming and the Hon. H. F. McLeod adjourned for luncheon yesterday there had been disclosed up to date payment of $60,197.50 into what is called a campaign fund, by holders of crown land lumber areas in New Brunswick.

W. H. Berry had been the one to broach the matter to those who testified up to yesterday, but in the morning E. R. Teed, a commercial traveler, was brought into the evidence as having approached F. E. Sayre for a contribution.

Arthur Hilyard, manager of the Dalhousie Lumber Co., of which he said the International Pulp & Paper Co. are real owners, said they leased 423 1-2 miles. He said Berry asked for a contribution to a campaign fund, but the president, Mr. Stern, refused to pay. He did not contribute, but his licenses were renewed.

J. W. Brankley, manager of the Miramichi Lumber Co., a subsidiary of the International Pulp & Paper Co., said the company's president would not and did not pay the $15 a mile asked for. He said Berry wanted him to be treasurer of the fund. He said he and Berry went to Premier Flemming's room in a Fredericton hotel. Flemming and Teed were there. Flemming went out, but first said: "Anything Dr. Berry tells you about this man is all right." The witness understood he meant Teed. Berry introduced him to Teed and said: "This is the man you are to give the money to." Witness said he received eight parcels from lumbermen. He gave them to Mr. Teed.

F. C. Beatty told of the biggest payment yet. He said in his evidence that $20,000 had been paid by Stetson, Cutler & Co. for themselves and other affiliated companies.

Before adjournment Mr. Carvell said Berry had been communicated with by telephone, and there was a reasonable hope that he may come to give evidence.

Salvaging Contract Let.

QUEBEC, June 19.—The contract to salvage the Empress of Ireland has been let to the Canadian Salvage Association.

It is expected that the salvaging will take two months, and it is not yet decided whether attempts will be made to raise the hull after the valuables and bodies have been removed from her.

TROUBLE IS FEARED.

Mexicans Around Vera Cruz Bitter Against the U. S.

VERA CRUZ, June 19.—A distinct change of feeling between Mexicans and Americans was noticeable yesterday morning at the railway gap at Tempaderas, where the train from Mexico City stops daily. The Mexicans are advancing their outposts, and the Mexican commander yesterday morning was openly discourteous to Capt. Thomas Manderson, jr., of the Seventh Infantry, in charge of the American outposts.

Military men here fear trouble at any time, for they know that the Mexicans are strengthening their positions in the neighborhood.

President Huerta has cancelled all the trains from Mexico City except those over the Mexican Railway to Vera Cruz. Other branches are running only military train. These carry a few passengers, but no freight except food.

Guadalajara is isolated, the railroad having been cut on both sides of the city.

Landowners in the States of Guanajuato, San Luis Potosi, Aguascalientes, and Jalisco have risen in arms against Huerta on account of the depredations committed by the Federal forces. Some of the landowners who have arrived here says they were forced to take this action in order to protect their properties.

Villa Sends Ultimatum.

EAGLE PASS, Texas, June 19.—That Gen. Villa has presented an ultimatum to Gen. Carranza, demanding the absolute separation of the civil and military branches of the Constitutionalist Government, was the substance of despatches received at Constitutionalist headquarters in Piedras Negras yesterday.

A committee of three officers was said now to be in conference with Gen. Carranza at Saltillo presenting Villa's plan.

No Women's Vote in Synod.

LONDON, Ont., June 19.—As was the case last year, the Anglican Synod of Huron, in annual session here, again yesterday denied women a voice in the vestries of the church. A motion providing for the enfranchisement of women, so far as vestry deliberations are concerned, was introduced by John Ransford of Clinton, but was defeated by the following vote: Clerical vote for 77, against 46; lay vote for 55, against 37. A two-thirds vote was necessary.

New Editor Appointed.

TORONTO, June 19. — Commissioner McKie of the Salvation Army made an announcement to the headquarters staff yesterday, to the effect that Lt.-Col. John Bond, new editor of The British War Cry, has been appointed by Gen. Booth as editor-in-chief of the army's publications in Canada.

IN AN UGLY MOOD.

Hindus on Komagata Not Pleased With Predicament.

OTTAWA, June 19.—The arrival of the two Japanese cruisers at Vancouver to-day is awaited by the Government with no small degree of anxious expectancy. The Government is firmly resolved that the Hindus on the steamer Komagata Maru shall not be allowed to land, and also that there be no violence or disorder if it can be avoided. The fact that the Hindus, however, are in an ugly mood, not only towards the immigration officials, but also towards the Japanese captain and crew of the ship, and to some extent towards Gurdit Singh, the charterer of the vessel, makes a serious situation.

The Government cannot very well do anything, but will be very glad if the arrival of the Japanese cruisers leads to some arrangement by which the troublesome ship will leave Canadian shores.

Rifles Landed For Nationalists.

DUBLIN, June 19.—Large quantities of rifles and ammunition were landed during the night on the Connemara coast, in the west of Ireland, for the Nationalist Volunteers. The consignments are supposed to have been brought by mysterious vessels, which had been sighted cruising along the coast for a week past, but had refused to reply to any signals.

Torpedo boats have been ordered to patrol the coast to prevent further gun-running. The rifles are said to be of the latest American make.

Mersey Skeptical

He Places Little Weight on Story of Faulty Steering

QUARTERMASTER'S CHARGE

QUEBEC, June 19.—Assertions by James Francis Galway, a quartermaster, that the Empress of Ireland did not steer well, that her wheel jammed only a few hours before the collision which sent her to the bottom of the St. Lawrence on May 29, that she swerved badly in the river and that the crew of the steamer Alden could verify these statements, and the denials of these claims by responsible officers of the lost liner made yesterday's session of the Dominion commission enquiring into the wreck one of quickly changing and gripping interest from start to finish.

Lord Mersey seemed alone among those in court in his decision not to be excited by the promise and the ultimate production of Galway's evidence. He began by stating that he did not attach much importance to it, and wound up by putting questions to the witness who was in charge of the wheel of the liner just a few hours before she went down which seemed to indicate that the current of the St. Lawrence was responsible for the Empress' misbehavior, as his lordship styled Galway's description of the ship's disobedience of the helm.

Evidence to rebut Galway's story and also the suggestion made during the day that the C. P. R. had tried to get him to leave the country before testifying, was supplied by John Murphy, the quartermaster who relieved him, and who contradicted his statement about warning him that the ship was steering badly, and was also supplied by Adelard Bernier, the pilot in charge of her when the jamming was said to have occurred, and several of the Empress' officers.

Galway got a severe grueling from Lord Mersey and Butler Aspinall, K.C., counsel for the C.P.R., but though very much flustered, as might be expected, he stuck to the main part of his accusations against the Empress' steering gear.

Lord Mersey asked Galway why, when he considered the steering gear of a ship the "main asset in life saving," he had not mentioned the alleged defect in the Empress apparatus in giving his story to the C. P. R. lawyers and to a Montreal newspaper. His lordship also scored Counsel Haight for what he said was an attempt on the part of the fourteen legal battery up their sleeves.

Late in the afternoon Lord Mersey initiated a conference among the lawyers and it was decided that the charges of cowardice lodged against some of both the Empress and Storstad crews were unfounded.

Before the question of the vessel's steering qualities came up the C.P.R. lawyers had introduced Robert Henry Brenan and Robert Liddell of the engineering staff of the Empress to corroborate Captain Kendall's statement that after leaving Father Point the ship had been ordered "full speed ahead," "stop and full speed astern," and then "stop." Haight, in cross-examination, indicated a skepticism about the officers' statement that the ship was put from full speed ahead to full speed astern in three minutes, though the engineers were emphatic in claiming that it had often been done before.

Captain Walsh of the C. P. R. said that Galway, after the collision occurred, so he had heard, rushed to his room to get his life belt and not to the boats, as it was his duty to do. He was the one man who had failed.

Mr. Haight said he was informed that Galway went to his room to awaken his companions.

BIG FREIGHTER LAUNCHED.

New "J. H. G. Hagarty" Takes To the Water at Collingwood.

COLLINGWOOD, Ont., June 19.—More than 10,000 persons witnessed the launching here yesterday afternoon of the steamship "J. H. G. Hagarty." Amid the screech of whistles and cheers of spectators the giant freighter slid slowly down the ways and plunged with a tremendous splash into a dock containing 16 feet of water. The vessel, which is the largest inland waterway craft in the Dominion, was built by the Collingwood Shipbuilding Co., Ltd., for the St. Lawrence and Chicago Steam Navigation Co., to replace the steamship Carruthers, which was lost in Lake Huron last November. The owners yesterday declared the vessel the last word in the construction of bulk freighters, and said they had spared no expense to make her the best of her kind, and also to assure the greatest amount of safety possible.

While they preserved the French, they should also learn English. That would benefit both Canada and themselves.

SYLVIA GETS HER WAY.

She Forces Premier Asquith To Meet a Deputation.

LONDON, June 19. — Miss Sylvia Pankhurst, the militant suffragette leader, was released last evening from Holloway Jail. She had been imprisoned since June 10, when she was arrested while participating in a procession from the east end of London to Westminster, where she had intended to demand an interview with Premier Asquith.

Premier Asquith has capitulated to the demands of the suffragettes, and has consented to receive a deputation of east end working women in Downing street Saturday morning.

Miss Sylvia Pankhurst's attempt to carry out her threat of a hunger strike at the entrance to the House of Commons unless the Premier yields to the demand that he listen to a delegation of women, was [illegible] by prematurely [illegible] the Premier's decision. The efforts of James Keir Hardie, the Socialist Independent member of Parliament, and George Lansbury, an ex-member, with the Premier, helped the militant suffragette leader to bring him to his knees.

The victory is a distinct one, because Sylvia Pankhurst was arrested about a week ago for attempting to lead a procession of east end women to Westminster to demand the audience which Mr. Asquith has now promised.

When Holloway Jail opened its doors last night to release Miss Pankhurst, who was weak and pale after her eighth successive hunger strike, but still determined, she drove to Westminster in a motor car with a woman chauffeur, and rebuffed Mr. Keir Hardie's efforts to persuade her to go home. She was sitting on the steps of the central entrance to Parliament House, propped up with cushions and supported in the arms of friends, when Mr. Lansbury came out with the news that Premier Asquith had surrendered.

"THE TERMS OF SURRENDER"

By Louis Tracy

"No. Why should we? We have come close on three hundred miles; another fifty, or less, should see us close to the frontier of Chili."

"But you may sacrifice your lives."

"No Indians can stop us—let me assure you of that, straight away."

"Won't you let me mark your maps? I can supply every detail with sufficient accuracy."

"Allow me to suggest that I am a business man, Mr. Power, and I mean this expedition to pay its way."

"Ah! It is gold you really have in mind, then? But there is no gold."

"Now you are talking nonsense. We have found it."

"You have found alluvial gold. There are few fast-running streams in the world which do not contain gold in that form. The denudation of the Andes is so extraordinarily rapid that it would be a singular fact if this river did not yield float gold. But the metal is not, and cannot be, present in paying quantities. The primary sources of gold are reefs, either in quarts or in metalliferous veins of galena and the various pyrites. There are none of these in the lower Andean range, which is composed almost exclusively of crystalline schist with a slight blend of basalt. I am a mining engineer, Mr. Sinclair, and I know what I am talking about. If you could put the entire southern Cordillera through a mill, you would not secure a pennyweight of gold to the ton."

Sinclair, of course, could not appreciate the remarkable way in which Power's tongue loosened in dealing with the familiar jargon of his profession. For the time he was far more concerned with what he deemed a real marvel.

"A mining engineer, and your name is Power! Surely you can't be the Mr. Power who sailed from San Francisco to Valparaiso on the Panama seven years ago?" he cried.

"I am."

"But, excuse me, there must be some mistake. My daughter, Marguerite Sinclair, who was on board that vessel, spoke of a Mr. Power; but he was a young man. Of course, time does not stand still for any of us; but this Mr. Power would now be thirty-five, or thereabouts."

"That is my age."

"Thirty-five?"

"Yes."

Sinclair bent forward and peered into his visitor's eyes; it was difficult to detect any play of expression in the bearded face. "Are you really the man my daughter met on that steamer?" he asked, and there was a note of solemnity, almost of awe, in his voice. This anchorite seemed nearer sixty than thirty-five.

"Yes, I remember her perfectly—a charming girl. She had suffered some injury to her face during an attack by Indians on her father's ranch. Of course, you are her father?"

"Yes. But tell me, Mr. Power—have you any notion of the extraordinary appearance you present? You force me to be blunt. You look like a man nearly twice your age."

"Lend me a mirrors and a razor, and I shall remove a decade or two. Remember, I have lived as an Indian for seven years."

"I'll do more than that. I can give you some clothes and boots. God bless my soul! how surprised Meg will be! I recollect now she told me that her Mr. Power walked with a limp. But it's a far cry to Carmeu. I——"

"Carmen, did you say?"

"Yes, why?"

Power had suddenly recalled the name of the stuffy little tramp on which he set forth from Valparaiso. What memories crowded in on him, what a record of suffering and achievement! Seven years! He knew now that his pilgrimage was ended. The great world had thrown wide its gates again. He could go back to his own country, his own people. His sacrifice had been accepted. He was absolved. He thought of his mother, of Nancy, and tears glistened in his eyes. He believed that some lesion had been lifted off his brain. He looked at the great facts of existence with a new and saner vision. He almost heard a vibrant and majestic voice saying to his spirit "Go, and sin no more! Thy faith hath made thee whole!"

He rose, and was dimly aware that Sinclair was pressing him to stay. There was so much to discuss yet, so many vital matters to weigh and debate; but he managed to explain that he must depart now, and would return later.

"You don't understand that you are here on sufferance," he said. "I had to stretch my domination to the utmost—and I am a king among these Indians—to stop them from attacking you. Your life, and the lives of every man in your party, are not worth a day's purchase if my influence is weakened. I cannot tell what evil counsel may be given to these wild folk in my absence. If I show myself, and assure them that I am safe, and that you mean to retreat almost at once, they will be satisfied, and bloodshed will be averted."

Sinclair glanced at him curiously, but did not seek further to prevent his immediate departure.

"You must act as you think best, Mr. Power," he said amicably; "but I certainly cannot promise to retreat merely because a few wretched Indians bar the path."

"I will convince you, never fear," came the prompt assurance.

"But I am not the only skeptic. There are others to consult. I have two partners in this enterprise, and one of them is a mining expert."

"Leave everything to me, and make no forward move till I come back. You can expect me in a couple of hours."

He could say no more. He was choking. It was a mere pretence that he must conciliate the Indians, who, he knew, were watching every move in the camp with the eyes of eagles. What he really feared, in that moment of revulsion and self-enlightenment, was that he might break down and cry like a child.

He strode away, aflame with the fire of longing for communion with his fellow-men. The tumult of emotion evoked by contact with the expedition startled and dismayed him; but he had not gone two hundred yards up the valley before a sibilant hiss restored his scattered wits. He was passing an Indian outpost, and the faithful creatures were warning him of their presence. He signed that he was going to the village, and passed on. He had seen no one. Not a leaf moved among the trees; but the watchers were there, and would remain.

Much against the grain, though there was no help for it, he pacified the head men of the tribe by the statement that he must remain in the encampment that night; indeed, he did not purpose leaving the invaders until they had returned on their tracks. He dared not risk telling his "subjects" that he meant to abandon his empire. Their fierce passions were easily aroused, and a prompt massacre of Sinclair and his followers would be the certain result of a fanatical outbreak. Entering his hut, he picked up the "Horæ." As he did so, a wave of sentiment shook him, because he thought of the poor Spanish priest who had brought that precious volume from Cadiz or Barcelona, and, perchance, gazed at it with eyes glazing in death while he lurked, wounded and starving, in the cave where he had sought shelter from the pitiless savages. Now, if God willed, it might cross the Atlantic again.

He opened the book haphazard, and read:

"In manus tuas, Domine, commendo spiritum meum!"

Then he sank on his knees, and prayed; for, if ever man had placed soul and body in the keeping of the Almighty, he had.

That evening, master of himself, and ever recovering facility of speech, he reasoned with Sinclair and the two Spaniards who had joined in the adventure. One, a Senor Felice Gomez, though posing as an authority on mines, had to admit that his knowledge was that of the company director and well-informed amateur. They were inclined to scoff at Power's predictions of disaster; but he wound up with an argument which proved irresistible.

"How much has this enterprise cost you?" he asked.

Sinclair answered readily.

"We have put up twenty thousand paper dollars (a paper dollar is worth about 80 per cent of the gold dollar) for expenses," he said. "My share is ten thousand, and my friends stand in five thousand each."

"Would you be satisfied if you got your money back, with a profit of one hundred per cent?"

"According to you, Mr. Power, and almost you convince me, we shall lose every penny."

"But, assuming the profit I have named, would such return on your capital send you home well content?"

"Speaking for myself, it would."

The Spaniards grinned amiably. As a conceit, the notion appealed to them. They were not poor men; but had embarked on the quest largely to sate their curiosity with regard to the unexplored reaches of the Chubut River.

"Good!" said Power. "I give your syndicate my personal undertaking to pay the sum of forty thousand dollars when we reach any place where there is a bank with a New York agent. I really mean what I say," he went on, seeing the blank incredulity written on three faces. "I am rich enough to table that offer without the slightest chance of failing to make good. Even though I die on the way to the coast, you will have my written undertaking, which will be honoured by my bankers. If I survive the journey, a cablegram will convince you of my financial standing. Naturally, you will ask why I behave so generously. Well, there are three reasons: Were it not for your presence here, I might never have had a chance of returning to civilisation; so I am disposed to pay liberally for your safe escort, which, to my thinking, has been sent by Providence in my special behalf. That, in itself, should suffice as an explanation. But the remaining motives are almost equally strong. I am sure you are rushing to certain death if you advance another mile up the valley; but, supposing, as you imagine, that your guns open the path, it will be across the dead bodies of a people whom I have learned to like, and among whom I have passed three not unhappy years. Very well! I purchase their lives. All I demand to seal the bargain is your promise to start downstream at daybreak, taking me with you; but leaving here all the pieces of iron, knives, nails and such like articles you can spare from your equipment. The Indians will find and value them. They have no knowledge of metallic ores. There are hardly any to be found in this locality. It is a dead land, mere shale and rock and crumbling earth, devoid of the riches which alone would make it habitable. What do you say? If you agree to my terms, give me a pen and paper. I suppose I still can write, though I have not held a pen during seven years."

The man who could tame, and partly civilise, two Indian tribes was not like to fail when called on to subjugate men of his own or a kindred race. The triumvirate yielded. Next day, when the canoes had gone ahead, Power bestrode one of the dozen horses which accompanied the expedition. The rearguard set off at a canter, since a rolling down ran for eight miles to the first portage. As Power rode away with his new friends a long drawn-out, shrill wailing came from the forest. The Indians understood then. Their territory was left unspoiled; but they had lost their wonder-worker. Had they but known it, the "white fool" drew his hand across his eyes to clear away the tears.

Terribly Afflicted With Lame Back.

Could Not Sweep The Floor.

When the back aches and pains it is almost impossible for women to do their housework, for every move and every turn means an ache or a pain.

Women are beginning to understand that weak, lame, and aching backs from which they suffer so much are due to wrong action of the kidneys, and should be attended to at once so as to avoid years of suffering from kidney trouble.

On the first sign of anything wrong with the back Doan's Kidney Pills should be taken.

They go right to the seat of the trouble.

Mrs. Wilfrid Jolicoeur, Nouvelle, Que., writes:—"I take pleasure in writing you stating the benefit I have received by using Doan's Kidney Pills. About three years ago I was terribly afflicted with lame back, and was so bad I could not sweep my own floor. I was advised to try Doan's Kidney Pills. I only used three boxes, and I am as well as ever. I highly recommend these pills to any sufferer from lame back or kidney trouble."

NEW CURE

ERIE, PA., June 16.—The discovery of a cure for deafness without the aid of a knife or medicine was formally announced by Dr. H. M. Goehring, of Pittsburg, speaking before the Pennsylvania Osteopathic Association in annual convention here the other day.

The announcement caused a buzz of excitement among the delegates, as up to this time there has been no sure cure for deafness. Dr. Goehring, using the principle first used by Dr. A. D. Edwards, of St. Louis, based his assertions on the treatment of thousands of cases and said that while the discovery is especially adapted to the treatment of chronic catarrhal deafness, by far the greater percentage of all cases readily yield to the new method.

BREAKS DOWN TISSUES.

Physicians who have witnessed Dr. Goehring's demonstration of the cure liken it to the feats of bloodless surgery which were made so famous by Lorenz, the great orthopedic surgeon from Vienna, and Still, of Kirksville, Mo., the founder of osteopathy. Instead of burdening the patient with trumpets, telephones and other external devices to try to make a deaf ear hear, Dr. Goehring goes right at the root of the matter and applies his treatment according to the basic principles of osteopathy itself—that is, to the cause instead of to the effect. Without the use of the knife or any surgical instruments the discoverer of this operation, by means of his fingers alone, explores in the back of the throat and in the vault between the throat and the nose, breaks down the tiny adhesions which twist the tube leading from the throat to the back of the ear, the use of which is to equalize the air pressure on both sides of the ear drum, out of its normal position; and then he actually inserts the tip of his fingers into the opening of the tube itself.

By this method he is able to replace the tube in its normal position and to drain it of its accumulation of diseased material so that nature may have an opportunity to effect a cure. Dr. Edwards has found that in three quarters of all cases he could insert his finger into the tube in spite of its minute size by gradually dilating it.

She Understood It.

"Who is that man with the blue suit on just behind the catcher?"

"That, my dear, is the umpire."

"What does he do?"

"He calls balls and strikes and tells whether or not a man is safe at the plate."

"Oh, I see. He is there to warn the batsman when he sees the pitcher is going to hit him with the ball."

"You grasp the idea perfectly, my dear," he said, choosing the easiest way of dropping the discussion.—Detroit Free Press.

Vehicles For Compliments.

What can with limousines compete?
Well, autos I do not disparage,
But when I'm carried off my feet
It is by Mary's charming carriage!

What's nicer than a motorboat,
In which you skim the ocean briny?
Better than any craft afloat
I love my Mary's smack, so tiny!

What sight outranks the eroplane?
What is more graceful, what more airy?
Here I must answer, once again,
A flight of fancy of my Mary.
—Lilian Taylor.

Moslems of the World.

It is a striking fact that there are 5,000,000 more Moslems than Christians in the British empire. One-seventh of the whole human race is Moslem. The really significant fact is that the proportion is not at a standstill; it is increasing yearly. There are 60,000,000 Mohammedans in India, and the number is steadily growing. During the last decade the Moslem population of India increased by 9 per cent, while the total population of India increased by only 2 per cent. Many more natives are becoming Mohammedans every year than are turning to Christianity. There are 24,000,000 Mohammedans in Java. Mohammedanism is absolutely dominant in Persia. Today nearly all the sacred places named in the Bible are under Mohammedan rule. These are but a few instances out of many showing the easweep of Islam.—Christian Herald.

The Surprising Lady.

I saw a lady ten feet high.
Her hands were swung with languid grace;
She stood as if about to fly.
A stony look was on her face.

Her garb that swirled in wondrous curves
With patterns curious was decked.
She seemed to show a case of nerves
That were artistically wrecked.

Though sharp of elbow and of knee.
Her lengthy style was neat and trim.
Like a giraffe beneath a tree
She could pluck blossoms from a limb.

And yet this fantasy so fair
Has not disturbed my mood serene.
I never saw her anywhere
Excepting in a magazine.

Good Sleep Good Health

Exhausted Nerves Were Fully Restored by Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

When the nerve force expended in the day's work and in the act of living is not replenished by restful sleep at night you have cause to be alarmed, as physical bankruptcy stares you in the face. This letter directs you to the most satisfactory cure for sleeplessness.

Mr. Dennis Mackin, Maxton, Sask., writes:—"I have just finished using the sixth box of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and I must say that when I commenced using it my nerves were so bad that I could scargely get any sleep. I would lie in bed nearly all night without sleep, and anyone who has this trouble knows the misery of sleepless nights. The Nerve Food helped me from the start, and has built up my nervous system wonderfully. I now enjoy good, sound sleep, and instead of feeling tired in the morning I am strong and healthy, and well fitted for my daily work."

ARE YOU NORMAL?

Here are Some Tests Which Will Tell

Read this quickly:

"A little dog ran up the street. It had brown curly hair, short legs and a long tail."

Now lay down the paper and repeat it aloud.

If you said it right you are normal, according to Dr. W. J. Hickson, head of the psychopathic laboratory, reboratory, recently established to aid the Chicago municipal court.

If you said the dog had curly legs and a brown tail you are 50 per cent off in efficiency, according to the expert.

Better try again. Now point to your nose, then your eyes, then your ears, and then your mouth. Do it quick.

If you stick your finger in your mouth the first jab you lose another 50 per cent. in the grading.

A last chance—what is wrong with this sentence:

"I have three brothers, Ignats, Abraham and myself."

You either answer quickly and correctly or, according to the Hickson test, you are to be classified as a "moron"—one with an arrested mental development.

If you don't sleep well these summer nights, just before bedtime drink a cold bottle of O'Keefe's Pilsener Lager
It soothes and quiets—and lulls you off to sound, refreshing sleep.

To Clean Jewellery.

Gold rings, brooches and other articles of jewellery that are set with precious stones can be cleaned with warm water with white soap and a very little ammonia. Use a soft old toothbrush to get in between the setting and the stone. For rings set with turquoises and pearls the water cleaning should be avoided, but for the hard, transparent gems it is allowed. Polish the rings and pins with a soft chamois and they will be wonderfully bright and sparkling.

Pot Cloths.

Use old stockings tops for cloths with which to handle hot pans and dishes while cooking. These cloths will be found more pliable than the usual stiff pot cloths offered for this purpose in the shops.

If black or brown stockings are used, the cloths will not show soil. Cut half a dozen thicknesses into squares; turn in the edges and overcast. Sew a loop of tape to one corner and hang on a hook beside the stove. This useful little helper will save your cup towels from the many burns and misuses to which they are often put by the average maiden of all work.

To Clean Laces.

Delicate laces which have become soiled may be cleaned beautifully by squeezing them through skim milk to which a little bluing has been added. They come out of their bath looking like new, and are of just the right stiffness when stretched and dried, or dried and ironed between cloths over a Turkish towel pad.

Home Made White Enamel.

One pound of white zinc, one pound of white lead and Damar varnish. Add the varnish to the zinc and lead until it is consistency of thin cream.

PEACH BUTTER.

Pare and cut into thin slices fully ripe, freestone peaches of good flavour; put on to boil in a third of a cupful of cold water to one pound of fruit; boil until soft, stirring and mashing all the time. Add three-fourths pound of sugar to one pound of fruit, weighed before boiling. Cook the butter until it will adhere to an inverted plate when cold. It must be stirred all the time, as it burns very easily. This can be put in most anything you have convenient, as it does not have to be air tight.

BAKED RHUBARB.

Wash and peel the stalks and cut in inch pieces, place in a covered bean pot, sprinkling each layer well with white sugar, allowing at least a cup to a quart of rhubarb. Bake in moderately hot oven about an hour and a half.

HUMORS OF LIBRARIES

UNSUSPECTED FUN IN ROUTINE OF LENDING BOOKS.

Muddled Names Are the Most Frequent Causes of Merriment to the Attendants—One, However, Remembered the Cover But Not the Name—Fringes and Hairpins Aroused Suspicions.

Prosaic and serious though the business of lending libraries may seem to be to the average person, it provides at times an unsuspected fund of humor. There is, for instance, the juvenile borrower, who writes to the librarian:

"Dear Sir,—Please renew the book that I took out about two weeks ago, or it may be three. I forget the author and title, but it was bound in blue, with a picture of a dolphin on the back."

And then there is the troubled reader who, holding out to the assistant the latest novelty in bookmarks, says, "I wish you would tell your lady readers not to leave fringenets in their books. I found a hairpin in the last book and a fringenet in this, and my wife is getting a bit suspicious."

Perhaps, however, it is the people who unconsciously twist the titles of books they ask for who provide the librarian and his assistants with their biggest laughs, and in "Library Jokes and Jottings," Mr. H. T. Coutts gives some amusing examples of borrowers' quaint requests. Here are a few selections:

"I come for Mr. A——. Will you please send him 'Indecent Orders'?" ("In Deacon's Orders").

"Please renew 'Prisoner of Zona Dare'." ("Prisoner of Zenda").

"Have you a novel entitled 'She Combeth Not Her Head'?" ("He Cometh Not, She Said").

"I want Braddon's 'Trial of the Servant'." ("Trail of the Serpent").

"Have you the 'Essays of a Liar'?" ("Essays of Elia").

"I want 'From Jessie to Ernest'." ("From Jest to Earnest").

"'Bunch of Screws.' ('Baxter's Cruise')."

"Is the 'Stuck-up Minister' ('Stichet Minister') in?"

"'Kiss Auntie' ('Quixante'), if you please."

"A lady reader," says Mr. Coutts, "who had a passion for country walks used to arrange visits to charming rural spots, and sought help in her choice of them at the library. She asked the attendant to supply her with 'Notable Hamlets.' Until he pointed out to her the portraits of Henry Irving and other famous actors, included in the volume, she could not believe that it had nothing to do with rambles to famous villages.

That the printer is not devoid of humor is evident from the following entries selected from the proof sheets of a library catalogue: "Boldrewood, Rolf, 'My Rum Home' (Run); Hole, S. R. Dean, 'A Book About Noses' (Roses); Stables, Gordon, 'Our Friend the Fog' (Dog)."

The facetiousness of the printer is again shown in the alterations of "A Harvest of Wild Oats" to "A Harvest of Wild Cats"; "The Golden Face" to "The Golden Fare"; the "Princess Aline" to the "Princess Alive"; and "Mrs. Caudle's Curtain Lectures" to Mrs. Candle's Curtain Lectures."

Children often confuse the titles of popular books and will ask for such things as "Aliop's Fables," "Good Liver's Ravels," "Helen's Dairy," "Holly berry Finn," "From Powder Admiral to Monkey," and "Swest Family Robinson Crusoe."

Most of these can be translated easily, but a more difficult case occurred when a girl requisitioned "Watercress." The librarian told her that a book of that name was not in the libary, but the girl persisted in her request. A schoolfellow, she said, had borrowed it only a week or two before, and had told her it was a nice book. Eventually a solution of the problem was found in Mrs. Molesworth's "Lettice."

The Glove on the Pole.

A quaint custom in an English town, Honiton, is "proclaiming the fair." The town obtained the grant of a fair from the lord of the manor so long ago as 1357, and the fair still retains some of the picturesque characteristics of bygone days. The town crier, dressed in picturesque uniform and carrying a pole decorated with gay flowers and surmounted by a large gilt model of a gloved hand, publicly announces the opening of the fair, as follows: "Oyez! Oyez! Oyez! The fair's begun, the glove is up. No man can be arrested till the glove is taken down." Hot coins are then thrown among the children. The pole and glove remain displayed until the end of the fair.

A Clock Case Made of Pennies.

A novelty in clockmaking consists of a time piece whose case is made of English pennies. The coins, of which there are ninety-six, all bear the date 1797 and were beaten out to almost double their original size and then riveted together, while the figures were made of small strips of copper cemented on to the face. The clock stands fourteen inches high and is eight inches broad at the base. That "time is money" is an adage with which we all more or less agree, but this is a case in which the saying might be reversed and still remain true. The clock is owned by a resident of Laurel Bank, Ilkley, Yorkshire, England.

A Chicken Hawk in Flight.

Saw chicken hawk in flight, which suggests the motion of a motorcar. No flapping, no soaring, but a series of quick, explosive beats of the wings, each sending the bird forward in a leap of several yards. The flicker gives five strokes, then a jump.—From "A Farmer's Notebook."

Modest.

"Now, Willie," said the visitor to a little fellow who had been in school only two weeks, "who is the smartest boy in your class?"

"I'd like to tell you," he replied, "but papa says that I mustn't boast."—Chicago News.

VOTE FOR ME

Dropped the Bagpipes.

Soon after the occupation of Cairo by the British troops the late Nubar Pasha took a prodigious fancy to the music of the Black Watch and had the idea of having a servant taught the use of the bagpipes. Nubar dispatched a French friend who spoke English very well to interview a piper on the subject.

Donald replied: "Weel, he micht learn or he micht no'. Bit, let me tell ye, it needs wind an' mickle strength tae fill the bags o' the pipes an' keep blawin'. Sae if yin o' thae Egyptian chaps took the job on he'd need tae be bandaged a' ow're like yin o' thae auld mummies, or maybe he'd burst himsel'."

This conversation was reported to Nubar, who took the piper's remarks seriously. So he gave up the idea of having a skirler attached to his household, as the use of the bagpipes was attended with the prospect of such danger to the performer.—Westminster Gazette.

INSPIRATIONAL SUCCESS

George D. Smith, Richest Rare Book Dealer: "You Must Know Your Trade" He Says

(By Herbert Corey)

Just offhand, buying and selling old books does not look like a ready road to riches But it depends somewhat on the man—and somewhat on the books. In one corner of George D. Smith's office on Fifth Avenue three commonplace suitcases are stacked. Any strong-backed office boy could tote away the three.

"The books in these cases," said Smith, the other day, "cost me $50,000. I don't know what I will get for them."

Smith is the foremost dealer in rare books in America. Every now and then he figures in an international complication. A few weeks ago he bought the library of the Duke of Devonshire, in England, thereby causing a constitutional monarchy to spin like a top. The English papers didn't have many unkind things to say about the action of the Duke of Devonshire in selling the greatest collection of Shakespeariana in the world—a collection which had been made by a line of dukes of Devonshire. But—to put it mildly—they deprecated Smith. There were furious editorial utterances to the effect that some way—way not stated—should be found to protect England from the incursions of the hated gringo.

"Why have I succeeded?" Smith repeated the question meditatively. "Perhaps it is because I know books.

Thirty years ago he was an office boy. He didn't select his future line of action any more than the average boy charts out a career for himself when he goes out looking for a job. He merely knew that he needed the money—and needed it regulary at the end of each week. It happened that a member of the firm of Dodd, Mead & Co. attended the Brooklyn Church which received the juvenile Smith each first day. This limited juxtaposition held a hunch for Smith.

"Please, sir," said he. "I am looking for work.

He Started Up.

Office-boying around a book store is usually about nine parts dust and hustle, and one part opportunity. Smith took advantage of his chance. He did his work well, that being the sole reason why folks have office boys around. Meanwhile he kept himself clean and white collared, so that when a junior clerk was needed he fell into the place naturally. The firm dealt in rare editions and old books as well as those of more modern vintage. Perhaps the prices fired his imagination. Perhaps he found romance in the sturdy old quartos. He informed himself upon the goods he sold, so that he did not have to resort to the usual clerk's patter when a customer came in. It was at this time that he began selling rare books to E. Dwight Church of Brooklyn.

"Twenty-five years later," said Smith, "the Church collection was sold upon the death of the owner—and I bought it."

Smith isn't the sort of book dealer one reads about. He has no whiskers, he does not wear a skull cap, and although his salesroom is lined with books worth half a million dollars, it is full of sunshine instead of dust. Persons interested are not precisely encouraged to come and "browse" among the rare volumes, although current fiction would have it that old booksellers enjoy seeing their customers rummage through the shelves. Browsing might conceivably cost the bookdealer too much in this case. On top of a heaped table lies a Burns first edition, worth $7000, and which would neatly fit an overcat pocket. One could put enough books under one of this spring's tent-shaped overcoats to make him rich for life. But the man who calls on business is courteously made welcome. Smith is a well-dressed, snappy man of business. One would sooner guess him to be a broker than a bookseller.

Like most other men who have met with success, Smith has not been afaird to dare. He paid—according to newspaper figures—$1,250,000 for the Church collection which has been referred to. That his judgment was good is shown by the fact that within four months after Henry E. Huntington bought it from him the Los Angeles man was offered a profit of $400,000. He bought $1,000,000 worth of books at the Robert E. Hoe sale, and, although the precise paid the Duke of Devonshire has been held a secret, it is shown that when Huntington bought that collection from Smith he paid $1,500,000. Just incidentally Smith resents the insinuation that he has acted simply as Huntington's agent.

"I always buy on my own account" said he; "I am no man's agent."

Thousands of Old Books.

Those who attend book sales are apt to see Smith sitting bolt upright in a chair in the first row. And most of them keep their eyes on him, for fireworks may be expected at any time. At the Hoe sale Quartrich, the great bookman of London took the Gutenburg Bible to $50,000 before Smith so much as blinked. Then he ran it to $50,000 so rapidly that onlookers gasped. No such price had ever before been paid for a single book. The representatives of the late J. Pierpont Morgan were under orders to buy a Caxton "King Arthur" at the Hoe sale. Smith wanted that himself. The Morgan man finally got it for $42,800.

"One must know one's business" said he, "but one must also sometimes resort to strategy."

At that same Hoe sale he particularly wanted a Chaucer. So did others. He knew it might go to $8,000 or $9,000. So that when the auctioneer prepared to offer it, Smith sat up and wriggled and showed signs of intense animation. The moment the auctioneer lifted his finger Smith plumped out his bid—as though he were so charged with excitement that he could hold in no longer.

"Five thousand dollars," he shouted.

The others looked at each other and at Smith, and retired from a contest in which a long purse and a fanatical determination seemed coupled. Smith smiled. From the side lines this seems to be good business judgment, for the price of rare books is continually going up. Ten years ago he bought a copy of John Eliot's Indian Bible for $1636, and people thought that too much book learning had certainly turned Smith's head. It is now worth $4000 and the man who owns it will not sell. Twenty years ago Cornelius Vanderbilt bought the Bay Psalm Book at auction for $1250. It is now worth $10,000 in the open market. Instances might be multiplied.

"One should always have an eye to the future when entering business," said he, briefly. "In any business, for example, more of the younger generation of millionaires are forming libraries every day—and the supply of rare books is constantly dwindling. Therefore a rising market.

Druid Catacombs Near London.

Eleven miles south-east of London, in Kent, a few years ago were discovered the catacombs of the ancient Druids, which are now much visited by sightseers and are lighted for a part at least, by electric lights. Over fifty miles of chambers cut in the chalk cliffs have already been explored. The Druids lived in these catacombs when attacked by their northern enemies, and here they buried many of their dead. The stone on which the human sacrifices were made is still to be seen, and also the well from which water is drawn to this day.

Cast Off Police Boots.

Another way of disposing of their old boots is followed by the Colombo police. When these "cast offs" have accumulated to a figure bordering round a thousand they are taken down to the police hulk in the harbor and thrown into the sea. Formerly, policemen were allowed to dispose of them, when they became unserviceable, but according to new regulations, they have to return to headquarters all boots when they get worn out.

Gladstone's Persuasive Power.

Stafford House was the Garibaldian headquarters in London during the visit of 1864, and a society pleasantry of the time was a proposal to marry the hero to the old Duchess of Sutherland. Sir Mountstuart Grant Duff in his diary tells how some severely practical person objected that this was impossible because Garibaldi had a wife already.

"Oh," said Abraham Hayward, "we'll put up Gladstone to explain her away."

When the Sun Came Out

Two Storms That Passed With Its Gleaming.

By ELLIOT WALKER.

"It may be cold and cloudy, but the view is a great, soft toned picture," mused Edwina, gazing from an open space halfway up Partridge mountain. "My mood is just right to appreciate such a wild, gray day. It takes me out of myself."

She sighed, shaking her head resolutely, then braced against a sudden sweep of bitter wind, feeling a tingle of defiance in confronting the howling gust.

Her laugh, reckless, unmirthful, echoed along its hoarse train. "Sunshine!" she cried. "Bah, I like this better! It puts in one's soul a sense of strength, ambition to overcome obstacles, to rise above foolish grieving. That's what I want."

She clung to a sapling, bending with its sway, closing her eyes, drinking in deep drafts of the invigorating air, whose frosty breath stung her cheeks to a glory of color.

"Come!" rang her voice. "Come on, old Boreas! Swing me! Pelt me! Help me!"

There was a wildness in her supplication, a beseeching note. Edwina Surrey, throwing herself to nature's rough embrace, had much to forget.

A shout—that of a panting man and alarmingly near—caused the girl to turn in sudden dismay.

"Coming! Here's help!"

Swish! Whir! Like a swift, enveloping sheet the snow was upon her, blinding her now wide opened eyes, choking back her startled exclamation.

A dense, thickening, whirling mantle it swept from the lowering heavens, searching every leafless brown bush and gray rock crevice with white, relentless fingers.

Edwina could not see. She heard a crashing through the brush, an irritated mutter. "Where in blazes is the creature? Ow, my shin!" and then louder: "Hello! What's the trouble?"

The girl grasped her little tree, tightening her lips.

"It's Ham," she swallowed. "Oh, he mustn't find me."

But Hamilton Knight stumbled into the open. His eyes were keen. In three seconds he had reached the shrinking figure.

"My good woman," he began, "don't be afraid of me. I heard you calling for assistance."

He bent nearer, brushing the snow from his eyes, and a prolonged "Whew!" broke from his pursed lips.

Edwina straightened up, facing him defiantly.

"You are mistaken, Mr. Knight," in an acid voice, somewhat shaky. "I am quite capable of caring for myself."

"Then why did you call, Edwina?"

"I didn't. I was only singing."

"Singing! Well—I—swear!"

"Will you please go?"

"And leave you here? No, I will not. It's the nastiest first of the season storm I ever saw, and it has come to stay awhile. What business have you in this lonesome hole anyway?"

"None of yours. I guess I can walk where I please. You've no right"—

The man interrupted her coolly.

"Be sensible, Edwina. This is a bad fix, and we must get out of it. All my strength and wits will be needed to find a way down to the road. I see you are warmly clad. That's good. I'm dressed for tramping, so we can push along without picking a path Regard me as you like—stranger, St. Bernard dog, any old thing—but be sensible. That's all."

"You may know best," the girl shivered a bit. "Personally I don't mind a snow flurry."

Knight shrugged. His features set anxiously as he peered here and there.

"It doesn't let up at all," said he. "Do you know just how you got to this spot?"

"Oh, I merely kept going!" carelessly.

"Hum! So do I. We'll break our necks attempting to go straight down There must be paths and wood roads we can strike by keeping along the side. That is best, I think. If the sun would only come out and clear up things!"

"Pshaw! We will have no trouble. Go ahead."

She spoke in that tone of polite resignation which hints at hope of early deliverance from forced escort. The man stamped, evidently nettled.

"Cold feet?" asked Edwina in simulated sympathy.

"No. Come along."

For a few minutes it was not hard traveling. The girl pushed on behind the tall figure, half smiling to her thought of annoying him, unconsciously admiring the broad back and strong steps of this lately discarded lover.

It had been a bitter quarrel, lasting about four minutes, with a dogged silence worse than words on the part of the recreant Hamilton and an outpouring of recrimination from Edwina, of which she still felt proud.

Mr. Knight had kissed Lillian Carey. Miss Carey had returned the salutation with interest. Hattie Benson had seen them and promptly reported. Lillian went to Springfield that evening. Knight refused to explain, assuming an air of injury.

He received his dismissal with a sulky snort. The rest of the unhappy matter went as such things go with proud hearts—long walks in solitary affliction and complete indifference—externally.

Now, trudging in Knight's big footsteps, the girl's soul flamed at the necessity of his help. He should be shown his place in her regard at every opportunity.

It angered her to note her inability to go faster. Surely he need not take such strides. The going was becoming more fatiguing.

Edwina's toes ached. Her fingers were numb. She kept slipping. The snow sifted down her neck and blew in her eyes. Her knees commenced to wabble. Knight plowed ahead, occasionally halting for the lagging feet, then striding on.

"Mr. Knight!" Edwina was three yards in the rear and breathing fast.

He did not seem to hear.

"Ham!"

The man stopped. She caught up and smiled dolefully.

"Getting tired?" he puffed. "It's a trifle rough, and we are among some mean rocks. I declare, Edwina, I'm puzzled!"

"Not—not lost?"

"Oh, no. I don't know where I am, that's all. It's nothing. We'll land somewhere. Say, your teeth are chattering. It can't be you mind this little tramp! Brace a bit, and we'll get over that bowlder."

"Ham—I—never can climb it. I—I've sort of given out. This—this horrid snow"— The words faltered to a shaking whisper and broke in a sob.

"Curse my carelessness!" cried the man, seizing her hands. "Why, you are half frozen, child. I'm warm enough. I'll have to set you right and be quick about it." He dragged off her damp gloves.

Edwina was conscious of being rubbed, kneaded, shaken, jounced, hugged, slapped and generally stirred in an agitating process that presently sent a glow of warmth through every vein.

She did not protest. In fact, her submission to this treatment was amazingly tractable. Circulation seemed more important than dignity, and, after all, it was only Ham.

But when he exclaimed, "There, how's that?" and kissed her she shrank away in indignant remonstrance.

"How dare you? It was a mean advantage!"

"I forgot. Naturally when a chap has been engaged to a girl for months he forgets." His reply was not apologetic. Edwina frowned severely.

"All that is past," she said. "I'll thank you to recover your bearings."

"Up we go then, to the top of this rock and try for a glimpse over the trees. It's pretty steep, but not bad footing. Give me your little fist."

A scramble, a haul, and they stood on a level stone backed by a hump of granite. Knight steadied her as the snow eddied about their heads, mocking their straining eyes.

"No use," observed Hamilton, attempting a laugh. "The best I can do is to wrap you up in my coat, leave you in a snug corner and dig directly down to—somewhere." He began unbuttoning his heavy reefer, adding: "I'll find a house sometime and be right back. Answer my calls and be a brave girl."

Edwina stared at him in silent dismay.

"Before I start, dear," he said huskily, "I'm going to break a solemn promise. Next week," he hesitated, then went on impulsively—"next Wednesday I could tell. Lillian Carey is engaged to my brother Bob—and—that—was—why I've had some tough days, Edwina."

The girl's arm reached for him. She cried out wildly. He clasped her close, his face bent to the nestling head, and for a long minute both forgot the peril, the estrangement, everything save the sudden joy of understanding.

A rift broke in the clouds. The snow ceased. A streak of blue sky widened. Below their perch, only a hundred yards distant, the highway showed clearly in a growing light, with dotting houses lifting shining white roofs.

Edwina raised her eyes and blinked in a dazzling shaft of radiance.

"Ham!" she cried joyously. "Quick! Look, dear. The sun has come out."

Thought She Would Go Mad WITH HEADACHE.

In all cases of headache the treatment should be directed to remove the cause, for with the cause removed the headache vanishes for all time. Headache powders just relieve for the time being, but what is necessary for a permanent cure is something that will go right to the seat of the trouble. For this purpose it is impossible to find a better remedy for headaches of all descriptions than Burdock Blood Bitters, acting as it does on every organ of the body to strengthen, purify and regulate the whole system.

Mrs. Althea Bowman, Hamilton, Ont., writes:—"I have suffered terribly with my head for weeks at a time till I thought I would go mad. A friend advised me to give Burdock Blood Bitters a trial, so I got a bottle and found relief. I have used four bottles in all and I am glad to say that I have had no more headaches since. I would advise all sufferers to give it a fair trial."

Phyiognomy.

Lavater was not the first to write upon the science of physiognomy. Great and lasting as were Lavater's contributions to the "science," he was by no means the first in the field. The first systematic treatise on physiognomy is that attributed to the wonderful old Greek, Aristotle. Aristotle seemed to have thought of pretty nearly everything, and among the rest of things he thought of was physiognomy, the art of reading the character from the face. His six chapters on the subject are still very interesting reading.—New York American.

Old Country News

IRELAND.

In Clongeen district, about twelve miles from Wexford, a sensation was caused by the posting up of notices signed "Moonlight," warning the present occupant of a farm to give up possession to the former tenant, and threatening the occupier with dire penalties if he refuses.

Thomas Kennedy, a tramp, was at Letterkenny petty sessions, sent to gaol for six months for stealing three silver spoons, the property of the Most Rev. Dr. O'Donnell. There were other convictions against the prisoner for larceny, vagrancy and cruelty to children, and twenty-six convictions for drunkenness and disorderliness.

Constable Howley was fined 2s 6d and costs at Listowel for assaulting an ex-policeman named Ed. O'Connor. The constable had arrested O'Connor on a charge of drunkenness and disorderly conduct, and it was in the process of arrest that the assault by the constable was alleged to have taken place. The charge against O'Connor was dismissed.

When Annie McCracken, against whom there were forty-two previous convictions, was sentenced at Emyvale sessions to twenty-one days' imprisonment for the larceny of two one-pound notes from Felix McKenna, it was stated that when searched at the police barracks nothing was found until Acting-Sergeant Falls discovered the missing notes concealed in her mouth.

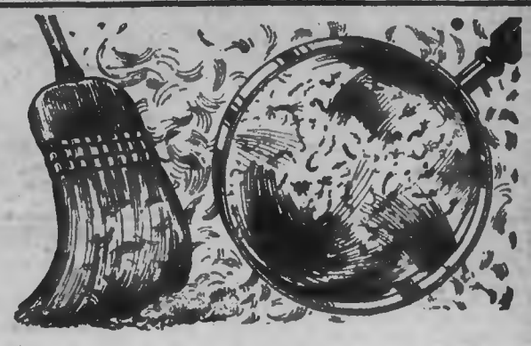
The report of the Portrane committee of the Richmond asylum contained a request from the medical superintendent for a small annual contribution to enable some of the patients to take part in golf, a course having been made near the seashore on a farm adjoining the asylum demesne. The Portrane committee recommended that a portion of the annual grant for "games" should be devoted to the purchase of golf requisites for some of the patients, and this was agreed to.

WILLIE'S DILEMMA.

Sister—Willie, if you hang around and listen when Jack calls to-night I shall whip you.

Willie—And Ma says she'll whip me if I don't keep tab on you and him.

Sweeping—dust contains many dangerous microbes.



SWEEPING is actually dangerous, as well as uncomfortable and almost useless, if it merely stirs up the floor's dust and dirt. Sweeping-dust contains millions of flaky atoms of dried vegetable and animal matter which carry disease-breeding germs and microbes.

DUSTBANE

"Catches Sweeping Dust"

Dustbane contains an antiseptic which kills germs, and its evaporation purifies the air, protecting women and children from dust-microbes. The bright green powder is swept ahead of the broom, falling upon and absorbing the dust, leaving floor or carpet bright and clean.

Dustbane saves labor in sweeping, saves nearly all your dusting, prevents damage by moths, keeps carpets bright, and protects the family's health. It can be used over and over again, and its cost is trifling.

Try it free—at our risk.

We know that when you've once used Dustbane, you will never again be satisfied to sweep without it. In order that you may try it without risk, we make the following.

CARRIES CHILD IN TEETH.

Heroic Italian Effects Thrilling Rescue on Old Bridge.

READING, Pa., June 19.—Holding a two-year-old child in his teeth by the waistband of her little blue calico dress, Stephen Circelli bore her to safety from the rotten high bridge of the slag dump of the old Seyfert furnace on the White House road, while a gaping and heart-sick crowd watched the rescue 100 feet below with tongues glued to the roofs of their mouths.

The little tot led by that inborn curiosity characteristic of children, had crawled out on the decaying structure spanning the tracks of the Reading. There it clung paralyzed with fear.

The youngster lapsed into unconsciousness upon feeling the firm clasp of Circelli's big arm. With his teeth fastened in the dress he made his way to the slag bank and thence to the ground amid ringing cheers from the crowd.

Militants Blamed For Big Fire.

GLASGOW, June 19. — Damage amounting to $500,000 was done yesterday by a fire at Kingston Dock, in the centre of Glasgow. Four schooners, several freight sheds and a number of neighboring houses were burned.

The outbreak was caused by a man while emptying hot ashes into water, letting some fall on the deck of a schooner which caught fire. The flames spread rapidly to some barrels of creosote on the wharf, and everything in the vicinity was soon alight.

Royalty Not Expected.

OTTAWA, June 19. — Ottawa places no credence in a report in a special cable from London that the King and Queen are coming to Canada after visiting Australia and Africa next year.

Inquiry at the offices of the Governor-General and the Prime Minister yesterday elicited in each case the declaration that nothing has been heard of such a plan, with a denial that it has been discussed between the British and Canadian Governments, as was reported.

Roosevelt Loses Voice.

LONDON, June 19.—Col. Theodore Roosevelt is suffering from an affection of the larynx, as a direct result of the hardships he endured in his recent Brazilian trip, which will effectually prevent him from taking part as an orator in the political campaign in the United States this fall and compel him to exercise the great est care for some months to come.

EXCHANGING VILLAGES.

Fleeing Turks Take Homes Deserted By Fleeing Greeks.

CONSTANTINOPLE, June 19.—Turkish refugees from Macedonia, who assert that they have been driven out by the Greeks, have arrived in considerable numbers on the Asiatic coast where they have taken possession of entire villages deserted by their former Greek inhabitants, who have crossed over to the islands of Chios.

There has been some pillaging in the district along the coast of Asia Minor, and altogether the position there is generally regarded as a dangerous one, although Turkish officials are using great efforts to keep the people in check.

At the same time preparations are being made by the Turkish authorities to meet any possible Greek attack. The Turkish Minister of War has gone to Smyrna and the Turkish troops have planted mines at the entrance to the gulf.

Bomb Placed For Czar.

BERLIN, June 19.—A special despatch from St. Petersburg says an attempt was made to wreck the Russian Imperial train with the Emperor and his family on board near Tschudovo yesterday when a bomb was placed on the rails.

A postal train which was preceding the Imperial train as a pilot, struck the bomb and caused it to explode. Many of the coaches of the mail train were shattered and several persons injured.

The Emperor and his family on the Imperial train passed the spot a few minutes later and arrived at Tsarskoe-Selo without further incident.

SCOTTISH TRAIN WRECKED.

Three Women Are Drowned When Coaches Are Submerged.

LONDON, June 19.—Three women were drowned and it is feared that a dozen other persons perished yesterday when a passenger train went through a culvert and into a torrent at Carr Bridge, 28 miles south of Inverness, Scotland.

A thunderstorm that ravaged the north of England and Scotland was responsible for the accident. The train from Perth was crossing the culvert and became derailed, and the culvert, which had become undermined, collapsed, and the passenger coaches fell into the water. It is feared that besides the known drowned a dozen other persons were caught in a submerged coach.

Many persons on the train escaped from the cars, but drifted about in the stream and were badly injured before being rescued. One of the passengers, a man from New York, saved himself by gripping a tree.

Crop Prospects In the West Splendid Say J. Bruce Walker.

WINNIPEG, June 19. — "I have just returned to Winnipeg after a tour of the western prairie provinces reaching into districts far removed from travel," said J. Bruce Walker, commissioner of immigration, this morning. "I went through Southern Saskatchewan and Alberta and find that with the copious rains during the latter part of last week there is every reason to believe the crop prospects to-day are better than they were at this season last year, or even for many years. Wheat is looking unusually well, roots are strong and healthy, and the plants growing up with amazing rapidity."

Three Convicted of Murder.

CALGARY, June 19. — Afanasy Sokeloff, Max Manelick, and Joe Smith, Calgary, Russians, were found guilty of murdering Paymaster Wilson, of the Canada Cement Co., at Exshaw, on May 22nd, and sentenced by Justice Walsh to be hanged at Macleod on August 26.

The jury recommended mercy on Manelick's behalf.

Damage To Boats Slight.

BREMEN, Germany, June 19.—The North German Lloyd yesterday issued the following statement concerning the collision between the Kaiser Wilhelm II. and the Incemore:

"The Kaiser Wilhelm II. was struck on the starboard side, opposite her third group of boilers. She sprung a leak which, however, could be kept under control.

The damage to the Kaiser Wilhelm II. apparently is less considerable than was at first supposed. Repairs probably will require only a short time and will be undertaken at Southampton."

Belfast Officials Decline Invitation.

LONDON, June 19.—Belfast Corporation yesterday afternoon decided to decline the invitation of the Countess of Aberdeen to attend the civic exhibition in Dublin on the grounds that the intensity of the political situation precluded those holding different opinions from attending the meeting without such an action being misinterpreted.

A NEW ROUTE

The new Lake Shore line of the C. P.R. will be in readiness for passenger traffic on June 20. A freight business is being tentatively carried on.

This new line will give practically a new route between Montreal and Toronto, and will greatly facilitate in handling the enormous traffic, passenger and freight, which passes through this territory. The work was commenced about two years ago, and entailed a cost of nearly twelve millions of dollars. That it will create new business is confidently believed; but a consideration which is not directly associated with profits, yet is not alien thereto, is that by the duplication of the tracks there is set up a closer communication between the two great centres of population in the Dominion.

The C.P.R. has this week announced that the new line will be opened on the date mentioned, and agents have been appointed at the stations as follows:—Cherrywood, W. A. Donnelly; Whitby, F. E. Harrison; Bowmanville, A. L. Milmine; Newcastle, W. H. Cooke; Newtonville, B. F. Carley; Port Hope, C. R. Bradley; Cobourg, S. F. Robbins; Grafton, F. Clark; Colbourne, W. G. Cowan; Brighton, S. J. Thompson; Shannonville, H. G. Robinson; Lonsdale, G. H. Barham; Wilkinson, D. J. Riordan; Christie Lake, A. E. Smithernan.

Relief at Once
Cure Certain

Conclusive Evidence That Dr. Chase's Ointment Cures Itching Piles.

Mr. John G. McDonald, Pictou, N.S., writes:—"I used Dr. Chase's Ointment for itching piles, and found that the first application gave relief. After using a few boxes of the ointment I was completely cured, and can recommend it highly to all sufferers from this disease. You have my permission to use this letter for the benefit of others."

Mr. James M. Douglas, Superior Junction, Ont., writes:—"For about six years I suffered from piles, and often could not work for two or three days at a time, so great was the suffering from pain and itching. Doctors treated me in vain, and I tried many treatments before I came across Dr. Chase's Ointment. Two boxes of Dr. Chase's Ointment cured me, and for several months I have had no return of this annoying ailment."

There can be no doubt that Dr. Chase's Ointment is the most effective treatment obtainable for every form of piles. 60 cents a box, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

MAPLE LEAF IDEA

On Dominion Day last year every passenger who entered a dining car on the C.P.R. received a maple sugar maple leaf enclosed in a little box with a miniature Canadian Ensign and a copy of "The Maple Leaf For Even." In the United States each particular fruit, such as the orange, has its day, and the C.P.R. idea was to identify the Canadian National Holiday with this typical Canadian product. The Quebec Government was much interested in the idea and decided to elaborate it on a still more comprehensive scale. Quebec being the province most intimately connected with the maple sugar industry. Indeed, the higher standard of purity noticeable in commercial maple sugar is largely due to the enlightened efforts of the Quebec Minister for Agriculture, which directs three schools for educating farmers in the best methods of tapping, distilling and producing the sugar. This year, therefore, the Quebec Government itself has taken in hand the Maple Day idea, and is itself providing maple sugar souvenirs to passengers served in dining cars on all Canadian lines, following the C.P.R. example.

PETERBOROUGH, FRIDAY, JUNE 19, 1914.

"He Who Is Not With Us Is Against Us"---N. W. Rowell

A FIGHT OF ORGANIZED CHRISTIANITY AGAINST FORCES OF THE LIQUOR INTERESTS IS MR. ROWELL'S DESCRIPTION OF CONTEST

Monster Meeting Heard Masterly Exposition of His Position and Policy by Leader of the Forces Against the Open Bar--Wildly Enthusiastic Reception for the Lloyd George of Canada---Electors of Peterboro' Cheer the Liberal Leader as He Tells of the Fight.

MR. LINDSEY'S ARRAIGNMENT OF GOVERNMENT

Nobody was disappointed with the magnificent meeting in the Opera House last night. The large, the overflowing audience was up to the fullest expectations of the leader who addressed it, and it is certain the audience was not disappointed in the speech of the leader. Mr. Rowell gave a splendid address, logical, convincing and clear cut, which was listened to with the deepest attention and enthusiastically received.

The hall was decorated with Union Jacks and with streamers expressing the sentiments suited to the occasion. Across the drop curtain was the legend "Rowell, the Lloyd George of Canada". The boxes on either side bore the words "Rowell, our next Premier," and "The bar or the boy, which?" and at the rear of the platform were the words "Tax the land and not the Home."

While the auditorium was filling the excellent Opera House Orchestra performed patriotic and other selections. The entire seating capacity of the Opera House was occupied, and so great was the crush that the management had to refuse admission to late comers. The ladies occupied in force, the balcony and the boxes.

Mr. J. J. Hartley occupied the chair, and behind him, on the platform, were the candidates for East and West Peterborough, Messrs. Gillespie and Anderson., and many prominent citizens, including, it is said, many persons who, in despite of political affiliations, occupied a place on the platform of Mr. Rowell as a practical evidence of their support of the main plank of his platform—abolition of the bar.

The meeting which, in this way, furnished a good example, began promptly on time, so that there was an excellent opportunity for the chief speeches of the evening and closing at a reasonable hour. It was half-past ten when the cheers for the King, the leader, and the candidates were given.

The speeches of Messrs. Gillespie and Anderson were brief, as the occasion demanded. Both told the exceedingly encouraging reception their candidature was receiving in the country districts they visited. Their reception was enthusiastic and both had confidence in a victorious outcome of their campaign.

Mr. Lindsey dealt trenchantly with the financial and other issues, while Mr. Rowell's address was devoted almost entirely to the temperance issue with introductory reference to other subjects, naturally leading up to the main topic. In spite of long campaigning — speaking twice or sometimes more, a day—his voice was in excellent condition, and his well-reasoned and logical address was listened to with the closest attention and even silenced the few interrupters who had given some attention to Mr. Lindsey.

On the whole, the meeting was splendidly orderly and the address of Mr. Rowell was convincing and conclusive to those who wished to be convinced and were open to conviction.

With only the few words necessary for the purpose the Chairman introduced the first speaker, Mr G. G. S. Lindsey, K. C.

Mr. J. J. Hartley, President of the West Peterborough Liberal Association, presided at the meeting, and was the first to move to the front of the platform after the curtain was raised.

"I can assure you," said Mr. Hartley, "that it is very gratifying to see the house filled as it is at this meeting. It shows that you all are in favour of banishing the bar. (Applause.) I am sure you have come to the conclusion that it is the best thing for West Peterborough to put a man in power who will banish the bar forever from the province of Ontario," concluded Mr. Hartley amid the strenuous applause of the audience.

Mr. Lindsey's Address.

Mr. G. G. S. Lindsey, K.C., of Toronto, the first speaker of the evening, devoted the time at his disposal to a vigorous and effective arraignment of the general record and policy of the Whitney government. Mr. Lindsey is a convincing speaker and he marshalled his facts in a manner that had a decided effect upon the audience.

In opening Mr. Lindsey reminded his hearers of Nelson's immortal words at the battle of Trafalgar, "England expects that every man, this day will do his duty." The people of the province of Ontario were, he said, engaged at the present time in a great struggle, a battle with a great enemy, the open bar, and he hoped that on the 29th of June every man would do his duty in helping to defeat this terrible enemy.

Troubles of the Government.

Mr. Lindsey amused the audience with a brief recital of the troubles on the government side. In Riverdale, in gerrymandered Toronto, Mr. Doughty had received the Conservative nomination and then because he had announced himself in favour of Mr. Rowell's policy he had been repudiated and a new candidate chosen. They wouldn't have a temperance candidate on the Conservative side in Riverdale. Up in Cochrane there had been two candidates for the Conservative nomination, Mr. Gauthier, and Mr. Douglas, and the latter a good Scotchman, fond of Scotch whiskey, and who had incidentally been fined $600 for running what was commonly known as a blind pig, was the Conservative selection. In Prescott, a man engaged in the liquor business was the Conservative candidate.

"One would have thought," remarked Mr. Lindsey, "that they would play the game fairly. One would hardly think, that going to the country with 67 majority, they would forget all the rules of the game. But apparently they have." In Essex they engineered a gerrymander with a view to finding a nice soft spot for a none too popular minister, Hon. Dr. Reaume. In spite of all their efforts, however, Dr. Reaume had been turned down. In Peterborough, although they had a very nice representative in Mr. Peck, someone else had been chosen. If Mr. Peck was dissatisfied with his treatment, the speaker reminded him that the Liberal platform was broad enough for Mr. Peck or for Hon. Adam Beck to stand upon.",

License Law Enforcement.

Mr. Lindsey passed on to a discussion of the government license law enforcement, referring to the case of Mr. J. W. Flavelle and the other commissioners in Toronto who, because they could not enforce the law as they desired, resigned. Mr. Flavelle's scathing letter to the Provincial Secretary was read by the speaker and made a profound impression.

Some one in the audience remarked, "It's the pot calling the kettle back."

"The question is, abolish the bar; will you vote for it?" retorted Mr. Lindsey.

The heckless "no" was drowned in the cheers of the audience.

The speaker dealt forcibly with the Snider incident, showing how the Inspector had gone into the sections where the Canada Temperance Act was being voted on and informed the Conservatives that the government did not want the Act passed and that he was here to see that it did not pass. Charges had been brought up in the house by Mr. Bowman and the government had not dared to face them.

Why Elections Now?

Why were the elections brought on now. Perhaps it was that the government did not want to face the Snider charges, perhaps because of the friction in the cabinet, perhaps of because Mr. Hanna thought this was his hour and that if he waited longer the ever increasing popularity of Adam Beck would crowd him into the background. Upon what then were they going to the country. Not on Hydro-Electric, because in that they had the support of Mr. Rowell. Not on Workmen's Compensation because in that they had the endorsation of Mr. Rowell, only that he would not go further than the government had. The government claimed they had spent the people's money prudently and economically. But had they been economical?

The Financial Side.

The speaker spent a few profitable minutes in pointing out the accuracies of a campaign book that is being used by the government speakers. It was claimed by this that in 1904 the revenue of the province was $4,464,000. From the Blue Books Mr. Lindsey showed that the revenue in that year was really $6,000,000. The government claimed a revenue of $11,166,000 for 1913 and the first item on the list was a cash balance of $1,051,000 brought forward from the year before. An expenditure of $10,868,000 was claimed, but the books showed $16,091,000, or deducting what had been spent on Hydro-Electric and the Temiskaming Railway, $13,500,000. "The public debt in 1914 was $11,000,000. What do you think it is now?" asked the speaker. "Over forty millions — that's going some" he exclaimed, amid laughter.

Government Extravagances.

Mr. Lindsey dealt with the extravagance of the government in regard to Government House which he referred to as a castle nestling on the banks of the Don, not far from the county gaol, and overlooking a brickyard and several railways. Some one had suggested that it be converted into a home for superannuated engineers, who would feel at home amid the smoke. The Liberals did not object to decently housing the Lieutenant Governor, but the present structure without fitting would cost very nearly a million. The Prison Farm at Guelph would cost $1,300,000, $40,000 of that for a dairy. Dividing the numbers of prisoners into the sum of money it was going to cost and there was an individual expense of $2,500.

Mr. Lindsey criticized the school policy of the government. Last year the grant to rural schools had been cut down by 2% per cent. and the same thing applies this year. It was not a square deal between the respective classes. One had to be a friend of the government to get a square deal. The speaker instanced the purchase of the Dunlop timber limits of 185,000 acres at a dollar an acre and then read from the report of the cruiser to show that the limits only had 52 ft. of white pine, 3 ft. of red pine, 11 ft. of spruce, 22 feet of hemlock, 1 1-2 feet of cedar, 3 feet of oak, 1 1-2 feet of ash, etc., to the acre.

Support the Candidate.

The speaker urged his hearers to support their candidates in the East and West. "They are splendid, sterling men and they are going to win" he remarked. He expressed regret that the ladies had not a vote, but if Mr. Rowell was returned to power, the speaker had no doubt that he would try to do what he had been unable to do as a member of the Opposition in regards to giving the ladies a chance. "We want Newton Rowell to be our next premier. He is a clean, decent, square fellow, and has come out frankly and openly. His party owes him a deep debt of gratitude. He has behind him every clergyman of every denomination in the province.

"Shame" cries a voice from the audience.

"Does my friend see shame in the fact that the whole Christianity of the province is behind Mr. Rowell in this fight?" asked the speaker. "Evidently my friend prefers to have the whiskey party behind him.

"Mr. Rowell is not only going to be Prime Minister, but he is going to be one of the biggest, best and finest statesmen Canada has ever produced," concluded the speaker, amid cheers.

The Candidates.

Ex-Ald. G. A. Gillespie, the Liberal candidate for West Peterborough, was received with applause as he rose to address the audience. He was more than pleased to see the large number in the audience that night, and it warmed his heart to see the enthusiasm of the audience and the people of the riding over the temperance question in this campaign. It was not of the Liberal party's choice that there was an election at this time, and to cover the riding of West Peterborough in three short weeks would keep either candidate from early morning until late at night.

The most important plank of the speaker's platform was "Abolish the Bar". There were on the platform, Conservatives as well as Liberals, and the people were laying aside party politics to be governed by other views in this election.

"I'm not ashamed to have the ministers backing me in this campaign," said Mr. Gillespie, "and come to speak for me on the platform on this great moral issue."

The Review had said that Mr. Gillespie's policy was to abolish the bar and club licenses and leave the shop licenses, and that Mr Soden stood for the abolition of the club, the bar, and the shop licenses. But that was not the case. Mr. Rowell had promised local option on a majority basis for the shop licenses, and if local option was not effective then he would enact further legislation to cover the shop licenses. He, himhimself, would vote with any party that introduced a measure to abolish the shop licenses.

In conclusion, Mr. Gillespie said that he was confident that they (the electors of the riding of West Peterborough) would do their duty on June 29th.

Mr. W. A. Anderson, Reeve of Otonabee, and the Liberal Candidate, for East Peterborough, spoke very briefly. He explained that he had not snatched a day from his strenuous campaign in East Peterborough to come and speak at the meeting, but intended to be present in the capacity of listener only. He remarked that he didn't feel exactly safe in calling himself the Liberal candidate for East Peterborough, as, such a

Frank O'Connor, on Bicycle Was Struck by John Allan's Auto on Hunter Street --Escaped Injury

POLICE COURT CASE

Frank O'Connor, Bethune street, had the exhilarating experience yesterday afternoon of being run over at the corner of Hunter and George streets by an automobile driven by John Allan, of Lakefield. That he was able to pick himself from the dusty road after the wheels passed over him, and walk to the sidewalk, was the main surprise to those who witnessed the accident. He had been rolled on the road and was covered with dust. His clothes were torn and he gave indications of having been severely shaken up. Naturally he was.

Mr. O'Connor was riding a bicycle near the corner of Hunter and George when he was struck by the car which pedestrians stated crossed George street going west on Hunter at a speedy clip. He was thrown to the ground, his wheel smashed, and the car bumped over him. It was stated that the car was close to the curb, and that the cyclist was on the right side of the road.

Chief Thompson is putting the lid on the traffic by-law breakers, and a charge was laid against Mr. Allan.

AN INTERESTING REAL ESTATE CASE HEARD IN THE COUNTY COURT

"Rowell's Policy is My Policy"
G. A. GILLESPIE

Judgment Was Reserved in the Action of R. J. Kidd Who Claimed $125 Commission from Dr. Amys in Regard to Sale of Property.

THE EVIDENCE HEARD

This morning, in the County Court, the case of Kidd v. Amys was argued before His Honour Judge Huycke. In this action Mr. Kidd, the local real estate and insurance agent, is suing Dr. Amys for the sum of $125 due him through the sale of Dr. Amys' Charotte Street residence.

Mr. G. N. Gordon appeared for the plaintiff and Mr. D. O'Connell for the defendant.

Mr. R. Hicks, the local coal and lumber merchant, was the first witness for the plaintiff.

Examined by Mr. Gordon, counsel for plaintiff, Mr. Hicks said that in December, 1912, his attention was drawn to the property of Dr. Amys, on Charlotte Street. A short time previously he had purchased the Carton property, which adjoined the Amys property. It was suggested that he see Mr. Kidd, as the Amys property might be a good buy. Mr. Kidd gave him a figure of $6,000, which witness thought too high. Subsequently he discussed it fifteen or twenty times with Mr. Kidd, and finally one day he went to Dr. Amys' office with Mr. Kidd and discussed the matter with the owner of the property. The deal was not closed that day. Mr. Hicks had first told Mr. Kidd he would give $4,000, but later offered $4,500.

On April 4th of this year, Mr. Hicks telephoned Dr. Amys, and they met and discussed the matter. Finally an agreement was made for the purchase of the residence and land of Dr. Amys for $5,000, and Mr. Hicks paid $100 down on the land, agreeing to pay the balance in 30 days. Mr. Kidd was the only agent or person who drew Mr. Hicks' attention to Dr. Amys' property, and the only one, except Dr. Amys, who had discussed the deal. There was no other agent working on the case. He had only met Dr. Amys twice in connection with the purchase of this property.

To Mr. O'Connell, counsel for defendant, Mr. Hicks repeated that he bought his coal and wood yards on Charlotte Street, immediately west of the G.T.R. tracks, from Mr. Carton in November, 1912. He engaged Mr. Kidd to buy the land, and he concluded the deal for witness.

"Did you pay Mr. Kidd his commission for that?" asked Mr. O'Connell.

"Yes," replied Mr. Hicks.

"Did you know at that time that Mr. Kidd was acting for Mr. Carton?"

"No."

"Did he tell you he was acting for Mr. Carton?"

"No."

"Have you heard that since?"

"No."

Witness said that as far as he was concerned the negotiations for the Amys property were broken off and not resumed until the day in April when he concluded the deal with Dr. Amys himself.

Mr. R. J. Kidd, the plaintiff in the action, was then called to the witness box.

"What is your business, Mr. Kidd?" asked Mr Gordon.

"Insurance and real estate."

"How long have you been in the real estate business?"

"Since the summer of 1912."

"When did you first see Mr. Amys about this matter?"

"About the 15th of December."

"What happened that day?"

"I went to see Dr. Amys, told him I was in the real estate business, principally in central property, and that I had sold some property on Charlotte Street. I asked him if he would list his property with me."

"What did he say?"

"He agreed to list it with me and fixed the price at $5,000."

"Did you list it in your books?"

"Yes."

"Did you mention anything about commission?"

"Yes. I told him it would be 2½ per cent."

"What did he say to that?"

"He figured it out mentally to be about $125, and said that was all right."

Witness had taken Mr. Hicks to meet Dr. Amys, so that they could settle the matter between them. Between January and April Mr. Kidd saw Mr. Hicks several times about the matter. Then later Dr. Amys told him that the property had been sold for $5,000. He said that (Mr. Kidd) had made a good sale. Witness had not been paid his com-

EVIDENCE ALL IN TO-MORROW

Rapid Progress is Being Made at Enquiry Into Empress Disaster

TECHNICAL EVIDENCE

Examiner Special:

QUEBEC, June 19.—Evidence on the construction and equipment of the Empress of Ireland was practically monopolized at this morning's proceedings of the special Court of Inquiry.

Before the first witness was called into the box, Mr. Haight, chief counsel for the owners of the Storstad, rose to express regret.

In answer to certain definite questions by your Lordship," he said to Lord Mersey, "I made answers which I should not like to stand in the record unexplained."

"It may be," Lord Mersey replied, "that in my conduct of the inquiry yesterday I became a little heated because I did not like one of your witnesses."

Mr. Haight also completely absolved the legal representatives of the C.P.R., from any "manoeuvre to spirit away" Quartermaster Galway.

Oil having been poured on the waters, the Court proceeded with technical evidence.

Engineer O'Donovan, who had charge of the steering gear, said that he inspected it regularly, and it was in good order on leaving Quebec. He explained the steering gear. There was no physical connection between the wheel worked by the Quartermaster on the bridge and the rudder, which actually steered the ship. It was a system of water and glycerine in the cylinders and long pipes, involving complicated chemistry and mechanics. Captain Murray, the former Commander of the Empress, said she always steered well.

The Second Officer of the Storstad claimed, however, that when the Empress of Ireland was sighted he noticed she was steering badly.

It is expected that the evidence will be all in by noon to-morrow.

CONCESSION TO MILITANTS

Examiner Special:

LONDON, England, June 19.—That Premier Asquith will, when he meets Sylvia Pankhurst's delegation of working women to-morrow, promise some measure of woman's suffrage legislation as soon as the Home Rule Bill controversy is cleared away is regarded here to-day as almost certain.

Just how far the Premier will go, with the approbation of his Cabinet, is the problem. It is thought for a start he will merely propose votes for unmarried women and widows, self-supporting or of independent income, where the households are not otherwise represented in present enfranchisement.

This would not be a very wide concession, and probably not altogether acceptable to the militants, but it would be a fair start toward full womanhood franchise.

It is realized here that all authorities, from Royalty down, would welcome any move that would render their lives less uncomfortable as a result of the continued harassing of the militants.

FRIDAY, JUNE 19, 1914

MR. SODEN'S SINCERITY.

Mr. Soden, the abolish-the-bar, heep-thebar candidate in this contest, is reported in the Review as being not a mere "promiser" in the matter of his intensions to advance temperance. He is not likely to be taken at his word. He poses as a more advanced temperance man than Mr. Gillespie. That he may be, theoritically, but academic principles, personally held, and incapable of application, cut little figure. In this campaign the issue is the election or rejection of candidates, pledged to support the policy of bar abolition. That can be put into force by Mr. Rowell having behind him men who will stand up when the vote is taken to abolish the bar.

Mr. Soden is certainly a very "promising" temperance candidate, more promising in word than in prospects. He is even a stronger temperance man than the Whitney Government is a temperance government. It is said that he has added to his other jumps in the temperance platform, approval of the three-fifths' clause, which, since 1906, has saved 1313 bars to the liquor traffic, which would have been closed by a majority vote which Mr. Rowell promises to restore. Local option, enacted by the Liberals, was at first adopted in Owen Sound, and spread like an epidemic, till, when the Ross Government went out of power, it was adopted in 184 municipalities. The liquor traffic became alarmed and went to the Government; the government kindly put an end to the local option epidemic by enacting the three-fifths' clause, so that the votes of 100 friends of the liquor traffic were made equal to 150 votes of temperance men.

And this is the Government that claims to have done so much for temperance that the liquor party is behind it solidly in this contest.

With a government returned by the cash and votes of the liquor party lined up solidly in its favour, ever give Mr. Soden a chance to chirp on temperance? Mr. Soden asks the electors to swallow too much. Because he has swallowed his temperance professions and is working hand and glove with the liquor interests in this election he must not conclude that honest temperance men will swallow him as a temperance candidate. The liquor interests don't believe Mr. Soden is sincere, and if he is sincere, that he can do it any harm if elected as a supporter of the government that befriends, and is befriended by, the traffic.

LAST NIGHT'S MEETING.

Last night's meeting was a liberal education—not in the punning sense and because the chief speaker, a leader in a great moral reform, happens to be a Liberal. He is a leader in a fight where party claims have lost more force than in any election campaign in Ontario or Canadian history. The result of Mr. Rowell's splendid speech will be to clear up many points of doubt and give the honest elector a clear-cut picture of the supreme issue now before the people for decision.

Mr. Rowell is an interesting personality. No one can doubt his courage or his sincerity. He has obeyed the call of duty as he saw it, even though the position he assumed alienated some of his party friends. He believed the temperance issue was the greatest issue that could commend his attention, or that of the country, and he has courageously brought it into the position of supremacy in this contest. Never before has a so clear-cut and definite issue been presented; and never, on a public platform in Peterborough, was a policy presented with greater temperateness and more unequivocal directness and well-reasoned force. Mr. Rowell is a most logical and convincing speaker. He reasons; he does not rant; though if he wished to rant he had ample reason if not justification. His speech swept away the sophistries that support the absurd claim that the present Government is, or has been, a better friend to temperance than Mr. Rowell, as represented by his sweeping policy of abolishing bar and club licenses can be. He showed tellingly that this claim of the Government to being friendly to temperance must be a very weak one when it was considered to need the support of a deceptive and deceiving local option map. The government support in this contest conspicuously marked the line between the supporters of the Government and the forces behind the policy of Mr. Rowell. Behind his policy, he pointed out, were arrayed all the forces of Christianity, represented by the synods and conferences and councils of all the Christian churches and by ministers of every denomination; while, fighting the battle of the Government—lined up behind its leadership—were the solid ranks of the liquor interests, irrespective of party considerations. If the present Government were, and had been, so great a promoter of temperance, if it was likely to advance temperance sentiment; if the Government, itself, believed this; if the liquor party believed this, would it commit hari-kari by supporting a government which was doing more for temperance and to destroy the drink traffic, than Mr. Rowell, whose policy, if the people give him a mandate to give it effect, will wipe out every bar and club license.

There is no room for doubt as to where the line of demarcation lies. As Mr. Rowell put it: in this contest the man who does not vote against the liquor traffic votes for it; and every elector who allows any consideration whatever to influence his vote for the liquor traffic, must bear this share of the responsibility—if the bar is retained—for every life blighted, every home wrecked, by the bar.

Mr. Rowell is in earnest and if men like Mr. Gillespie and Mr. Anderson are elected, who pledge themselves to vote for any government that will introduce temperance legislation to the limit, they and others, similarly pledged, will certainly support Mr. Rowell, who, if given the power by the electorate, will, the first session, introduce a bill to abolish the bar.

Rowell has done his share; he has kept his promise to make the abolition of the bar the issue in the next election. The elector is here, and abolish the bar is the supreme issue.

It is now the opportunity, the duty of all who favour temperance, and have been clamouring, preaching and praying for the removal of the evils of drink, to present a solid front to the forces that are fighting in the last ditch for keeping the traffic a legal blight upon our Province, a contradiction to Christianity and all its teachings and all it stands for.

APPEAL TO YOUR HUMANITY.

"There was once a boy. He was fighting his father homewards past the saloons and bars. The father was drunk. The boy, being only a boy, was finally overpowered, and the father burst into a saloon. That boy stood on the street and wept and damned the saloons. I was the boy.

"We do not touch the heart of this temperance question until our own hearts are seared."—Alderman Maybee, (Conservative), at Southwest Toronto.

Politics Put Aside to Get Behind Rowell

The Bar a Blight on Labour and Hostile to Interest of Both Industry and Labour

"Get in the crowd and join the Rowell forces." That is the sentiment sweeping Ontario and every day adding to the froce of the temperance tide. People realizing the moral responsibility of the situation to "save the boy," are getting behind the temperance cause with the rallying cry, "The bar must go." The rush is not confined to clergymen either, for when such men as Mr. J. J. Mason, a big manufacturer, of Stratford, President of the Globe-Wernicke Company, reared in a Conservative household, and holding to the tendencies even to the defence of the three-fifths clause instituted by the Whitney government, forsakes party to fight for temperance, there is a mighty influence sweeping to the side of reform. Mr. Mason is not an isolated case, but he is typical.

Mr. Mason's Reasons.

Mr. Mason's reasons for getting behind Rowell and reform are best given in his own words:

"I followed the Conservative party as long as I could, perhaps a little longer. I even defended the three-fifths clause time after time in the Methodist Conference. That was before the Liberals came out definitely for temperance reform. Even at the present elections I am willing to stay with the party if I could see that they were going to do something.

"I believe that if a man, when he is faced by a clear-cut moral issue, such as this, fails to act according to his conscience, because he thinks that leaving his party will hurt him, he is just as culpable as if he changed his party simply for his own private advantage. I'm going to see this fight through now, and if other temperance people throughout the Province wake up we'll win.

"I do not know of a Conservative manufacturer in Stratford who is not going to vote for Rowell and the abolition of the bar in this election."

Still another Conservative who comes out in favour of abolish the bar, talks as follows:

The Blight on Labour.

"If the union men of Ontario could only see how it is sapping the best that life has for them they would vote it out. It is a damnable thing for the Labour cause."—Mr. Camidge, President of the Guelph Trades and Labour Council.

A Fight of Organized Christianity Against the Forces of Liquor Interests

number of Conservatives had swung in behind him on the temperance question. He hoped that when the Legislature assembled next term that East Peterborough would be supporting Mr. Rowell.

Mr. Rowell's Reception.

The audience gave Mr. Rowell a grand reception when he was introduced by Chairman Hartley. He began his discourse quietly and smoothly. At first he touched upon the temperance issue, but passed on to the broader generic issue of social betterment. Reciting the activities of other countries in this direction he intimated his prospective policy of appointing a cabinet minister with the single duty to investigate this broad question. Then Mr. Rowell linked up the evil of influence of the liquor traffic on social conditions and launched out upon an exhaustive presentation of the details of the great issue of the present election.

"I have travelled for some days up and down the Province," Mr. Rowell began. "I was west as far as Fort William, and on the East, I went as far as Cornwall. Everywhere I go I find the same manifestation of interest which you show and the same enthusiasm in this contest. I am glad to speak on behalf of Mr. Gillespie and Mr. Anderson. You have chosen two good candidates and I trust that in each case you have picked a winner. I like to be on the winning side sometimes and I want to take part in the campaign in this riding, in order that I may have the pleasure of sharing with you in the contest to elect these candidates.

Word for Mr. Peck.

I anticipated that Mr. Peck would be the candidate of the Conservative party in this riding. While we voted on opposite sides of most questions, neither of us ever said an unkind word against the other, and we had no more courteous gentleman in the House than Mr. Peck. But he is not the Government candidate in this election. I would still have found it my duty to be here; not that I did not appreciate Mr. Peck, but the Government candidate stands out for different principles to what I do.

Party Ties are Loose.

Party ties are hanging more loosely upon men's shoulders in this election than they have for years past, as far as this Province is concerned. Men are asking themselves seriously whether the obligations of party are greater or not than the principles of this issue before us. Men who have cooperated with the Conservative party are feeling it their duty to support us because of the principles we advance. It is not that they don't care for Sir James; it is not that they care for myself, personally. It is because we are in favour of progressive legislation in the public interest, and they are sharing in the great uprising against the open bar in Ontario.

Industrial Growth.

One of the significant features of this Province is the great growth of the industrial centres. They have increased their populations by thousands and hundreds of thousands, and at the same time the rural population has decreased. Mr. Rowell pointed out that the great growth of western Ontario and the Canadian West would swell the industrial centres. We are coming face to face with problems characteristic of the cities in the old land and in the United States. There is the question of housing, of sanitation, and other important questions. The high cost of living is one of the most important The labouring man, particularly he who is not highly skilled and, therefore does not receive high wages finds it difficult enough to provide a home of his own, to feed, clothe and educate his children, and to lay aside a little for a rainy day.

Need of Initiative.

In a country as rich as Ontario it should be possible to readjust social and economic conditions so that every toiler may be able to provide his own home, provide for his family and lay aside a sum for the inevitable rainy day. This becomes one of the most serious problems created by the growth of cities, and we should be able to prepare legislation that would provide a solution for this situation. A large number of men are well able to take care of themselves. The men of wealth do protect themselves; but the daily wage earner deserves the sympathetic consideration at the hands of the men entrusted with that responsibility. Anything that we can do for the good of the toiler is for the good of every man in the community. It raises the general standard and affects the whole life. The time has come when we must face this problem with greater courage, intelligence, and more sympathy than in the past.

Compensation Act History.

There should be a readjustment of the machinery of the Government in favour of the working man. If we had had a Minister of Labour in sympathy with the social changes who had the necessary intelligence and foresight we would not have had to wait until 1914 for a Compensation Act. Tracing the history of the Act, Mr. Rowell stated that it was introduced in 1907, but at the request of the Government was withheld until it could be looked into. Apparently no one was appointed to consider it. The years of 1908 and 1909 passed and still nothing was done. In 1910 another bill was introduced and a Commissioner appointed, but it was not until October 23, 1911, that the Commissioner sat for the first time. All the information secured by the Commissioner would have been on the files of the Department long before that had the Act received the attention it merited.

Problem of the Unemployed.

Mr. Rowell stated that as cities increase in size the problem of the unemployed becomes more and more serious. He pointed out that this was another question, looking toward the betterment and uplift of men, which deserved deep consideration. Following measures adopted in other countries, it should be possible to provide that no industrial toiler thrown out of work is left without protection from being reduced to want and dire distress. All these social problems are stirring the hearts of men who have the spirit of brotherly love. Mr. Rowell promised that if returned to power the new Government would address itself to the task of intelligently and sympathetically dealing with the whole question.

If returned to power a Cabinet position would be created with the sole purpose of dealing with the big subject.

Tax Reform.

Passing on to tax reform, he stated that the Liberals aimed to place on the statute books legislation permitting municipalities to shift a portion of the burden of municipal taxation that falls on improvements. This would include the assessment on buildings, business assessment and income. This readjustment would remove some of the handicap on industry and the improvement of premises would discourage the holding of land idle for speculation purposes.

The Insidious Bar.

In all our efforts to improve the social and industrial conditions we find ourselves face to face with an institution recognized by law and existing under the law which will largely undo all the good work we are trying to do. Lloyd George has said: "You may turn your slums into garden cities, but if you leave the public house untouched it will turn your garden cities into slums".

Taking up the history of the present temperance policy before the people, Mr. Rowell stated that in 1902 a referendum on the liquor act then submitted was taken. It failed; not because it did not receive a majority of the votes cast, but because the votes cast did not equal the number required under the statute. The leaders of the Churches interested in moral reform met to consider what action should be taken.

The Birth of the Policy.

At that meeting a resolution was moved by Rev. Dr. Carman, General Superintendent of the Methodist Church, and seconded by the late Rev. Principal Cavan, recognized as the leader of the Presbyterian Church, to appoint a deputation to wait on the Government asking for legislation to abolish the bar, the treating system and drinking in clubs and other legislation which would, in time, effectively curtail the liquor traffic. In that the policy of the abolition of the bar was born. It was endorsed year after year by the organized temperance forces, and submitted to the government, but no action was taken. Mr. Ross did not adopt it. It was presented to Mr. Whitney year after year, but he made no move to take it up.

Churches a Unit.

In the meantime large gatherings endorsed the policy and it was enforced by practically all the Christian churches. Mr. Rowell read a resolution passed at a meeting of the Church of England in Canada, at Ottawa, in 1908. Part of the resolution read that the liquor traffic was "a public menace and it was the duty of every man to abolish the bar". No one would say the English Church was unduly radical in a matter of this kind. It was a sane, clear-cut declaration of the Church and urged upon every man to cooperate in abolishing the bar. In 1909 the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church at Winnipeg, declared for the abolition of the bar, the treating system, and drinking in clubs. That resolution was reaffirmed at the last meeting of the General Assembly held recently in Woodstock, and the members were urged to support that policy.

Catholics in Favour of It.

There is no more clear-cut statement than that given by the Roman Catholic Church. At a meeting of the Bishops, in 1909, in Quebec, the evil of the liquor traffic was recognized, and, as a result of that meeting a pastoral letter was issued to the clergy, in which the suppression of the liquor traffic was urged.

Rev. Father Minahan, one of the prominent Catholic priests in Toronto, who has been associated with moral reform work and has appeared on public platforms, advocating the abolition of the bar, on one occasion said: "I believe the spinal column of the liquor evil is in the bar, and every drunkard receives his initiation in the bar room and graduates from that seminary of drunkenness". And he concluded by declaring in favour of the abolition of the bar.

Methodist Church Strong.

Mr. Rowell stated that all had read of the different resolutions passed by various Conferences of the Methodist Church. One after another, in clear and unequivocal terms they have decided in favour of this policy. Just this week, in Hamilton, the Congregational Union of Canada declared in favour of it. But why take the time to enumerate all these representations in favour of the policy?

In 1912 representatives of the temperance organizations asked Sir James Whitney to adopt the policy. He declined. Then they approached me and my colleagues and asked us to advocate it. We said we would consider it in all its aspects and hearings, and before the close of the session would formulate a policy and present it.

We concluded that the policy submitted to us was wise, was in the general interests of the people, and should be submitted to them. It means that every hotel and club license is wiped out, and once out is out forever. We deal with shops in a different way, just as the resolution from the temperance workers urged. We have gone as far as they have asked us. But this is not the ultimate goal. Nothing but the complete eradication of the traffic will suffice. In the beginning, however, it was desired that a practical policy be put into force.

Shops Restricted.

Shops come under further restrictions. They can be removed by local option; not with the three-fifths majority but with a simple majority in any municipality. I shall go one step further. In some counties that are dry there are in small towns straggling shops that have survived here and there.

We will make local option county wide, and every county can clean out any of these licensed shops by a straight county majority.

Local option would have carried in many places had the married women, otherwise qualified, possessed the right to vote. We will give these married women the franchise and they will help you remove the clubs by local option.

Why Not Shops Now?

We wipe out every licensed bar and club and give you a broader, more effective and more easily operated legislation with which to remove the shops when you choose to do it.

Mr. Rowell said the question had been asked why the shop was not included now. Conservatives who asked this knew that he was going much further than Mr. Hanna would go. And it was as far as the temperance forces asked. But he promised that if they agreed with him regarding the bar and club he would go as far as they desired in tackling the balance of the traffic. Nothing could lie in the mouth of any man who for some reason would claim that Rowell had not gone for enough to merit the support of every man in this and every other riding. (Prolonged applause).

Will Fight On.

Referring to a report that his wife had said that this was the one chance for the people of the Province to deal with the question, Mr. Rowell stated that Mr. Hanna had referred to this. In the first place, replied the speaker, my wife was not in London (Ont.), at the time; in the second place she did not make a speech, and in the third place she said neither that nor anything else. But Mr. Hanna is of an enquiring turn of mind, although he will not let us enquire into his conduct. He does not face the music when charged with an alliance with the liquor interests, and he dare not.

The people of this province on June 29 are going to wipe out the bar. That will be the answer to Mr. Hanna. Mr. Rowell stirred the gathering deeply when he declared that he had been against the bar all his life, and would be opposed to it until the last one disappears from the Province of Ontario.

No More Shops.

Some of our friends say we are going to substitute shops for licenses cut off. There may be some men who make that statement innocently, having received it from others, but it is absolutely without foundation. No shop licenses will be re-established in lieu of any hotel or club license wiped out. (Cheers).

Mr. Rowell referred to the maps used by Conservative speakers in this campaign and pointed out its falsehoods. It has been exposed several times in these columns.

"I appeal to Conservative friends here," the speaker said. "What do you think of the cause and the case of the Government when they have to back it up by such a false and misleading presentation of facts? And I have expressed myself mildly, compared with what I have heard Conservatives do." The map did not show how many municipalities would have been dry had the Government not laid on the three-fifths handicap. It does not tell the tale of crime and misery resulting in this Province from the three-fifths clause.

Did any member of the Government get behind the reduction of licenses in Toronto? On the contrary a license inspector issued an appeal opposing the by-law. I offered to go with Mr. Hanna and support local option campaigns. But Mr. Hanna has never been seen on such a platform.

I have done what I could to help the passage of local option by-laws.

In this election all the churches of the province are lined on one side and on the other all the forces and strength of the liquor interests.

They are going to try to defeat this policy and me. Not because I happen to be N. W. Rowell, but because I have acted upon the requests of the churches and the organized temperance forces and submitted their policy to the people.

Following this thought Mr. Rowell struck a keynote that drew a mighty response from the audience. "I appeal to every Conservative in this house. What respect can any temperance man have for me who says 'do this' and in the thick of the fight hunts for cover and leaves me alone in the open? Such a man ceases to deserve the respect of every decent citizen."

This fight is between organized Christianity and the liquor interests. You've got to choose and you can't shirk it. The question is vastly bigger than the Government. It is the issue of the home, the family and the future welfare of this province. I promised I would formulate a policy and submit it to the Legislature and the people. I've carried out my pledge, and I put upon you the responsibility of the decision. You vote for the bars to either go or stay. I say it in all solemnity that this must rest upon the conscience of the men who believe that the bar is a curse.

He who votes for the continuance of the open bar must share in the responsibility of every home wrecked, every life blasted, and every child denied a fair chance by the continued existence of the bar.

Support Needed.

Mr. Rowell told of the Liberal candidate in Haldimand, Mr. Gibson's experience with a Conservative father who was going to vote to remove the bars because of his boys.

"One of my boys may go wrong," this father said. "But I never want my boy to say to me: 'Father I went wrong through the open bar. You had the chance to help wipe it out, but you preferred your party to me. I'm down and out and you are responsible for it.' That's a responsibility I will never take. I'm going to vote for you and the abolition of the bar."

That is the responsibility every man must take. Mr. Rowell stated that the responsibility would extend to those who could have been more active between now and June 29. For in this issue he who is not with us is against us, and every man must take his stand on one side or the other. (Cheers).

Promise Fulfilled.

I place myself before your judgment. Amid the abuse of my opponents and the discontent of political friends have I deviated one hair's breadth from my promises? (Cries of No).

I've tried to do my duty by you. Will you do your duty—not by me—but to yourself, to the men, women and children of Ontario on June 29. (Chorus of answers "We will").

How can you do it in Peterborough County? By sending two men pledged to back us up in wiping out this curse!

Will you do it? The audience responded with a great "we will."

I believe you will. I am confident that the men of this Province are big enough, patriotic enough, and that there is enough of the Christian spirit to care for the other fellow to rise above party ties and declare for the policy of the abolition of the bar.

Prolonged cheers followed Mr. Rowell's conclusion and the meeting finished with cheers for the King, Rowell, Gillespie and Anderson.

Advance Party Will Go To-night

The advance party of the 57th Regiment in command of Acting Quarter Master Captain Carruthers, and composed of twenty-eight non-commissioned officers and men, will leave for Petawawa on the early morning C. P. R. train to make arrangements for the coming of the Regiment. The main body, which it is expected, will be 300 strong, will entrain on Sunday morning at 10 o'clock, leaving the Armouries at 9.30 a.m. The Regiment will return to Peterborough early Thursday morning.

Use a funnel in filling a hot water bottle if you would save the rubber.

It is a good idea to rinse muslin hangings, children's dresses and pinafores in alum water. It will render them non-inflammable.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

WAR CORRESPONDENT WAS ONE TIME IN HIDING AT WOODVILLE

Death in London of Bennett Burleigh, the Great English War Correspondent, Recalls Interesting Event.

STORY OF CAREER

(Lindsay Warder.)

The death in London on Wednesday of Bennett Burleigh, the great English war correspondent, recalls the fact that he was, at one time, in hiding at Woodville from the United States authorities. He was a nephew of Mrs. Morrison, wife of the late John Morrison, M.P., of Woodville, and stopped at their residence at a time when he was hiding from the officials of the United States owing to his espousal of the cause of the Confederacy. The following despatch will, therefore, be of interest:

LONDON, June 17.—The death occurred to-day of Bennett Burleigh, the oldest and most widely known of war correspondents. A Scotsman born in Glasgow nearly seventy years ago, he early followed the drum, for he joined the ranks of the Confederates in the United States Civil War, and fought through the entire campaign, being twice captured and sentenced to death by the northern troops.

Many Years With One Paper.

Later he returned to newspaper work and reported a number of campaigns for a news agency. In 1872 he began his connection with the London Daily Telegraph, which lasted till his death. He followed for that paper the Egyptian war and the various Soudan campaigns, the French annexation of Madagascar, the Ashanti war, the Spanish expedition in Morocco, the first Greeco-Turkish war, the Tripolitan war, the Transvaal war, the Somali war, the Russo-Japanese war, and the recent Balkan war. For many years he was able to visit his home on only rare occasions owing to his constant service in the field.

At one time Burleigh went into politics, and stood for a Scottish constituency. Outside of his newspaper writing he was the author of a number of books, which were widely read.

Story of His Career.

Burleigh was not a southerner, but a Glasgow Scotsman, who was first engaged by the Confederate forces because of his skill in inventing means for the destruction of the vessels blockading southern ports. He was lieutenant in the famous seizure of the steamers Philo Parsons and Island Queen in the attempt to capture the United States gunboat Michigan on Lake Erie. The filibusters, after the failure of the expedition scattered to various parts of Ontario, and Burleigh went to Guelph, where A. W. Wright, now of Toronto, was a young lad in the Herald office. Previously Burleigh, after his arrival in Canada from the Confederacy, had stayed in Guelph, and rumour has it that he had secretly induced friends he made there and at Preston to cast a cannon for him for belligerent uses. The United States Government, through the spy, Godfrey P. Hyams, had learned of his whereabouts after the Philo Parsons affair, and Canadian officers were detailed to arrest him for piracy and for breach of the neutrality laws.

How Wright Aided Him.

Burleigh had evidently been warned from Toronto that officers were on his trail, for one day he encountered young Wright and suggested that they go fishing down at Puslinch lake. The pair took a horse and rig and started out, and ere long reached a point near Preston commanding a wide outlook over the country. A mile back in the direction of Guelph was seen a horse and buggy being driven furiously.

From this point of vantage the road took a dip into a deep ravine, with a small stream and bridge. Driving hurriedly down the incline, Burleigh jumped out of the buggy and hid under the bridge. Wright drove on leisurely up the next hill, and was in ten minutes or so overtaken by the officers who demanded to know what had become of his companion. Wright professed ignorance of any companion and the men drove furiously ahead to Preston, where they expected to find Burleigh in hiding. The latter had, in the meantime, calmly taken to the woods, and walked across country back to Guelph.

Burleigh Was Arrested.

By some mischance, however, his presence back in town was betrayed, and he was seized and taken to Toronto, where Chief Justice Draper ordered his extradition. His defence was that he was a Confederate officer acting in the service of his country, and that he had been guilty of no belligerent act on Canadian soil. The British Government, on representations being made in London, investigated and ordered that he be set free.

LITTLE BOY IS SERIOUSLY INJURED

LINDSAY, June 18.— A distressing accident occurred Wednesday evening in West Ops, when Simon Kirley, aged eleven years, son of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Kirley, sustained very severe injuries.

The little fellow was on his way home from school in company with several companions, and climbed up on a load of stone in order to enjoy a ride. One of the boy's hats fell off, however, and young Kirley offered to get it. While in the act of letting himself down he tripped and fell to the roadway and it is believed the waggon passed over him. The little fellow was found to be badly hurt and was carried to his home, and Dr. Blanchard summoned. It was found that he had sustained a severe cut in the head, his collar bone and two or three ribs were broken, his side badly injured and one of his lungs affected.

BAPTISTS URGED TO WIPE OUT BAR

In an editorial under the heading, "The Hour Has Struck," The Canadian Baptist of the issue of June 18 has this to say on the Ontario election contest:

"But one thing, above and beyond all the writing and talking and praying, we would urge, that those who have the privilege of casting ballots do so in a way that will count for the abolition of the bar and club licenses. Writing and talking and praying will have their place until the end of the contest, but that cannot take the place of voting. And voting has been placed in the hands of men who are to determine the issue. However much has been, and will be, done in the way of speech and prayer the thing which will decide the issue is in the power of the men who are to cast the ballots. Hence, with all earnestness and modesty, we beseech every voter who reads our columns not only to speak and pray for the success of the Rowell policy, but also to mark his ballot in its favour. This may be asking a Liberal to cast his ballot for a Conservative; it may be asking a Conservative to cast his ballot for a Liberal. Be it so; the hour has struck when men who care for the best moral interests of society, who confess that the liquor traffic is Christianity's greatest menace, who know that the bar-room is the tap-root of the drinking custom, if need be, should break away from traditional party lines and vote as they have talked and prayed."

News From Petawawa

Where Hundreds of Peterboro' Boys Are Spending a Couple of Weeks Under Military Discipline

PETAWAWA MILITARY CAMP, June 17.—Predictions that the strict enforcement of the Minister of Militia's liquor regulations would keep down the attendance at the training camps are hardly fulfilled. At least eight thousand men are under canvas now, and units are arriving at full strength.

However, there is much dissatisfaction felt by many of the officers and men with the dry regulations, and Col. Sam Hughes could hardly be termed popular about the camp. In fact, it is doubtful if it would be considered for the minister to wander alone in sections of the camp after sunset if threats certain men not now in camp were heard to have made can be taken to mean anything.

According to officers who would not object to a glass of beer on a hot day, there is very little "wet stuff," if any, within the lines and what there is is kept under cover. "The regulations are certainly being lived up to," said one officer. "I haven't had a drink since I arrived. You can see for yourself that the law is being obeyed, nothwithstanding the lack of liquor the militia seems to be quite popular this year." The first and second mobilization concluded yesterday. Seven regiments of cavalry and two cavalry field ambulances arrived at the new Thistle camp, and are now in training. Besides the artillery there are three brigades or about a dozen regiments of infantry at the Petawawa camp.

The scheme of mobilization was carried out in a manner that was both surprising and highly satisfactory to the officers. The time schedule was lived up to as has never been the case before. The cavalry division was complete within four minutes of the time scheduled. The infantry was to arrive by ten, and only one train was later than midnight. In no case were any of the trains late through any fault of the soldiers.

The present depression throughout the country is generally believed here to be the cause of so many attending camp this year. Work is scarce and many welcomed the chance to come this year on failing to find employment.

TRAFFIC BY-LAW WAS BROKEN

Two Motorists Fined in Court This Morning

F. E. Jones, of Jones Bros.' livery, Simcoe street, and C. H. Pennefather, automobile owners, were each fined five dollars and costs, amounting to $7.60, for a breach of the traffic by-law, cutting the corners too short, instead of proceeding to the centre of the intersecting streets, and then taking the right side, by Magistrate Dumble at the Police Court this morning.

P. C. Serante testified in the case of F. E. Jones to the effect that Mr. Jones was coming west on Brock street at noon on June 18th, and turned the corner on to George street very shortly. Mr. Jones in the box stated that he always drove very carefully and kept the right of the road.

Mr. Pennefather did not appear in court.

Dr. R. W. Frank did not appear in court, but entered a plea of guilty to the charge of running his car at night without lamps. He was also fined five dollars and costs, amounting to $7.60.

His Worship in imposing the fines remarked that the automobile and traffic laws were made to protect the people and must be observed.

Didn't Tie Horses.

Robt. Brownlee and Dennis Hobbins were each fined two dollars and costs, $4.60 in all, for allowing their horses to stand on the street without being properly tied. Both pleaded guilty and did not appear in court.

Excursionist Got Drunk.

An excursionist from Port Hope yesterday imbibed too freely of intoxicants while in the city, and a cab had to be called in order to get him to the police station. He pleaded guilty and was fined two dollars and a half.

George Clark, charged with vagrancy, was again remanded for a week while the Chief looks further into his past history.

MR. TODD'S INQUIRY OF THE CANDIDATES

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—Will you allow me space for a few words by a humble layman.

I am a believer in righteousness, freedom of conscience, yea, every good work. I have never been a member of either political associations. I have always kept my hands free, that when an election came on I was free to select the party I considered the better. I am in that position now, and after attending both meetings in the Opera House, I am still undecided as to the better of the two parties. I listened to Mr. Rowell with a great deal of pleasure. To my mind he is an orator, and his manner convincing. However, I cannot say that he strengthened his case any with me, because he appeals to the emotional, appearing as though he was making a hobby horse of temperance, while I believe all questions should be considered. I wanted to ask a question last evening, but as it had not been put to the Soden meeting, I concluded it would not be fair, and that I would put the question to both candidates and Mr. Rowell through the press.

At the present time we are brought face to face with the greatest problem with which we have to do, that of the destruction of evil, and the freeing of our fellowman.

One of the phases being handled at the present, the liquor question, how we are to free our fair Dominion from drunkenness. I think we universally agree as to the great curse of the liquor traffic, and to my conception, it is only a matter of time, we know it is not of God, but of the devil, and the law of God is, "Thou shalt surely die," so that those engaged in the business, should be wise and get out in time.

Paul in specifying the works of evil, the things that would keep us out of Heaven, alongside of drunkenness he placed uncleanliness, in fact it comes first in the list of evils. While we are legislating to prohibit men from offering to our boys and girls one phase of evil, why have we to submit to laws which give mortal men and women, power and authority not only to offer other phases of evil, but to force young and old, male and female, to submit to having uncleanliness, poison, injected into our bodies. I mean this cursed and barbarous habit, or law of compulsory vaccination. This to me is a burning question as well as the liquor question, for to me directly the liquor has not affected me, because I did not have to take it. This I cannot say concerning the devil we are compelled by law to have injected, I presume because it is too obnxious and unclean to take into the mouth.

During the bringing down of the health law of 1912, hundreds of us protested against this compulsory clause, but Sir James and his government forced it upon us. Now, before I poll my vote on the 28th of June, I want to know if Mr. Rowell and his followers are prepared to do any better than Sir James. While both our candidates and Mr. Rowell are emphatic in the abolition of the bar, will they help us in wiping from the statute books compulsory vaccination.

This question must be satisfactorily answered before I decide my vote in this election. I believe we are responsible for the care of the body as well as soul, and should be free to use the best means available.

Thanking you for space, Mr. Editor, I am,

Sincerely,
R. J. TODD.

AN INTERESTING CASE

mission yet. He did not represent Dr. Amys in this matter out of friendship.

To Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Kidd said that he was with Mr. W. H. Hill in the insurance business before he went in business for himself. Mr. Hicks did not employ witness to buy the Amys property. When witness listed Dr. Amys' property he had in mind two buyers—Mr. Hicks and Mr. G. Walter Green.

Witness had the Carton property listed, and was not employed by Mr. Hicks to buy the property. He took Mr. Hicks' offer to Mr. Carton, who agreed to accept it if Mr. Hicks would pay the witness' commission. Mr. Hicks agreed to this and the transaction was completed.

Mr. Kidd said he had known Dr. Amys for some time. He made an arrangement between Mr. Hicks and Dr. Amys to meet in the latter's office. He had not billed Dr. Amys for the commission, but Mr. Gordon had written a letter asking him for the commission.

Dr. Amys, the defendant, was the only witness called by the defence. He had lived in Peterborough practically all his life, and practised here for 12 years. He had resided on Charlotte Street for 5 years.

One day Mr. Kidd was passing, and asked the doctor if he had any time to spare. The latter invited him into his office, and Mr. Kidd said that two people were wanting the Carton property next to his, and if either of them got it they would want his property too. Dr. Amys said he would sell for $5,000. No commission was mentioned, and Mr. Kidd was not engaged to sell the land for Dr. Amys. Shortly after that Mr. Hicks rang him up and they had a talk about the matter. There was no other interview between Mr. Kidd or Mr. Hicks until the interview in April. That day Mr. Kidd brought Mr. Hicks to the doctor's office, and there the deal was completed. At that time he said to Mr. Hicks,

"Do you think Mr. Kidd will ask any commission for this?"

Mr. Hicks had replied,

"No, I don't think so. He is doing some business for me."

He had not employed Mr. Kidd, and thought he was acting for Mr. Hicks.

To Mr. Gordon, Dr. Amys said that he had spoken to Mr. Hicks about the case. Then Mr. Hicks told him that he didn't remember saying to him that Mr. Kidd wouldn't expect a commission. He only saw Mr Kidd once or twice about the matter and had no recollection of Mr. Kidd bringing him Mr. Hicks' offer of $4,500.

A MAGNIFICENT VOICE AND FAULTLESS METHOD

EVA MYLOTT, the Australian contralto (who scored a complete triumph in her American and Canadian tours last fall), possesses a pure contralto voice of exceptional richness, with the lower registers equal to that of Clara Butt. The greatest critics of the world have paid glowing tributes to her wonderful voice, artistic temperament and superb interpretation, while her diction has been described as the finest of any singer now before the public.

MISS MYLOTT inherited her musical gifts from both parents. At the age of seven her voice was already attracting attention, and while yet a mere child she was famous all over the continent. Mme. Melba, returning to the land of her birth, heard her and with the magnanimity of the truly great artist, recognised her unmistakable genius, and taking the warmest interest in the young singer, personally introduced her to Mme. Marchesi in Paris.

MISS MYLOTT, at the close of her studies under this great teacher, created a furore at the pupils' concert in the Salle Hoch, and Mme. Marchesi referred to her as a "favourite pupil," and said, "I have no hesitation in prophesying for Miss Mylott a great future in the artistic and musical world, from her great power and compass, artistic perception and temperament.

In London she studied under Randegger and Henry Wood (Oratorio), Mme. Guy d'Hardilot (Ballads), Mme. Minna Fischer (Germanlieder), and also received private tuition from Mme. Melba, who took the greatest pride and interest in her protege. She was immediately engaged for the Albert Hall, Queen's Hall concerts, Philharmonic and Choral Societies from all over the British Isles. She toured with Melba, Trebelli and Albani, and was honoured with the special patronage of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales.

MISS MYLOTT has a striking stage presence and a charming personality. This, added to the rich, powerful organ quality of her mellow contralto voice, which she controls with perfect ease and faultless methods, it is small wonder that she has roused vast audiences to the highest pitch of enthusiasm, and that in the land of her birth it is a nation's pride that bestows on her the affectionate title of "Australia's Contralto."

YOUTH PURSUED BY POLICE DROPPED DEAD

Eye-Witness of Fight Suffers Heart Disease When Chased

MANSFIELD, O., June 19.—"Half an hour late as usual," was the remark made by Fred Bottling, 19, when Officer Ewart arrived at the scene of a street fight about 2 o'clock in the morning.

Bottling then started to run, and the police officer, thinking he was one of the fighters, started in pursuit. Bottling had gone less than two blocks when he fell. He got up, but advanced only a few feet when he fell dead. The officer stumbled over his body.

Bottling had been one of the witnesses of the fight. His death resulted from heart failure.

COW DASHES AWAY WITH MAN ON BACK

Cyclist Lands in Strange Porch After Colliding With Animal

WASHINGTON, Pa., June 19.—Riding a bicycle, J. F. Welch, of Washington, started out with the intention of attending services at the Hill Church, near town, but instead he was the central figure in a Wild West performance, with the bicycle and a cow in supporting roles. A short distance from the borough line Welch encountered a herd of cattle. All fled except one obstinate old cow, which refused to budge.

Welch, going at rapid speed, did not divine her intentions soon enough to avoid a collision. He was flung from the wheel and alighted squarely on bossy's back. The cow forgot all about standing up for her rights and dashed down the road, bellowing and plunging. Then she stopped and bucked. Welch, clinging to horns and hide, stuck fast.

Then following another gallop down the road and more bucking. Repeating the performance a third time, the cow succeeded in tossing Welch into a field. Welch walked back home unhurt, except in his feelings.

INSPIRATIONAL SUCCESS

Fred H. Berold, Rich Printer, Who Failed "Cut Out Chance."

(By Herbert Corey)

Success was just a little too much for Fred H. Berold. He ran right through it—and came out on the other side—and found himself almost extravagantly broke. Then he did the same thing all over again in the same way. Then he gave a little thought to the hit or miss manner in which he had been doing business. Now he is rich again, because of the two rules he formulated:

"My bookkeeper must be able to tell me on an hour's notice what I have and what I owe.

So far as possible I eliminate the element of luck. I do all my worrying about what may happen before I sign a contract."

Berold to-day prints 90 per cent. of the paper bags in which the American user buys his tobacco. The machine which prints these bags in colours and slips in each a paraffined container is Berold's invention. Rather, it is an adaptation of the less efficient machine devised by other men. Another company, of which he is the head, manufactures a simplified colour printing press. Berold took the twist out of the twist invented by the other men, and made his machine fool proof. And his life depended on it. He does not pretend to know any more about machinery than does the average journeyman printer. He is, first of all, a good printer, and second, a good business man. He was forced into invention by the needs of his business.

When he was ten years old he went to work in a printing office. There he did what the youngsters usually do in a small office. When he wasn't setting type or running a press, he was on his way down-town for two dollars' worth of stock. Next day he might be sent out to collect the money for the job into which that stock had been translated. It gave him a good idea of how the printing business is conducted.

Printers Don't Know Business.

"It isn't conducted, as a matter of fact," he will tell you. "Seven printers out of ten do not know whether they are going to make money on a job or lose on it. They run their affairs by guesswork and perspiration."

So that when he was ready to marry he decided to open a shop of his own. Perhaps his ambition had been stimulated by a visit to Chicago, where the flaring electric lights of the world's fair seem to have tremendously impressed him. He had no trouble in buying a printing outfit on time, for his reputation was that of a hard-working journeyman. But he had no money—absolutely not a nickel. He went to his two brothers for aid. They were able to give him just $19. In two years he was out of debt and his establishment was worth $10,000.

"The point is," Berold said, "that I didn't know how I got it, or I knew that I had worked hard. But I had paid no attention to costs and I had no overhead expense."

His business grew so rapidly that he found he must enlist more capital. Instead of buying stock by the wagon load he needed it by the carload. The men who put the capital in put Berold out. The business he had established was flourishing, and they decided to manage it themselves. Berold sold his stock for what he could get for it which was hardly anything. The only bidders were the men who had elbowed him out. His personal credit was away above par, so that he had no difficulty in buying another printing outfit on the deferred payment plan. Again his business grew too rapidly. He took contracts which involved heavy purchases of stock. That meant financing months ahead. Eventually his first experience was repeated. The new company flourished but the men with the money were in command. He made a third start.

He Knows How.

This time he had learned his lesson. He saw that as a printer in a small way he had been successful because he had been able to give his personal attention to every detail The trouble had been that as his business expanded he had not grown with it. He remained a printer. So that he devised a business system of his own. His bookkeeper can show him on short notice precisely what his standing is. He has become a missionary of cost knowledge. He addresses himself specifically to printers, but generally to all small business men.

"If you cannot make money on a job let the other fellow have it," he urges. "Familiarize yourself with every item of expense. Perhaps you can drop an item here and there. When your business begins to keep you awake nights stay awake nights until you find out what's wrong."

That plan made an inventor of Berold. He had taken a contract to print paper bags for a Cincinnati tobacco company and the bags were costing too much, although he was making a profit. He studied his machines until he saw how the operation of printing could be simplified and cheapened. He went to a draughtsman to prepare plans for his invention, but he knew so little about mechanics that the draughtsman could not help him. So he eventually went to a pattern maker and the pair literally muddled out the first rough draught. Today he has what amounts to a monopoly of the tobacco bag printing business, because of his machine. His colour printing press was evolved by precisely the same means and for the same reason.

Rain Worth Two Millions

TORONTO, Ont., June 19.— "This is a two million dollar rain," remarked an observatory official this morning in discussing the weather. Welcome showers fell this morning in all parts of Ontario. From Windsor to Kingston, and Niagara Falls to Muskoka, came reports of bountiful rains, delighting the farmers and gardeners and all interested in them. "The prospects are for cool weather after to-day's showers," said the weatherman, "then a general warming up. "Just what Ontario will need for its hay crops." Local grain men report that the prospects for good harvests of wheat and oats throughout Ontario generally are bright.

Successful Picnic at Lakefield Yesterday

The annual picnic of the Catholic Church congregation in Lakefield yesterday, drew about one hundred of Peterborough's citizens, and a large number of the residents of the surrounding country. The weather was delightful and the amusements provided entertainment for the visitors. One of the attractions was a ball game between the Lakefield town team and a picked team from Peterborough, the latter winning out by 6-8, in ten innings. The races were keenly contested.

Forty Bodies to Be Buried Immediately

Special Wire to The Examiner:

QUEBEC, Q., June 19.—Local coroners have given orders that forty bodies of Empress victims still unidentified here must be buried without delay. One body of a woman was found on shore near Rimouski yesterday, but was impossible of identification or embalming, being so badly eaten by fishes and the action of the water.

DID THEY CARRY ARMS CONTRARY TO COLONEL THE HONORABLE SAM'S ORDERS?—There is much talk concerning the action of the 65th Regiment of Montreal, which notwithstanding the positive orders of the Minister of Militia, paraded with arms at the religious procession of Corpus Christi. It is said now that the rifles they carried were not Government rifles, but obsolete weapons out of old stock. The picture shows the officers of the 65th Regiment waiting for the Corpus Christi procession to start, in front of Notre Dame Church. The 65th paraded with arms and saluted the Host at the elevation as on past occasions of this kind. The regiment also acted as a body guard to Bishop Gauthier who carried the Host through the streets. On the left is Sir Rodolphe Forget, honorary colonel of the 65th, and a prominent Conservative, and next to him is Senator Casgrain, honorary Lt.-Col. of the 83rd, Joliette Regiment. On the senator's left is Rev. Father Deschamps, chaplain of the 65th.

Will Ask For A Nine Hour Day For Street Paving Operations

Action Decided Upon at Meeting of Trades and Labour Council Last Night.

LABOUR DAY CELEBRATION

(By Official Scribe.)

There was a fair attendance at the meeting this week, President J. J. Hartley being in the chair.

Another Request to City Dads.

The City Fathers should possess a goodly amount of the amiable brand of disposition, as so many demands are made of them, for which they get the unstinted abuse which goes with their job. The secretary was instructed to write, before the remainder of the street paving was to be contracted for, that a clause be inserted calling for a nine-hour day.

No reply has been received from the City Council to the letter asking why local firms have not been given a chance to tender for public work. One firm securing the plum without opposition.

The Independent Labour Party.

Notice of motion was given that a branch of the Independent Labour Party be formed. Discussion on this was more or less vigorous and lengthy, but as so many other cities are falling into line Peterborough must not be out of the running.

Labourers of the Right Kind.

Encouraging reports were presented relating to the vigour with which the tradesmen's assistants were building their local. Good foundation work was being laid and the superstructure was planned to be the best ever.

On Wednesday, June 24, a public meeting is to be held, when all members of the Trades and Labour Council are asked to attend, each bringing a contribution of a speech or song to enliven the proceedings. The way the labourers have caught on would put to shame many of the skilled workers of the city, and that the Labourers will head the Labour Day procession in numbers seems to be a foregone conclusion.

Labour Day, 1914.

All members should get a move on for the next meeting. Labour Day plans are to be laid, well and truly, and as the principal officers this year are from the Bricklayers' and Masons' Unions, a glorious blue print of appropriate industrial celebration should be presented.

IT DOESN'T SEEM RIGHT.

It really is very droll;
Ten miles of roadways smooth and flat
Beneath our flying car may roll;
No word of praise; at last, a hole—
Aha! Oho! We notice that!

Through fifty years of married life
A pair may go without a spat;
We scarcely look at man or wife.
But let there show a shade of strife—
Aha! Oho! We notice that!

Our neighbour drudges day by day,
At evening smokes with his flat;
He's but a dismal dog, we say;
He has a fight and runs away—
Aha! Oho! We notice that!

Now, let some diamond artist pound
The pill 300 with his bat
Or swing a winning home round.
Say, once a week—oh, joyful sound!—
Aha! Oho! We notice that!

In baseball one good, clever play
Pins many errors to the mat;
But is it so in life? Oh, nay!
We beat the jinx the livelong day—
Aha! Oho! We notice that!

When an eiderdown comfortable has lost all its elasticity, hang it out in the balmy sun for a few hours, and all the life will come back to it.

CASE WILL BE TESTED

Michael Fraser's last will and testament will again be tested in the courts of Toronto ere long. The case of the Midland man has become quite famous, and the legal battle promises to be fierce. The estate amounts to over $40,000.

Michael Fraser died November 22, 1912. His widow applied for probate of his will, dated February 28, 1910, a few weeks later. The will had been made soon after deceased's marriage. Miss McCormick, a cousin of Fraser's, entered a caveat, and the action Fraser v. McCormick then began. Unsound mind and undue influence was alleged by the defendant. Mrs. Fraser has asked that this action be transferred to a higher court, having sworn a lengthy affidavit. Mr. Justice Britton, who was the first judge to pass judgment on Frazer's mental capacity, has given the required order and the case will be transferred.

Mrs. Frazer, nee Robertson, was 30 years of age when she married her husband, and he was 80. The first marriage ceremony planned did not take place as she and the wedding party were barred from the house. Action against Robert Irwin was taken next month for damages and for an injunction to restrain from interference with the wedding, which took place in January, 1910. Miss McCormick, the cousin, then entered action for an order to declare the marriage invalid, and an interim injunction was obtained restraining Mrs. Fraser from interfering with her husband's estate. The high court later dissolved this, an issue being directed to ascertain the state of Frazer's mind. Mr. Justice Britton, in November, 1912, gave judgment in which he held Fraser was not at the time of inquiry of unsound mind. The Divisional Court after more examination and argument reversed this decision. In June, 1912, the court of appeal reversed the decision of the divisional court, and ordered a new trial. Soon after Fraser died.

GAVE FATHER'S MONEY TO HER LOVER

BROOKLYN, June 19.—The Grand Jury yesterday presented an indictment charging Herbert Scholtz, of 30 Linden treet, with forgery in the second degree, grand larceny in the second degree, petit larceny and criminally receiving stolen goods. Hidden behind this statement lies the story of a young girl, who says she was induced by a gay young Lothario, with whom she was infatuated, to take from her father's business a small fortune which, it is alleged, she turned over to her lover.

The girl has been committed to a reformatory, where she will be held for several years, on a charge of vagrancy and waywardness. Her name is Anna Martha Sander and she is said to be but 17 years old. She lived with her parents at 218 Union Avenue, and several years ago when she finished school, she took charge of the books in the office of her father at 216 Union Avenue. Her father, Carl Sander, had amassed a competency in the manufacture of fixtures for delicatessen stores.

Mr. Sander implicitly trusted his daughter and turned over to her the books and finances of his business. He was accustomed, it is said, to sign a number of blank checks and leave them with his daughter.

This method of conducting his business proved very satisfactory for a long time, until his daughter became acquainted with young Scholtz, when, it is said, things began to go wrong. Scholtz, a dashing young fellow with a fine appearance, still in his early twenties, began to pay attention to Anna, and the girl was soon much taken with him. Then one day, according to her story, Scholtz asked her to let him have a few dollars and she with her father's bank checks at hand, found no difficulty in accommodating him. More requests for money followed, it is alleged, and when she tried to refuse to grant them, Miss Sander says Scholtz threatened to go to her father and disclose the fact that she had already taken some of his money for other than business purposes. To prevent exposure she acceded to his demands.

The transaction on which the indictment is based took place about the first of August two years ago. Scholtz, it is alleged, went to the Sander office and demanded money from the girl. She had in the office a blank check with her father's signature, and she made the check out to Scholtz's order for $125 in his presence. Scholtz took the check to a saloon on Broadway, indorsed it, and had it cashed, it is alleged.

The transaction was not discovered until recently, when the books of the concern were gone over. So implicit was Mr Sander's faith in his daughter, it is said, that he quarreled with his son when the latter suggested that things were not going right in the office, and that he should be allowed to go over the books to learn the financial status of the business.

When the examination was finally made, however, it was found that almost $300 had disappeared. The loss of this sum was hidden for so long, it is said, by the simple process of tearing up the checks by means of which small sums were obtained, as Miss Sander admitted she had done with the check for $125 when it came back. The girl was at once prosecuted for her part in the matter, and on May 5, last, was committed to the Bedford Reformatory by Magistrate Folwell.

It was with great difficulty that she was induced by detectives and representatives of the District Attorney's office to tell the story implicating her lover, and all the facts in the case were not obtained until a number of interviews had been had. It is said that even now her faith in him is unshaken, and she is willing to make alone the reparation the law demands for their alleged acts.

ANOTHER WIN FOR TRACEY

BRANTFORD, June 18.— Peterborough kept up their winning streak here to-day at Brantford's expense, and they did it handily by batting out a ninth inning victory. Fox's home run counted two in the sixth, and singles by Welsh, King and Gorman did the trick in the ninth. Asher for Brantford, was hit hard and lost his fourth straight game.

The Brantford infield was changed today, Nelson and Forgue replacing Wagner and Honeck, who were released. The score:

TO-DAY'S STOCK MARKET

Latest reports point to a rallying of a moderate character on account of the technical position.

Expanding investment tendencies are now being observed for account, both of institutions and individuals. This is natural toward the end of June. It will further reduce the floating supply of securities, which are already limited.

One of the greatest uncertainties, from an investment viewpoint, will be coincident with the disbursements of July dividends and interest. We refer to the Eastern Railroad rate decision. The rails of the North West are bought for investment on account of a fairly good business condition in that section — when buyers are active they show a tendency to favour Atchinson, Illinois Central, Chicago, Great Western, Norfolk and Western, Bethlehem Steel, Union Pacific, and C.P.R.

Pools are doing practically nothing accepting offerings in specialities on recessions. Guggenheim Exploration is expected to go higher.

American stocks in London steady ⅛ to ¼ higher.

OBITUARY

RICHARD ALLEN FOSTER.

The death occurred at 12 o'clock to-day at the residence of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Foster, 218 Wolfe Street, of their only son, Richard Allen Foster. Had he lived until Monday next he would have been ten years old. The little fellow had only been seriously ill since Wednesday evening, and his death came as a great shock to his parents and friends. He was the fourth descendant of Mrs. Thomas Telford, Patterson Street, who recently celebrated her 95th birthday.

Much sympathy is felt for the sorrowing parents in their sudden bereavement. A younger sister survives him.

It was at first thought the little fellow, while in swimming, on Wednesday afternoon, in the creek below the C.P.R. station, swallowed some poisonous water, causing the illness resulting in his death. However, communicating with the physician in charge the Examiner learned that such was not the cause of the boy's death.

The funeral arrangements will be announced tomorrow.

JAMES SHANNON.

The death took place this morning at Lindsay of Mr. James Shannon, a life long resident of that town, at an advanced age.

Mr. Fred Shannon, Gilmour Street, is a son.

Special to The Examiner.

OTTAWA, June 19.—News was received this morning to the effect that two Japanese cruisers at the coast will not arrive till to-morrow, and this has given the government a further breathing space. "The less we say at present the better," said one prominent official this morning. "The situation is a nasty one. Here we have a Japanese ship with British subjects aboard lying in a British port, and the British Dominion in no position to receive them. It is a real complication."

WORTH REMEMBERING.

To clarify drippings, when pouring hot into a basin, add a little boiling water.

When preparing baked custard, always pour boiling milk on the beaten eggs.

Spots can often be removed from furniture, by using powdered rotten stone and linseed oil.

Sixty grains of quinine in one quart of bay rum make an excellent hair tonic.

Lemon juice and salt, or powdered salts of lemon will remove iron rust, ink and mildew stains.

To relieve earache, wring a flannel out of hot witch hazel and lay over the ear. Then lay a small hot water bottle over that to keep the flannel steaming, and it will soon relieve the pain.

Every Meal Brought Agony

But Since Taking "Little Digesters" He Can Eat Heartily

From Osgoode Station, Ont., comes a story of five years of suffering from Indigestion and Dyspepsia—five years of doctoring in vain—then "Little Digesters" and a complete cure. Mr. R. H. Ralph tells the story—his own story—thus:

"I have been a sufferer from Indigestion and Stomach Trouble for five years. I had treatment from several doctors. I did not find a cure until I began using "Little Digesters".

I can hardly describe how much I suffered at times. Every meal brought with it more or less agony and I seemed to have a complete distaste for food. I had almost begun to think my case incurable when I came across an advertisement in the papers about 'Little Digesters". I decided to give them a trial. I am very thankful that I did so for I had not been taking them long when I found them helping me. I can now eat heartily and no longer feel pain and discomfort after eating."

WOMAN AWAKES TO FIND REVOLVER AT HER HEAD

BUFFALO, N.Y., June 19.—Mrs. Jacob Stein, wife of Jacob Stein, of the firm of Stein & Leff, tailors, became panic stricken at 2.30 o'clock the other morning when she awoke in her home, 299 Eagle street, and found masked man standing over her with a revolver levelled at her head. Mrs. Stein screamed and the thief commanded her to keep still, but she became hysterical and her screams were heard by pedestrians who ran into the house and chased the thief.

The man ran to the rear of the place and escaped through a pantry window, which he raised in entering. Three men chased the thief four blocks, but could not overtake him.

Mrs. Stein told the police that she heard a noise in the bedroom, but did not pay any attention to it for some time, when she opened her eyes and found the man standing over her. She says that several drawers in the bureau were ransacked, but nothing was stolen.

An hour before the same robber, it is believed, entered the home of Michael J. King, 589 East Eagle street, and was prowling about in his bedroom when King was awakened. King jumped out of bed and make an effort to seize the man, but he ran into the street. King chased him some distance. A dollar was stolen from King's trousers.

The thief is described as being a man of about 50 years old, wore a brown suit, a black derby and a blue shirt. He is about six feet tall and weighs about 185 pounds.

During the past ten days several small house burglaries have been committed in East Eagle street and the police say it is the same man who was seen twice this morning. It is reported detectives at police headquarters know who he is and his arrest is expected.

GETTING A START

By NATHANIEL C. FOWLER JR.

(Copyright, 1914, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

KEEPING ON THE LINE.

When I was a youngster I was a member of a school regiment, different from the school regiment of today, for, by being permitted to organize ourselves, and by taking part in parades and exhibition drills, we learned the art of self-discipline instead of competing for prizes.

I recall many a march on a hot, dusty day, and how pleasant it was to hear the command that floated down the line: "Halt! Order arms! In place—rest!"

Perhaps the order is different now, but the result is the same. Then every boy could do what he pleased, if he kept one foot on the line. He could sit down, he could lie down, or he could stretch; but he must keep one foot on the line, so that, when the order "Attention!" came, he had only a part of himself to draw into place.

The world of business is a vast gunless army, with pens, typewriters, and tools for its armament. As in the line of march, he, who would keep on the line of success must not allow more than part of himself to reach out beyond the middle of the road of safety.

Experiment, if you will. Take reasonable chances, if they seem best. But never let the whole of yourself, or all of what you have, whether it is in money or in other chattels, get away from you. Be in a position always to return to camp. oD not wander aimlessly or otherwise across strange fields and into the woods of mystery.

I do not mean that you should stay always close to your base of supplies, if he who settles on one spot, and does not move, wears out with the spot. Yet he who has no base, who has no one place to which he can return, is like a wanderer on the face of the earth, a man without a country and without a means of livlihood.

Therefore, I say to you, young man, and to you, young woman, if you would progress, march along the path which others have successfully trodden, keep near to it most of the time; and always keep close until you can rightly feel that experience has given you a compass, which, if it will not point this way to go, will at least indicate the shortest way by which to return.

Don't be influenced by the meteoric success of your friends who take big chances. Perhaps some have made a great deal of money. Perhaps they come to you and tell you of the large returns which will be yours if you will only invest as they have invested. In the enthusiasm of their present success they are probably sincere. But don't be foolish enough to put your all—or a big part of your all—into something which "looks good." It may be, in fact, it probably is, "too good to be true," and you will find it out to your cost at a later day. When you think of the few who have taken big risks and succeeded, remember the great majority who have taken the same risks and failed.

Keep on the line of safety.

BABY'S HEALTH DURING HOT WEATHER

During the hot spell the health of baby must be carefully guarded. Diarrhoea, cholera infantum and dysentry carry off thousands of precious little lives every summer. Baby's Own Tablets are especially adapted to keep the little ones well during the summer. They regulate the bowels, sweeten the stomach, and an occasional dose will prevent the dreaded summer complaints, or if they do come on suddenly the prompt use of the Tablets will set baby right again. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

WORRIED, BUT NOT WORRY.

Bix—I suppose, like other people, you are in a great quandry over your income tax?

Dix—Not a bit! What's worrying me is how I'm going to raise my dog tax.

WEDS FOURTH HUSBAND TO KEEP AMUSED

LONDON, June 18.—The high spots of the continent are to be touched presently by a bridal party, the chief figure in which will be the lady whom Broadway recalls vividly as Mrs. Jack Gourand.

It is a Russian princess this time. The register of the Ritz Hotel proclaims him a prince although he did not so describe himself in the marriage records, nor can those faimliar with Russian nobility identify him.

But Mrs. Jack Gourand's fourth husband is of note chiefly because he is Mrs. Jack Gourard's fourth husband. He is officially 28, she 40 years old, but no fears are expressed by their acquaintances that Mme. Alexandre Miskinoff will hunger for things domestic and tranquil while her younger spouse seeks the gay life.

If his constitution is rugged and he can sleep at all hours, if he owns an imagination quick to invent stimulating diversions; if he can attend Madame devotedly, yet avoid becoming in any hour monotonous, he may make a better record than his three predecessors, two of whom were cut off by divorce, another by premature death.

Two Wed Her.

From San Francisco to Cairo extends the colourful trail of the bride's adventurings.

Aimee Crocker was her first name, and she was celebrated on the Pacific coast for her beauty, vivacity and because she was heir to the Crocker millions. Porter Ashe and Harry Gillig, of San Francisco, wooed her at the same time. She told them to let a hand of poker decide the question, and, triumphant through four aces, Ashe led her to the altar.

He was divorced after a year, and to Gillig came the reward of the game lover. He held out for several years before a decree banished him from the radiant and restless presence of his wife.

Jackson Gourand looked to every one like a permanent institution. After their marriage they took a house at 46 West Fifty-sixth street, within quick motoring distance of everything. Each week began with a Sunday night "danse Colorique," which Gourand devised. The entertainments and the dinners, suppers and home cabaret performances, which made up the rest of the schedule, are talked of yet, although that was three years ago. And three years is a long time for Bohemia to remember.

Saw Real Snakes.

One of the best of these gatherings was the last one at which Odette Valery danced and five serpents twined themselves about the bodies of the women guests. The hostess, aflame with gems, drank the health of her inventive husband, wine glass in one hand and the head of a young python in the other.

A year or so later Jack Gourand lay him wearily down and straightway died.

She sold, then, the house in West Fifty-sixth street and a famous country place, for which she had refused $750,000, and she said:

"I am through with Broadway. It is too dull. Now Jack is gone there is no one competent to amuse me."

On the steamer she met Miskinoff. Their engagement was soon whispered and frequently spoken of until the other day, when rumour was vindicated.

BOY RE-UNITED HIS PARENTS

LACKAWWANA, June 19.—The disappearance of Anthony Pantera, 10-year-old son of John Pantera, shoe dealer of 126 Ridge road, may be the means of reuniting the lad's parents. Mr. and Mrs. Pantera agreed seven months ago to separate. Mrs. Pantera moved to Pawtucket, R.I., taking her two children. Anthony, the older boy, missed his father and refused to become reconciled to the change in the family. Five days ago he ran away from Pawtucket, after telling several of his chums he was coming to Lackawanna "to see his daddy." Since then nothing has been seen or heard of him.

When the lad failed to return to his home after two days' absence, Mrs. Pantera telegraphed to her husband in this city to be on the lookout for the lad. She promised, if the boy returned to Lackawana, to come back to her husband. He has written her to come back, anyway. A general message, asking the police of all cities between Lackawanna and Pawtucket to be on the look out for the lad, has been sent out.

Acid Stomachs Are Dangerous

Common Sense Advice by a Distinguished Specialist.

"Acid" stomachs are dangerous because acid irritates and inflames the delicate lining of the stomach, thus hindering and preventing the regular action of the stomach, and leading to probably nine-tenths of the cases of stomach trouble from which people suffer. Ordinary medicines and additional treatments are useless in such cases, for they leave the source of the trouble, the acid in the stomach, as dangerous as ever. The acid must be neutralized, and its formation prevented, and the best thing for this purpose is a teaspoonful of bisurated magnesia, or similar antacid, taken in a little warm or cold water after eating, which not only neutralizes the acid, but also prevents the fermentation from which acidity is developed. Foods which ordinarily cause greatest distress may be eaten with impunity if the meal is followed with a little bisurated magnesia, which can be obtained from any drug.

STONEY LAKE MOTOR BOATS

Stoney Lake boasts of many fine motor boats. It is true there are not many fast ones, that luxury being left to the magnates of Sturgeon Point, but in point of comfort and safety the craft of Stoney Lake can hold their own. The majority of yachts measure from 25 to 30 feet in length, with an average beam of four to five feet, and powered with engines ranging from 7 to 15 horse power. Motors manufactured by Schofield-Holden Co. and The Canadian Fairbanks Co., both of Toronto, predominate, and seem to give satisfactory results.

Many craft carry tops of various styles to protect their passengers from the sun and rain. In some cases however, it is an advantage for a small boat to be without a top, as in landing passengers at a high dock, or in case of a storm, as Mr. Wm. Graham of Viamede will testify.

The advent of the gasoline engine and the resulting motor boat, has transformed camping into an entirely different proposition to what it was fifteen years ago, but the advantages far outweigh the disadvantages, though some are disposed to dispute that point.

So many people try to run gasoline engines who, under ordinary circumstances, know absolutely nothing about machinery that many amusing, and sometimes serious situations are created.

The following hints should help in mastering the many moods of a motor boat: The repair-man is the one individual in the world whose friendship should be cultivated at all costs—even at the cost of an occasional tip, even though your motor may be in perfect running order, for you never can tell how soon it may play up. Some little thing may go wrong, such as a nut coming loose, causing what experts term an open connection. Now, if your man has been sufficiently 'greased' he will straightway put his finger on the trouble, give the nut a few twists and off you go like a house a-fire. But if you have been careless the Lord help you. He will approach the motor as if she might explode at any moment. He will rock the wheel (with the switch off, of course). He will readjust the timer, (leaving it where he got it). He will twiddle the carbureter, fondle the sediment in the gasoline tank, shake the wires, twist the hose, unscrew the nuts, screw them up again, monkey with a couple of levers—in fact do everything that the book of rules calls for, and finally, with a look born of despair, will gaze into your face and tell you it will have to go to the shop. Once there you cannot get it back without practically rebuying the whole outfit.

If you are determined to start it yourself then the following may be helpful:

Don't fool with it too much for, sometimes, on the slightest provocation, it will almost jump out of the boat.

Some people buy an engine to run a boat; others to practice on with a monkey wrench—don't monkey too much.

Never tire turning over the fly wheel. It is excellent exercise; besides, the pesky thing might start.

If anybody asks you if you want a tow, say "No, we're just resting," then go at it again.

Put in a good supply of suspender buttons. These may come in useful after a strenuous encounter with the crank.

Don't acknowledge that you never ran anything but a baby buggy—keep a stiff upper lip and don't talk too much—a man is sometimes credited with knowing a great deal if he preserves silence. Don't open your mouth lest you put your foot in it.

Never grab the large wires with the bare hand. They may be chuck full of bumble bees.

Above all keep up your courage, even though you may have difficulty with your trousers.

Never become frivolous — always wear that "just - before - the - battle-mother" look, for the boat will always be provided with some fool joker (with a life preserver on).

Never look surprised if the thing does start; just stand with an oil can and squirt at everything that moves—it may help some, and certainly impresses the lady onlookers, for they must be impressed, poor things.

Above all, never stop her, even if you have to travel around in circles, for she will stop soon enough herself.

—Monty La Rock.

OLDEST WOMAN IN CANADA

KINGSTON, Ont., June 18.—The honour of being the oldest woman in Canada probably goes to Mrs. Chapman, wife of Thomas Chapman, living in Bastard Township.

She has just celebrated her 106th birthday, and is hale and hearty, with good eyesight and good hearing.

She was born in Ireland in 1799, and came out to Canada in 1844, taking up residence at her present homestead and remaining there ever since.

When she married Thomas Chapman of this country, she was 66 years old. Her husband is now about 70. The couple have no children.

Mrs. Chapman boasts of the fact that when 100 years old, she could climb a ladder into the hay loft, and do many odd chores around her farm.

THIEF CARRIED AWAY HER HAIR

TITUSVILLE, June 19.—All Titusville is on watch for a daring burglar who, in leaving the home of Jas. Graham, the other night, hesitated just long enough to cut the beautiful golden tresses from the head of Miss margaret Graham. The burglar fled down a ladder carrying with him the golden curls, two "golden" watches and some "golden" rings.

Margaret Graham's wonderful hair had been the envy of her girl friends and the object of much masculine admiration. Now the young men are taking an active part in the hunt that is being made for the burglar, threatening dire punishment on the fellow if he is captured.

The burglar had evidently carefully searched every room in the house before he invaded the one occupied by Miss Margaret. There he gathered up her jewellery and then deliberately snipped off the young woman's golden curls. The girl was awakened a few minutes later, and discovering her loss, promptly raised an alarm.

He Was Ready.

Sir George Reid, the genial High Commissioner for the Australian Commonwealth, who has just returned to England from a visit to Australia, is enormously popular "down under."

When he was made a Knight Commander of the Order of St. Michael and St. George the people of Australia who had known him as plain George Reid worried him a good deal about his new dignity.

At one of his meetings a heckler called out, sarcastically:

"Say, Sir George, what does 'K.C.M.G.' mean?"

Without a moment's hesitation the new K.C.M.G. replied:

"Keep calling me George!"

"THE TERMS OF SURRENDER"

By Louis Tracy

For three weeks the horsemen and canoes followed the windings of a river, the waters of which were never turbid or blue, but emerald green, except during occasional sunsets, when they became a vivid crimson. Then the party reached Port Madryn, whence a small steamer took its chief members to Carmen, in the Rio Negro Territory. The Spaniards hailed from that place, and Sinclair, who had sold his Chubut ranch, had left his daughter with friends there. There was no cable available; but, by this time, Sinclair and his partners would as soon have distrusted an archbishop's word as Power's. Each day he reverted more and more to type; yet he lost nothing of the dignity and air of repose ful strength which his wanderings had conferred. So, when he gave written orders for the various sums due on his bond, they were accepted with the confidence which would have been shown in the certified checks of a state bank.

The vessel had to steam several miles up the Rio Negro (the river is called "black"; but it is green as the Chubut) before touching the wharf at Carmen. News of their coming had preceded them, though no mention had been made of Power, and it was vastly amusing to Sinclair when his daughter, after embracing him affectionately, turned and held out her hand to the brown-skinned stranger.

"Welcome to Patagonia, Mr. Power!" she cried. "I was sure you would come to us some day; though I was told in Valparaiso, three years ago, that you were lost utterly in the depths of the Andes."

"So you have not forgotten me?" was all that Power could find to say; though he flushed with pleasure at this prompt recognition.

"Forgotten you? Didn't I tell you I should know you again in twenty years?"

"I am glad to have survived even a third of the time in your memory."

"Well, please don't test it so severely again. What have you been doing to yourself You look like an Indian."

"Meg," broke in her father. "I hoped that four months' residence in a Spanish household would give you a more polite way of expressing yourself."

"Mr. Power takes that as a compliment, I am sure. When we parted he was running away from the flesh-pots of Egypt—or was it Bison? Evidently he has succeeded in his object. He is as lean as a herring. Where did you find him, Dad? Ruling a tribe of Araucanians, I'm certain."

"If I hadn't found him, you would never have seen me again, Girly. But we can't tell the horrible story here on the quay. Take me to a long cane chair, and mix me a whisky and soda. That wretched little tub of a steamer tried to stand on its head last night."

One thing was evident. Power had convinced his companions of the real danger they had escaped. He had said no word concerning the canyon, while it constituted the Indians' defence; but it was betraying no secret to make clear its perils during the journey to the coast.

Next day, after breakfast, Sinclair drew him aside, and handed him a sealed envelope.

"Meg objects strongly to the arrangement we entered into, in so far as it affects me," he explained. "She insists that I return your draft. I was turning the matter over in my mind, and I was not altogether happy about it. Now I see that she is right."

"But both of you happen to be wrong," said Power.

"We're not. Why in blazes should you pay me? The boot is on the other leg. I owe you my life. Look here, Power, the thing can't be argued. If it pleases you to let my Spanish friends have their share of the money, I'll not say a word, one way or the other; but I'll see you cremated before I cash that draft!"

"Let me defray your out-of-pocket expenses, at any rate."

"Not a centavo! If you say anything more about it, I'll get an actuary to calculate my life value, and worry you till you accept a settlement in full."

"Women invariably take a distorted view of a matter like this," protested Power.

Sinclair laughed. "Oh, you have discovered that, have you?" he said. "Well, I can't afford to quarrel with Meg, and her heart is set on your tearing up the draft, Mr. Power."

The girl herself never mentioned the incident; but, when next they met, Power felt that a slight constraint of which he was sensible in her manner that morning had gone completely.

Sinclair's affairs in Patagonia were settled before he set out on that long trek into the wilds; but there still remained some odds and ends of business which detained him nearly a month in Carmen. During those placid days Power and Marguerite Sinclair were together constantly. They boated on the Rio Negro, fished in its swift current, rode long miles over the grey and treeless pampas. The girl was a woman now, and, were it not for that cruel disfigurement of one side of her face, a singularly attractive one. She was never dull, never at a loss for a new and original turn to the old topics. Her interests covered a surprisingly wide range. Whether singing Spanish songs to her own accompaniment on a guitar, or discoursing learnedly on the habits of the migratory wild-fowl with which Patagonia abounds, she never failed to acquit herself with vivacious charm. Indeed, the recluse of the Andes could not have been more favoured by fortune in the choice of a companion. With sure touch, and a happy blend of raillery and sympathy, she led him back to the gracious intimacies of every-day existence. A keen and discriminating reader of contemporary literature, she set herself the congenial task of filling the immense gap of the years lost out of this remarkable man's life. On his part, so avid was he of the joys of regained citizenship of the world that he was blithely unaware of the place she filled in his thoughts until the day of parting.

He had travelled with father and daughter to Buenos Aires, whence he cabled to New York, and was placed in possession of ample funds. The and their steamer sailed almost immediately, and the vessel which would take him to New York was timed to start next day.

They lunched together in the Hotel de l'Europe, Plaza Victoria, and Sinclair had left the younger people for a few minutes while interviewing a lawyer who had charge of certain financial matters in the Argentine. Some chance remark led Power to realise that Marguerite Sinclair's bright personality would soon be merged with yesterday's seven thousand years, and the knowledge darkened his new-born optimism as the black portent of a tornado blots out the blue of a summer sky.

It was hardly surprising that the discovery came thus tardily. The philosophical habit of mind induced by constant association with fantastic Indians was not to be cast off like a disused garment. When each day resembled its predecessor, when the needs of the hour rendered care for the morrow an additional burden, he had trained himself to live, and almost to think, according to savage ethics, and it was with a positive shock that he awoke to the fact that before many hours had sped he would be alone. But, once it had entered his soul, the leaven worked rapidly. They were talking in conversational strain about her father's plans for the future, which centred around a small sporting estate in Derbyshire, once owned by his family, and now in the market, when Power rose suddenly.

"If you have finished luncheon," he said, "come with me into the garden across the plaza. We'll leave word of our whereabouts with the hotel people, so that Mr. Sinclair will not think I have abducted you."

She paled slightly, and seemed to hesitate, but only for an instant. "Why not?" she said, dropping the white double veil she always wore in public.

Power rather looked for some biting retort when he spoke of abducting her, and her unexpected meekness was somewhat disconcerting. Each was tongue-tied, and they walked away together in silence. A good many eyes followed them as they left the hotel, for the girl's slender, lissome figure and noticeably elegant carriage would have attracted the attention of more censorious critics than a gathering of Spanish-Americans, while the wealth of brown hair which crowned her shapely head and column-like neck was adequately set off by a smart hat. Power, too, evoked some comment. People who saw him for the first time invariably asked who he was. A man who has twice established an empire, even among Indians, cannot possibly lack distinction, no matter how effectually the outfitting tailor may democratise him.

They entered the gardens, and Power led Marguerite to a seat under a tree whose spreading branches, broad-leafed and flower-laden, supplied grateful shade. If he could have peered beneath that heavy veil, he would have seen that his companion was obviously ill at ease; but there was no trace of nervousness in her voice when she said, with a laugh:

"This, I suppose, is the local Garden of Eden."

"Why?" he inquired.

"Because we are reclining under a Paradise tree."

"I don't see any serpents, and I cannot bring myself to regard you as either a cherub of a seraph."

"How unkind of you! Here have I been behaving angelically all day, just because you will soon see the last of me, and that is my reward."

"I believe the sex of angels is a matter of fierce dispute in certain circles. I wouldn't dare form an opinion, and, just now at any rate, I am vexed by a difficult problem. If this tree is really the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, its influence will be helpful, because we should be moved to candour. I brought you here to ask some questions of vital importance to myself. Are you promised to any man in marriage?"

"No. Is it likely?"

Not often did the bitter consciousness of her marred beauty rise thus bluntly to her lips; but she blurted it out involuntarily. In this supreme moment it came as a protest against the edict of the gods. Even while she trembled in the belief that a happiness she had not dared to think of sanely was about to be vouchsafed to her, she could not restrain her terror lest the disillusionment of her scarred face might cost her the love of the one man on earth she wanted to marry. It was the heartfelt cry of a woman denied her birthright. "Male and female created he them." The sorry trick of fate which had tarnished the fair tabernacle that enshrined so many gifts had never before exhibited its true malice. In a word, Marguerite Sinclair was a woman, and the great crisis of her life had found her unprepared and nearly hysterical.

Power, of course, was splendidly deaf to her satire and its cause.

"I should say it was the most likely thing imaginable," he replied. "I wish——" He broke off abruptly. "You and I should have no reservations," he went on, after a pause, "and it would not be quite honest if I voiced the banal notion I had in mind. Yet I must tell you something of my history. You know, I suppose, that I am going to ask you to marry me; but, before you answer, you must hear the plea, the defence, of a man who committed a crime and had to pay the penalty."

"You committed no crime, Derry," and the girl's utterance was so low and sweet that it swept through his inmost being like a chord of exquisite music. Some seconds elapsed before he understood that she had used a name which could not have come to her knowledge without a far more intimate acquaintance with his past life than he believed possible.

HEART WAS SO BAD

Could Not Do Her Housework

Many women get run down and are unable to look after their household duties owing to the heart action becoming impaired or the nervous system unstrung.

To all such sufferers Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills will give prompt and permanent relief.

Mrs. Thomas Melville, Saltcoats, Sask., writes:—"I thought it my duty to write and tell you how much your Heart and Nerve Pills did for me. My heart was so bad I could not sleep, eat nor walk about the house. I could not do my housework at all, and what my husband could not do had to go undone. I had two small children depending on me besides three men to cook for, and it worried me to not be able to do anything. My husband had taken some of your pills some years ago, and insisted on me trying them, so I started, and before I had taken them two weeks I was considerably better, and before I had taken two boxes I was doing my own work again. Any one suffering from heart or nerve trouble should just give your pills a trial. If anyone cares to write me I will gladly give them all the information I know concerning your wonderful medicine."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50 cents per box, or three boxes for $1.25, at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

The Minister's Revenge

By RUTH GRAHAM

One night during a ball at Versailles—this was during the reign of Louis XIII. and the government of Cardinal Richelieu as prime minister—Dr. Antonio Langrado, a Spanish physician, who had found royal favor by curing the king of an illness, was passing from one room to another when he met a party of three in whom he felt sure he saw the enactment of one of those love stories which, though they are common, the world loves as well as if they were rare.

These three were a girl of nineteen and two men. The man on the right was forty, quite fat and with a red face, denoting that he was much given to wine. He was evidently a man of importance, for his breast was covered with the insignia of different orders. He on her left was a handsome young fellow not much older than the girl, who wore but one badge, a decoration for military distinction.

As the three passed Dr. Langrado the older man scowled at the younger, whose fingers played nervously with the handle of his rapier, while the lady seemed to draw toward him and away from the other. But the doctor saw them only a moment, for they passed in among one throng, while he passed in among another.

The ball being ended, Dr. Langrado went to his lodgings and to bed. He had barely fallen to sleep when he was awakened and hurried away to see a patient. The person coming for him—a young army officer—said to him:

"Doctor, your patient has received a dangerous wound. It will be expected of you if questioned to report that he is ill of a fever. Do you understand?"

"Partly. I presume he has been stabbed for reasons that are better kept secret."

"Not exactly. Perhaps I should tell you the exact status. He has been wounded in a duel. You know the cardinal—"

"Yes, I know that the cardinal has determined to stop this mania for dueling, which is spilling the best blood in France, and if he knows the patient is half dead after fighting will have the headsman finish him."

"You are right. Can we rely on you?"

"My business is to cure him if possible. I have nothing to do with how he was wounded."

The officer was obliged to be satisfied with this, and in a few minutes the two entered the chamber of his patient. The doctor found a dangerous wound in the side, which he bound up according to the treatment prevalent at that time. But what surprised him was that his patient was the younger of the two men he had noticed with the girl at the ball at the palace.

Dr. Langrado attended the invalid for several weeks and was getting him into a condition when it would be safe to leave him when he received a summons to report himself at the Palais Cardinal. He obeyed and was ushered into the cabinet of the prime minister.

"Doctor," said the cardinal, "you have attended young Raoul de Pourtales. What is his disease?"

"He has no disease, your eminence. He has recovered."

"You have cured him of a wound, have you not?"

"I decline to answer. I am not a subject of the king of France, but the king of Spain."

"But you are a physician, and as such I think I can require you to tell me whether your patient is sufficiently recovered to stand up manfully under the ceremony of being beheaded."

"I believe, your eminence, that he will stand such a ceremony without flinching. He is a splendid fellow."

The cardinal thought awhile before proceeding with the examination.

"I should like to punish Pourtales' antagonist," he said presently, "but he has succeeded in keeping himself unknown. Since you are a Spanish citizen I will not require you to tell, if you know, but will ask you to do so."

"Will not Pourtales give his opponent's name?"

"No."

"I see. He is an honorable man."

"Do you know who his opponent was?"

"I think I do, your eminence."

"Well?"

"I am not sure but that he is very near to his majesty the king. He may be of royal blood."

The cardinal paused again and thought. The doctor, whose sympathies were all with young Pourtales, fancied he saw a way to save his life, but he waited for the minister to speak again.

"In that case," said Richelieu, "it might be best to ignore the matter. If what you suspect is true I may overlook Pourtales' disobedience."

Dr. Langrado told the story as it has been told here. He described the man he had seen in company with Pourtales on the night of the ball, and the cardinal recognized him at once as the Marquis de Cesaux, a relative of the king. Richelieu hated the marquis, but it was not in the line of his policy to bring one of royal blood to the block.

"Thank you, doctor," he said when the story was finished. "What can I do to show my gratitude for the favor I have received?"

"Forgive my patient."

"I will more than forgive him. I will marry him to the girl he loves. This is all the punishment I can inflict on De Cesaux, though I should like to marry him to the block."

And the cardinal kept his word.

Here are two privileges the average man insists on: First, the right to do as he pleases, and, second, the right to abuse a neighbor who doesn't do as he wants him to.

ON THE VERGE OF A BREAK-DOWN

Wrecked Strength And Shattered Nerves Completely Restored By "Fruit-a-tives", The Famous Medicine Made From Fruit.

Mrs. W. N. KELLY.

HAGERSVILLE, ONT., Aug. 26th, 1913

"I can highly recommend "Fruit-a-tives" as they did me an awful lot of good and I cannot speak too highly about them. About four years ago, I commenced taking "Fruit-a-tives" for a general break-down and they did me a world of good. We bought a good many dollars' worth but it was money well spent because they did all that you claim for them. Their action is so pleasant, compared with other laxatives, that I found ONLY pleasure, as well as health, in taking them. They seemed to me to be particularly suited to women, on account of their mild and gentle action, and I trust that some other women may start taking "Fruit-a-tives" after reading my letter, and if they do, I am satisfied the results will be the same as in my own case". MRS. W. N. KELLY

A blood purifier, a general tonic, a builder of health and strength, "Fruit-a-tives" is one of the great discoveries of the century in curative medicine. One of the valuable properties of "Fruit-a-tives" is its marvellous cleansing powers. When these tablets are taken, they act on the three great eliminating organs of the body—the bowels, kidneys and skin. "Fruit-a-tives" keeps the system free of waste matter, prevents the formation of an excess of uric acid, and insures the blood being pure and clean. "Fruit-a-tives" sweetens the stomach, increases the flow of the digestive juices, makes digestion complete and enables the system to absorb and assimilate an abundance of nourishment from the food eaten.

"Fruit-a-tives" builds up, invigorates, strengthens the whole system. As a general tonic, there is nothing else quite so good. And these tablets are so mild in action, so pleasant to take, that they are particularly suited to women.

50c a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size 25c. At all dealers or from Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

WIRELESS TELEPHONY.

In Use to a Limited Extent in Some European Mines.

The dream of wireless telephony—that a person will be able to carry in his pocket a telephone instrument and at any time or place call up a number and have a conversation—has actually become true in a limited way. Such pocket wireless telephones are in daily use in some European mines for communication with the surface and with other places in the mine.

Wireless telephony has been a complete success for some time for short distances of transmission, and in the short distances needed for use in one mine wireless telephony is as practical as wireless telegraphy. Instruments are located at convenient places in the mine, with wires already attached to pipes, rails or some other means of getting a good electrical connection with the ground, and it is these stationary instruments that are depended on for most uses.

In addition, however, portable instruments are used frequently. These weigh too much to be carried in one's pocket and so are carried like a hand bag.

Besides these portable instruments there are provided for the officials pocket instruments that can send, but cannot receive messages.

When a message is sent all the stations in the system receive it, but in practice it has been found to work much like a party line telephone, giving little trouble to the stations for which the message is not intended.

Pocket receiving instruments for wireless telegraphy are also appearing now. They are useful, of course, to only a limited degree, for they can only receive and not send, and they receive only strong signals, such as those of nearby stations or government time signals.—Saturday Evening Post.

WHEN ROYALTY TRAVELS.

Expenses of King Edward's India Trip Were Enormous.

One of the main items of expenditure piled up by the recent royal visit to Paris is the $150,000 that has been spent in preparing the British Embassy in the French Capital for such exalted occupation. This amount seems a large one, but royal visits cannot be undertaken cheaply.

The most costly journey executed by our royalty in recent times was the late King Edward's tour to India, when Prince of Wales, in 1875. The tour was arranged by Sir Bartle Frere, who spent seven busy months in working out its details. Parliament voted for general expenses $300,000, which Sir Bartle said was quite inadequate, as the presents to dusky princes would amount to nearly that sum, and he asked for $500,000.

His request was refused, however, though the Indian Treasury voted $50,000 to the presents fund. In addition to this, another $250,000 came out of the Naval Estimates, and some people who thought such expenditure unwarranted actually held a meeting of protest in Hyde Park.

So that her son could create a proper impression amongst native rulers, Queen Victoria gave him $1,000,000 out of her own private purse, and it will be seen, therefore, that King Edward's trip cost more than $1,500,000. Results have proved that it was worth the money.

King George's visit to India thirty years later, when Prince of Wales, cost nearly $1,250,000, of which Parliament contributed $100,000, though the cost of altering the Renown was borne by the Naval Estimates. His trip in the Ophir to Australia cost $300,000, whilst his little jaunt to Canada some years ago involved a modest $10,000.

The Kaiser loves plenty of pomp and splendor when he journeys from the Fatherland. Some time ago he visited the Sultan of Turkey at Constantinople, and then traveled, chiefly overland, to Jerusalem. He was accompanied by enough servants to people a small town.

More than 800 mule-drivers and 300 waiters followed him! It took three special trains to convey him and his luggage from the Holy City to Jaffa, and he always had his table laid for thirty or forty people, dining as though he were at his palace at home.

But Germany's ruler must take a back seat when compared with the late Shah of Persia, who, during his six months' tour of Europe in 1873 contrived to scatter no less a sum than $10,000,000.

Hero of the Frozen South.

The picture of the year at the Royal Academy, England, is said to be that entitled "A Very Gallant Gentleman."

"This is the Captain Oates memorial picture painted by J. C. Dollmann for the Cavalry Club, of which the gallant officer—who perished with Captain Scott in the Frozen South—was a member. The painting is six feet high and illustrates the supreme moment of Capt. Oates' tragic act of heroism.

Mr. Dollmann gives us a vivid word-picture of his work. I have painted Oates moving away from the tent, which is seen dimly to the left through the whirling snow-eddies of the blizzard. Bent, crouching almost double, one hand helping to support his crippled leg, the other stretched out blindly in front of him, he is trying to lift himself along. Between his figure and the tent there is crumpled and scattered snow, to mark where he has stumbled and fallen and painfully dragged himself up again.

I have tried to make the tracks in the snow eloquent of his story. Through the door of the tent a warm glow of color is visible, suggesting warmth inside. This contrast deepens the poignancy of the situation and relieves the grey color of the wilderness of snow.

On the road to success you have mighty little time to stop and pick posies by the wayside.

Never size a man up as a brute because of the sad look his wife wears. He may be a humorist.

SKIN SOFT AS A CHILD'S

"I was a great sufferer from eczema and salt rheum for years," writes Mr. John W. Nase, Lunenburg, N.S. "Five years ago three boxes of Dr. Chase's Ointment cured me and the old trouble never returned. My skin is soft as a child's now, and I shall always say a good word for this Ointment."

The Great Lesson.

"Agatha, love, do you mean to tell me that such a little hat as that cost $27.50?"

"Geoffrey, dear, before you have been a husband many years you will learn the great lesson that the dimensions of a hat afford no criterion for judging the size of the bill."—Chicago Tribune.

Miss Asquith and Poor Boys.

It is frequently said that anti-suffragists care little about social work and reform. The boys of Hoxton, Eng., know that this is not necessarily true, for Miss Violet Asquith is their best friend. The Premier's daughter does not believe in the enfranchisement of women. She does believe, however, in making life happier for children of the slums, and a London press representative found many traces of her good work in Hoxton the other day.

Miss Asquith spends every Wednesday evening in Hoxton, where she joins her 30 little proteges in games and hobbies and indoor athletics.

Century-Old Band.

The Stalybridge Old Band recently celebrated its centenary, it having been formed in the first week in April, 1814. Founded by a young man named Avison, the bandsmen had to face trials which would have broken the hearts of less enthusiastic men. The practice room was the garret of a local shoemaker's shop, and when the first march-out took place six keen bandsmen attended. However, their efforts were well received, it being on record that they collected $120 in solid cash and 180 eggs on their first public appearance. The founder, Avison, composed the music.

Dickens' Vulgarisms.

Charles Dickens used to be accused of vulgarity. He wrote admirable English, and he had three vulgarisms of language, and three only, says a London writer. One was such a phrase as "I am that tired" for "so tired," with a like use of "that" for "such." Vulgarism No. 2 was "He is a good boy, is John," for "A good boy is John." Vulgarism No. 3 was habitual with Dickens, and here is the very thing from a letter written by George Wyndham to Mr. Wilfrid Ward, and quoted without protest in "Men and Matters": "I tried a novel the other day, 'The Open Question,' and it aggravated me beyond belief. I want the very best. But when your business consists in plowing like a liner through seas of slipshod English"—The use of aggravate" for "irritate" was the very worst of the uneducated Dickens' three bad tricks; and George Wyndham, the type of an educated man, commits the same fault in an interesting context!

A PAGE OF THE BEST HUMOR OF THE WEEK

Altogether Too Mild.

"Did you like the last dance?"

"Not very much; mother frowned at me only twice."—Princeton Tiger.

The Only Kind.

She: "What is a dairy lunch?"

He: "It's the only kind of a restaurant where you can sit opposite to a lady without paying for her food."—Harvard Lampoon.

Not a Resident.

"Shay, m'friend, I have been arguing on a question which we want you to decide for us. Is that planet up there the sun or the moon?"

"M'friend, I can't shay. I'm a stranger in town." — Wisconsin Sphinx.

A Poser.

Mathematical Professor: "I have now completely disposed the theory of probability. Are there any questions?"

Problematical Freshman: "Yes, sir. Will you please compute the probability of my passing this course?" —Dartmouth Jack o' Lantern.

Helen: "Why are you not bathing, Grace? Because of the men?"

Grace: "No, dear, but because there are not enough of them."

The Scapegoat.

News Editor (to the applicant): "You say you understand the duties of a printer?"

Printer: "Oh, yes! Blame anything on me. I know my job all right."

No Better, But Worse.

One man said to another: "I hear your wife has been taking singing lessons."

"Yes," was the reply.

"Well, what do you think of her voice since it's been trained?"

"It's no better; but there's a lot more of it."

A Base Deed.

A man on trial for his life in a remote town was asked by the judge if he had anything to say, whereupon he replied:

"All I has to say is this, my lord: If you hangs me, you hangs the best bass singer in the county."

Just a Summer Dog.

A little boy was entertaining the minister the other day until his mother could complete her toilet. The minister, to make congenial conversation, inquired:

"Have you a dog?"

"Yes, sir, a dachshund," responded the lad.

"Where is he?" questioned the dominie, knowing the way to a boy's heart.

"Father sends him away for the winter. He says it takes him so long to go in and out the door he cools the whole house down."

The Fair Angler: "I've never fished before, but I know how to do it. The fish pulls the float down when it's ready to be caught, and then I strike it with the rod."

An Ominous Adage.

When a lady patient living far from town had to telephone for her physician she apologized for asking him to come such a distance.

"Don't speak of it," said the doctor cheerfully; "I happen to have another patient in that vicinity and so can kill two birds with one stone."

Mistress: Now, Sarah, I want you to be careful about breaking this vase. It cost a great deal of money, and I would hate to have it carelessly broken the first thing.

Sarah (three days later): There's your vase, ma'am, and I couldn't have broke it more carefully if I'd tried for a month.

His Happiest Moment.

A bachelor of considerable wealth was much sought after by many of the most charming young women of the town. A very pretty maiden was sure she had brought him almost to the point of a proposal.

"What was the happiest moment of your life?" she asked, while they were taking a stroll one evening.

"The happiest moment of my life," answered the bachelor, with a reminiscent smile, "was when the jeweller took back an engagement ring and gave me some cuff links in exchange."

Willis (in the cemetery): "This can't be Hardupp's grave. The inscription reads, 'Mrs. Hardupp.'"

Gillis: "Yes; but you see he had his tombstone, like his other things, put in his wife's name."

A Query.

"Why do you love him?"

"Because he is a man of many fards."

"But are you sure he will turn them over to you?"

A Diplomat.

"Here is an apple, Willie. Divide it generously with your sister."

"How shall I divide it generously, mamma?"

"Why, always give the larger part to the other person, my child."

Willie reflected for a moment, then he handed the apple to his little sister, saying, "Here, Ethel, you divide it."

We All Know Them.

"Are your neighbors, the Woosecons, interesting people?"

"Exceedingly so; he is the kind of a man that won't speak to anybody without an introduction, and she is the kind of a woman that borrows everything in your house without being introduced at all."

Compromise.

Fond hubby (starting downtown)—What will it be, love—flowers or candy?

Wife—We'll compromise, dear. You can send both.

Money in It.

"How is it you find so many things to shock you?"

"My boy," replied the social uplifter, "I've gone into this thing as a business, and I must find them."

Hard to Stand.

Skids—It's not every one who can stand prosperity.

Skittles—Particularly if it's some one else's.

Anna—Did he make a bid for your hand?

Fannie—Yes; and the proposal was sealed with a kiss.

She Did.

He—Will you give me just one kiss?

She—My dear boy, you don't know how little satisfaction there is in just one kiss.

Its Use.

"I don't believe in useless gifts."

"But you gave your boy an accordion."

"Yes. That will teach the family patience and forbearance."

Enough for Him.

"Then you didn't ask for her hand?"

"No; when I went to interview her father he was busy with the furnace. He said to come down, and after watching his struggles for half an hour I didn't want to get married."

These Apartmentettes.

"You see this apartment has plenty of closets," said the agent.

"Yes, the closets are fine," said the prospective tenant, "but now show me some of the rooms."

Tipping Him Off

The ferret-eyed little man stepped across the street car aisle and whispered into the ear of the dull chap in a gray suit:

"You'd better wipe that bit of egg off your chin. The income tax man is just two seats in front of you."

"Can I sell you a little contrivance to keep your necktie down behind?" suggested the agent.

"You might last week," replied the smiling young man, "but I don't need it now."

"Have you found something better?"

"You bet! I've just become engaged."

For Him.

"I cawn't quite make out what Ruth means," said Cholly.

"Why not?"

"She keeps on referring to my man, doncha know, as a keeper."

The New Cook.

"I hear that you have a college graduate for a cook. Isn't that rather expensive?"

"Not very. She works for her board and clothes."

"Why, how does she come to do that?"

"She's my wife."

A Cheerful Outlook.

Mr. Newlywed and his wife were climbing one of the highest peaks in the Adirondacks, and she stood, some twenty feet above him gazing in admiration at the wonderful view.

"What," he gasped—"what do you see?"

"Far, far below," she cried, "I see a long white streak, stretching like a paper ribbon back almost to our hotel."

"Ha, ha!" he ejaculated. "It's that hotel bill overtaking us."

A Prophet.

"This infant may some day make himself heard in the world," said the clergyman about to christen a baby boy.

And the next moment when the youngster felt the cold water the good clergyman's words came true.

A Rich Man's View.

"What a lovely sunset!"

"It ought to be. We're paying enough for it!"

Cruel.

"My but getting married to an awful trial, isn't it?" said the young lady busily engaged with her trousseau.

"Yes, but nowhere near as severe as the sentence the lucky fellow gets," said the cynical bachelor.

Sure Enough.

"Well, honey, our honeymoon's over."

"Why, dear, do you say that?"

"Well, I've just balanced up my checkbook and it's tipping over backward."

The Reason.

"Is your wife going abroad again this year?"

"No, she heard some one say travel broadened one."

Pat and Mike were obliged to halt their heavily-loaded cart to make way for a funeral. Gazing at the procession, Pat suddenly remarked:

"Mike, I wish I knew where I was goin' to die. I'd give five hundred pounds to know the place where I'm goin' to die."

"Well, Pat, what good would it do if yez knew?"

"Lots," said Pat. "Shure, I'd niver go near thot place."

Sunday School Teacher: "What do you understand by suffering for righteousness' sake?"

Little Girl: "Please, miss, it means having to come to Sunday school."

The master plumber had become rich, and was going abroad for his health. On the voyage a school of whales was sighted, and the plumber was seen to rub his hands on ecstasies.

"Why is he so happy?" asked a curious passenger.

"He can't help it," whispered the captain. "He imagines each spout is a burst water pipe, to be repaired by him at his old rates."

Visitor: "Can you tell me if this tree belongs to the acanthus family?"

Park-keeper: "It do not. It belongs to the town council."

Boarder: "I found something in my bedroom last night, madam, and—"

Landlady (indignantly): "There's no such thing in the house. You must have brought it in with you."

Boarder: "Ah, perhaps I did—it was a sovereign."

Humors Her.

Lady: "Now, cabman, I wish you to be extremely careful. When you come to a crossing you must wait until the policeman tells you to go on; and if the streets are slippery you must drive very slowly."

Chauffeur: "All right, mum; I'll be very careful, mum. And in case of a haccident, mum, which 'orspital would you like to be took to?"

On An Ocean Liner.

Table Steward: "The man who will sit next to you is a bird doctor."

Old Sport: "Good! Are any of his patients traveling with him?"

In Hiding.

"Hips are coming in again."

"Hurray! Now mother can come back from Europe."

Natural Query.

"Mamma, am I made of dust?"

"Yes, my child."

"Well, then, what road did I come off of?"

Of Course.

"What is proper to serve with a club sandwich?"

"Oh, something with a stick in it."

A Friend in Need.

"It is all over between Van Snyder and Miss Pitts. An hour before the wedding was to have taken place the sheriff came and escorted him off to jail."

"What was the charge?"

"Not a cent. Van and the sheriff are old friends."

Might Need It.

Barber.—I suppose you wish I wouldn't give you so much of my chin, don't you?

Customer.—Never mind! I may need some of it to patch up with before you get thru.

Mary's Dot.

"Why, my dear, what is the house all torn up for? You're not going to move, are you?

"Oh, no, indeed! Our Mary was married last week, and she just took away the things she thought belonged to her.

The Right Way.

Editor.—The only way to succeed in the newspaper business is to give the people what they want.

Friend.—Have you got a ten-dollar bill you can let me have?

The Announcement.

"I've asked you three times to marry me and you've refused—do you think that's fair?"

"Yes—to the man I'm engaged to."

Why the Bills Come In.

The mans whose wife and three daughters always dressed in the newest style was settling the usual monthly bills.

"History may repeat itself," he observed, with something like a weary lift to his eyebrows, "but fashion never does."

The Cause.

"How hoarse you are this morning."

"Yes, my husband got home very late last night."

Hindered.

"Woman is making giant strides forward these days."

"I don't see how she does it."

On Its Way.

"Can she keep a secret?"

"She can keep it going."

Like One of the Family.

Mary, the domestic servant employed in a suburban household, the members whereof are not on the most amicable of terms, recently tendered her resignation, much to the distress of the lady of the house.

"So you are going to leave us?" asked the mistress, sadly. "What's the matter, Mary? Haven't we always treated you like one of the family?"

"Yes, ma'am," replied Mary; "indeed you have, and I've stood it as long as I'm going to."

The Customer: "Oh, but haven't you any other tint in lettuces than this? It won't go with my new blue salad dish a bit!"

A Poor Job.

"I am inclined to think," said a man, "that our friend Mr. Grafton Grabb, was created on the Sabbath."

"For what reason?"

"We are told that an honest man is the noblest work of the Creator, and also that on the seventh day the Creator rested."

More Sensible.

"Look out for counterfeit two-dollar bills," said the butcher.

"What's the use?" replied the grocer, who was trying to do a cash business. "I would rather see a few genuine ones."

Obvious.

"How do you know that nice young man we met last night was a bachelor?"

"Why, he was telling us about rearing how to bring up children."

Askitt: "Do you believe in the survival of the fittest?"

Digwell: "I don't believe in the survival of anybody. I am an undertaker."

There recently went into a fashionable shoe shop the daughter of a man whose wealth had been acquired within very recent years. The young woman was disposed to patronize the shopman, and rejected a number of "classy" slippers he produced for her approval, finally she said:

"I think, perhaps, I'll take these two pairs, Louis XV. heels are too [illegible]—or, [illegible] me a size [illegible] Louis XIII.

The Test.

"It takes a lot of courage and patience to be an explorer, doesn't it?"

"Yes," replied the adventurous man. "Discovering things isn't so bad. But great Scott! What you have to go thru when you get back to civilization!"

Of a Particular Kind.

"I wish you wouldn't try to sell an airship to my husband," said a lady caller to an aeronaut.

"Why not, madam, pray?" asked the dealer.

"Because he is not to be trusted with one," replied the wife.

"But, madam, our flying machines are all what we call fool-proof," insisted the aeronaut.

"Yes, ordinarily perhaps," said the wife, "but you haven't met my husband."

Not Granted.

One night, when her grandmother was putting her to bed, three-year-old Olive said, "Grandma, every night when I go to bed I ask God to make brother Fred a good boy."

"That is right," said her grandmother.

"But He ain't done it yet," replied Olive, soberly.

"I see you have announced me as the world-renowned orator," said the gifted speaker.

"Yes," replied the chairman. "We had to do something to make you seem important. Nobody around here ever heard of you."

Mamma (after the company has gone)—Dorothy, why did you not obey me when I spoke to you?

Dorothy—Oh, mamma, I hated to before all those people.

Samples

"Gave me a sample of everything the patient takes," directed the young doctor.

"He took a kiss, this morning," faltered the pretty nurse.

NOT LIKELY!

The Nurse: "A stork has brought you a little baby brother. Would you like to see him?"

The Elder Brother: "Please, can I see the stork instead?"

The Reason Why.

Doris: "He groveled in the dust at my feet—

Beatrix: "How exciting!"

Doris: "For we were going to the movies and he had dropped his dime."

Not In It.

Sylvester: "I hear that Reginald is out for the track team. He's pretty fast, isn't he?"

Sigismund: "Yes; and that's the reason he'll never make the team."

The Dog.

"Run quick!" cried the girl to her clandestine lover. "Papa is unchaining the big bulldog he bought yesterday! The brute will tear you to bits!"

"No, he won't," said the lover calmly. "That dog is an old pet of mine. I raised him, and I hated to part with him; but I gave him to the dealer last week, with instructions to sell him to your father. Well, Bill, old chap! Glad to see me, ain't you? There, now—charge! What were you saying, darling?"

As Played By Ear.

"Why are you prejudiced against golf? You never saw a game."

"No; but once I heard part of one."

The Optimist.

"Why is it that the strawberries at the bottom of your boxes are always so much smaller than those at the top?" asked Mrs. Newlywed.

"Ah, madam," said the grocer, "you don't put it quite correctly. You should ask why the berries at the top of the box are so much larger than those at the bottom."

In the Springtime.

He had carried a cue nine miles around a billiard table and pushed a lawn mower once across his thirty-by-twenty lawn.

Then he collapsed.

"Overwork," said the sympathetic doctor, and put him to bed.

Sensible.

"Will you have the pastry or ice cream?" he inquired solicitously.

"Both, please," she said demurely.

"LOOK PLEASANT, PLEASE!"

The Dentist (getting even with his photographer):

THE MAID OF ARARAT.

The Visitor: "Now, then, Willie—Who was Joan of Arc?"

Willie: "Please, sir, Noah's wife."

HOW TO PACK TRUNKS

Most people are afraid of crushing their clothes by packing them too tightly, yet this is the secret of successful packing. If they are allowed room to slide and slip, they will come forth wrinkled and mussed, whereas if they are firmly held in place in a trunk which is not too large for its contents, you will get far better results. A hostess shudders, too, on beholding the arrival of a mammoth trunk. It is very inconsiderate to encumber her with too much luggage, and this is a point to remember if you would be a welcome guest.

In planning for a summer tour you should always arrange your packing so that the things you need most and first will be near the top. The heavier garments, which you take with you for emergencies in case of cold weather, may be neatly packed at the very bottom, and if covered securely with a piece of cloth and held in place either by pins or tapes, will act as a false bottom and will not interfere with the lighter clothes.

There is nothing that looks so untidy as wrinkled gowns, and nothing that so takes away from your smart appearance, as the crumpled look of an elaborate costume, so that an hour or two expended upon careful packing is not wasted.

No garment should ever be folded until it is perfectly dry. Every plaited skirt should have each plait carefully caught in place at the hem before packing. Then the skirt should be carefully folded with tissue paper in the fold, and it will come out of the trunk in perfect condition.

Tissue paper is an essential to good packing. It should be placed within every fold; it should be used to stuff out sleeves, bows and puffs, and to place around flowers and beneath feathers and to fill out vacant corners. It is light and does not add to the weight of luggage.

If there is an abundance of space in a trunk it is a good idea to leave coats on hangers, first filling out the sleeves and fronts, but if this is not convenient, fold the coat, placing the sleeves together, front touching front, then fold once lengthwise, with tissue paper in between, the sleeves also being kept in shape with a slight stuffing.

Some soft gowns are kept smoother by being rolled over a heavy newspaper roll, that has been first covered with sheets of tissue paper, then by straight packing. This, of course, depends upon the material and whether you can accommodate it to a given space.

If your trunk does not contain the modern trays and compartments, paper boxes are a safeguard. Evening gowns may be kept uncrushed by placing them in a separate box, and smaller boxes that fit in the upper tray can be utilized for the many little accessories. An elastic band of ribbon will keep the lids in place even if the trunk be turned upside down. Put on each box a written label of the contents, to save time when the things are wanted afterwards.

Hats should be pinned in firmly, even though they be well protected by stuffing and wrapping, and extra tapes in trays will keep garments from sliding and slipping.

BAKED TENDERLOIN OF PORK.

Take two strips of tenderloin of pork and wipe clean with a damp cloth. Make a stuffing of stale bread crumbs highly flavoured with onion, sage, pepper, salt and melted butter, with milk or melted butter to moisten. Place stuffing between the two tenderloins, tie all togethr and bake in a moderate oven until done. Baste often with melted butter.

THE HOME CIRCLE COLUMN

Pleasant Evening Reveries—A Column Dedicated to Tired Mothers as They Join the Home Circle at Evening Tide

CRUDE THOUGHTS FROM THE EDITORIAL PEN

PRACTICE MAKES PERFECT.

A young man who is thoughtful for others is most likely to be well-mannered. Let him practice his manners at home, treating his mother and sisters with courtesy, and then when he goes abroad his manners will be easy and graceful. Many men have disagreeable table manners. Mothers should be careful to teach their boys and girls to sit erect at the table, not to lounge in he chair nor lean over the plate, nor put the elbows on the table. Keep the hand still in the lap when not used in conveying food to the mouth. Learn to eat quietly, do not smack the lips or make any noise with the mouth. Keep the mouth closed when chewing. Put a small portion of food into the mouth and keep the lips together until it is masticated. Nothing is uglier than to see a person chewing with the lips apart. Help yourself moderately from the dishes passed to you. And remember that the table is not simply a place for eating, but also for conversation. If you are invited out to dinner your hostess will not feel that you have done your part if you do not add something to the occasion through conversation. If you have any information on subject under discussion give it to the company. If you would be a success socially, you must be able to talk intelligently about current topics. Cultivate a low, pleasant voice, and practice will soon make you a ready talker, if you have anything to say. Practice makes perfect, and a boy can add much to his power as a conversationalist as well as to the pleasure of home life by conversing pleasantly at his mother's table.

ENJOYMENT AT HOME.

Don't shut up your house, lest the sun should fade your carpets; and your hearts, lest a merry laugh should shake down some of the musty old cobwebs there. If you want to ruin your sons, let them think that all mirth and social enjoyment must be left on the threshold without when they come home at night. When once a home is regarded as only a place to eat, drink and sleep in, the work is begun that ends in endless degradation. Young people must have fun and relaxation somewhere; if they don't have it at their own hearthstones it will be sought at other and perhaps less profitable places. Therefore, let the fire burn brightly at night and make the homestead delightful with all those little arts that parents so perfectly understand.

Don't repress the buoyant spirit of your children; half an hour of merriment around the lamp and firelight of a home blots out many a care and annoyance during the day, and the best safeguard they can take with them into the world is the unseen influence of a bright little domestic circle. Put home first and foremost, for there will come a time when the home-circle will be broken; when you will "long for the touch of a vanished hand and the sound of a voice that is still."

A want of proper domestic economy has ruined the peace of many a family. There are women who could carry off their husband's stores on their backs and not half try. There are men who fancy when they marry that they are annexing something far more valuable than Cuba, and find later that they have on hand nothing more than a combined album, Godey's Lady's Book and medicine chest. There are two sides to the picture of home; a man who has a good wife has no right to complain though the whole earth be against him, for he's in the majority.

A MINISTER'S WIFE.

A doctor's wife owes no duties to her husband's patients; a lawyer's wife owes no duties to her husband's clients; but a minister's wife is regarded as a kind of lady-shop, or, at least an unordained curate, who, by virtue of her position, is bound to discharge innumerable services to the congregation. She may be a young girl with no experience in human life and church business; but is expected to become the active president of all the benevolent institutions supported by the ladies of her husband's charge. She may have three or four children, whom she has to teach herself, and whose dresses must be made and mended by her own hands; but she is expected to visit all the sick and the poor. She has her natural sympathies, and, however warm her heart may be toward everyone who likes her husband's preaching, she cannot be the intimate and confidential friend of every lady that belongs to the church; but people who themselves are far from being distinguished for a universal charity are indignant if she finds one house pleasanter than another, and if she naturally associates with ladies of her own age and with kindred tastes.

He who creates a healthful smile creates a beautiful gem.

Everyone must have felt that a cheerful friend is like a sunny day, which sheds its brightness on all; which sheds its brightness on all choose make this world a palace or a prison.

HOW TO WIN A WOMAN

Here is a recent bit of advice from the pen of Dorothy Dix. And in view of the big salary that feminine newspaper genius receives for distilling such bits of wisdom, it would seem as if she knew whereof she speaks:

Son, do you want to know how to make a hit with the fair sex? Listen and I will whisper the secret to you and tell you the one particular bit of flattery that no woman, from Mother Eve down, has ever been able to resist.

You think you know it. When you want to charm a woman you tell her that her eyes are like sapphires or violets drenched in dew. You speak of her hair that is like spun gold or the black clouds at midnight. You praise her swan-like neck, or her peaches-and-cream complexion, or wonder why she doesn't have her hand modelled in marble, or you liken her figure to a willow wand in an April breeze.

Women expect a man to flatter them about their looks. Every man on earth tells every woman on earth that he desires to please what a prize beauty she is. It's simply the usual stuff, and when a woman hears it, it doesn't cause a single thrill of gratified vanity, because if she's good-looking, she knows it already, and if she is homely, she resents the man thinking she's fool enough to be deceived.

Furthermore, the thing that a woman is proudest of possessing is not a body, but a mind and a soul. Therefore, son, if you want to pay a woman the ultimate compliment, the one before which she will go down like ripe wheat before the sickle, don't tell her that she is Venus, but Minerva. Don't waste any time enthusing over her pearly teeth, but hang on the words of wisdom that flow from her lips. Discourse about what she thinks and not about how she looks, and you can hypnotise whom you please.

It has ever been thus. When the wily serpent tempted Eve it didn't pique her interest by telling her of her physical charms and promising to make her even more beautiful if she would try an apple diet. Ah, no. It offered a brand of flattery far more subtle and intoxicating. It assumed at once that she had a deep and profound intellect, and the irresistible temptation it offered her was to explore the higher realms of knowledge with it.

The flattery to her mind was what Eve fell for, and every daughter of Eve still follows her mother's example. It is a matter of common observation that preachers and doctors are unduly worshipped by women. The reason for this is merely that preachers and doctors are practically the only men that ever recognise that women have souls and minds, or who ever talk to women about their own inner selves—what they really think and feel about the problems of life and the world we live in.

The average man simply wants to know whether a woman loves him or not and whether she has got enough sense and education to know what he's talking about or not. Beyond that her mental processes are a matter of absolute indifference to him. There isn't one man in a million who cares what his wife thinks about the political situation, or the new currency bill, or the ethics of the drama of to-day, or the tendency of modern fiction.

Believe me, son, the most potent spell in the world with a woman is just to make her feel that she has got a perfectly marvellous mind, full of strange, fascinating treasure houses, whose doors you unlock with trembling wonder as to what they may contain.

And when you marry, son, if you want a wife who will be a helpmate and an economist, who will scrape the very potato parings to save, just talk to your wife about your business and consult her about your investments, and let her feel that you thing she is a sort of feminine wizard of finance.

The wife who is fed on that kind of flattery at home is so doped that no matter what sort of a husband she's really got she believes he's the matrimonial prize of the universe.

There is no simpler way of removing grass stains from the white canvas slippers of shoes than to rub the offending spots with a cloth or brush moistened with spirits of camphor.

To remove fingermarks from furniture, rub with kerosene oil, then with a cloth wrung out of very hot water and polish with another dry cloth.

A very good way to prevent a cracked basin from breaking, is to paint it with white paint. Then place along the crack a piece of tape. Paint well over this, and when dry it will be firm as cement and last for years.

SPRING GREENS FOR DINNER

The best of greens do not necessarily come from the garden, but may be had for the picking. Mustard and pepper-grass grow on the prairie, milkweed and chicory by the roadside, sorrel and cowslip hidden in the woods, while dandelion and purslane boldly flaunt themselves to the very doorsteps. Some of these wild greens are used upon the table in this country and many have yet to be adopted. The pressing necessity of the time—the high cost of living—is drawing the general attention to the possibilities of which the nations of his continent make no use, and the wise housewive utilizes the foods at hand which she has heretofore neglected.

While waiting for Nature to furnish the wild greens, it is well to be making ready the garden. Many pot herbs are best started in hotbeds and transplanted. Also, many are perennials and their beds must have early and careful cultivating.

Before having the ground prepared for the garden, plan the space carefully, not solely because certain vegetables grow best in the shade, while others want the full day sun, but because certain plants have needs of special soil, a need which can be supplied by the dressing. It is well to remember that nitrogen is the element which makes stalks and leaves, phosphoric acid makes blossoms, potash gives size and sweetens fruits and grain and the roots of beets, carrots and parsnips. All the plants need all of these elements, but some want more of one kind and some more of another. Barn manure carries nitrogen; wood-ash possesses phosphoric acid and potash. There are many commercial dressings in which exact percentage of these elements are given. Year by year it is well to add to the garden two or three new pot herbs and salad plants—the variety of itself is pleasing—and with a little care in choosing, the garden may always in season have some unusual green. Careful planning, then, is essential.

The dandelion is of varied value to the table. It may be gathered wild and incidentally rooted from the lawn in the gathering. But the dandelion is worth cultivating, as it is not only one of the best pot-herbs, but useful for salads. The fear of the dandelion spreading from the garden is groundless if it is gathered before it goes to seed.

There is much to remember in gathering greens and much in their care before they are cooked or, if they are to be eaten raw, before they are served. The careful observance of a few detailed directions insures valuable food, pleasing to the eye and the palate. These vegetables are largely water, and if they are wilted, more or less of the water must have escaped—and valuable mineral salts with them. putting wilted vegetables into ice-water helps restore their freshness, as the bruised leaves will drink, although they can never renew their crispness or the valuable mineral salts. If spinach can be washed in many waters immediately upon being brought in from the garden or market, and then placed upon a cloth laid on the ice, the result will be surprising. Lettuce, by the way, should be treated in the same way, or washed, shaken dry and packed leaf by leaf in a stone jar with a cover, before being placed in the ice-chest. Dandelions should be gathered in the early morning, before the sun has wilted the leaves and toughened the fibre.

Either cook greens in their own moisture in the double-boiler or plunge them into rapidly boiling salted water and cook until grain while they still look green. The pot in which greens are cooked should never be covered. The confined steam injures the flavour and spoils the colour. Overcooking also injures the colour, and greens should never be boiled until they become yellow or brown. The housewife will do well to remember she is cooking greens. After spinach is cooked and drained it may be served in many ways.

The leaves of dandelions after thorough washing may be chopped into one-half-inch lengths and steamed over salted water. If a little powdered sugar and lemon-juice is added to dandelions while cooking, the bitterness will be somewhat counteracted. An excellent method is to cook the dandelions in a double-boiler with only the moisture clinging to the well-washed leaves. When they are tender, add sorrel and simmer until the mass is almost dry. Beat it with a wooden spoon and add butter and seasoning. Salt pork boiled with any green gives an added flavour, particularly desirable with turnip-tops, cowslips, mustard and dandelions. Beet-tops should be used, roots and all. Only those leaves that are defective should be discarded.

Asparagus is as popular a vegetable as any and worthy of its place. Always break rather than cut asparagus. Discard any pieces too tough to snap with the fingers. If the asparagus is to be broken in small pieces before cooking, the cook will do well to add the tender upper ends only after the tougher stalks have begun to become tender. Thus all will be ready at one time and the ends will be firm enough to hold their form. Butter and pure cream without thickening of any kind is one of the best of dressings for asparagus. No better breakfast dish can be served than asparagus on toast with hot cream well salted and flavoured, and with butter poured over all. There is scarcely a menu that is not improved with the addition of asparagus.

After a girl has smiled at every man in town and finally snared a boob into an engagement, she believes that there should be a law making flirting a felony.

There's only one answer—a decided "Yes!" Then do you know that you can't buy a stale package of

Cured of Piles and Eczema

By Using Three Boxes of Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Mr. Abram Buhr, Herbert, Sask., writes:—"I want to say that I was troubled with eczema and piles and suffered greatly from the itching, burning sensations caused by these annoying ailments. I sent for a free sample of Dr. Chase's Ointment, and this did me so much good that I bought three boxes more, and after using same was cured of both eczema and piles."

This is the kind of letters we receive daily from people who have been cured of these distressing skin diseases by the use of Dr. Chase's Ointment. No matter how skeptical you might be, you could not read these letters for many days without concluding that Dr. Chase's Ointment is undoubtedly the most prompt relief and certain cure for these ailments.

If you have doubts send for a free sample box and be convinced. It was by use of a free sample that Mr. Buhr was convinced of the merits of this treatment. For sale at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

TURKISH HAREM LIFE

ANCIENT INSTITUTION GETTING RUDE SHOCKS THESE DAYS.

In Territory Lost by the Turks During the Balkan War the Harem Is Passing Rapidly Out of Existence —The Men Also Have Private Quarters Called the Selamlik—Simple Furnishings Are the Rule.

One of the changes effected by the Balkan war is the gradual elimination of the harem from the territory in the Balkans which has passed from under Turkish control.

There is scarcely an institution in the Orient in regard to which there are more misconceptions than the Turkish harem. It is the general opinion in the west that the harem of the average Turk may be of any size desired; that polygamy is limitless all over Turkey and that there is virtually no social life. However, the home life of the average Mohammedan is ideal, and the share taken by the three wives (for a three the limit is set for everyone but the Sultan) in the management of the household makes the burden of good housekeeping so light that the Turkish dames necessarily have time to idle and loll in the fashion in which we usually find them pictured.

The real harem is but seldom visited by men outside the family. The men's part of the house is unique enough, though, to repay a visit. To begin with, one does not enter a Turkish home directly from the highway—in fact there are no doors opening upon the street. The house is built to face upon a garden, surrounded by high walls and entered by a heavy gate. At this gate the knocker is set and no one would think of entering without waiting answer to the summons. This is done in order that the Turkish women, should there be any in the garden, may either let down their veils or retreat to cover. Wealthier homes have a porter stationed just outside the gateway to attend the summons.

Crossing the yard, one enters the home, the harem, or the selamlik, according as you are bound for the women's or the men's apartments. Curiously enough, while the harem is mentioned abroad constantly, the selamlik, which is quite as evident, is seldom heard of outside of the east. It is simply the men's apartment, as the other is milady's boudior. Its only essential difference is the fact that lattices are absent from its windows and that the low little stool of jujube paste, or Turkish delight, found in every well-regulated harem, is replaced by a larger dish of cigarettes. Cigarettes are smoked in the harem, too, but not in such quantities.

Both in the furnishing of the harem and of the men's apartments of the Turkish home, simplicity is the rule. Beds and chairs, except in the residences of some of the progressive young Turks, are unknown, being replaced by the divan, usually a mere bench extending around three of the four walls of the room and made comfortable with cushions. Tasty sofa pillows and leg bolsters, worked in gilt and silver thread, adorn these and upon them the inmates lounge. In the centre of the room is the brasier, with charcoal, and here the water boils perpetually for the Turkish coffee. Little coffee mills, of the thickness of a pump handle and fitted with brass, lie about, ready for use.

Doors abound, but are always ajar and are often screened by heavy leather portieres, and windows are numerous. Rooms are much alike the household over; frequently there are but two or three, the lower floor of the dwelling being given over to the owner's bazaar.

Housework in such a home devolves largely on the first wife; she rules, the others obey.

The choice of a wife in Turkey is an interesting event. The usual custom in the selection of a queen of the harem is for the mother of the groom to note the pretty girls she meets from time to time and then tell her son about them. If some of her descriptions prove particularly alluring she or he will arrange to meet the father of the girl and settle with him upon the dowry. Not alone that, but the amount of alimony to be settled on the girl is also carefully fixed and put in writing by the cadi. Divorces may be had without any cause in Islam—the husband need only thrice tell the woman to go; but in every case he must then give her the stipulated dowry and she is forbidden to marry within three months of separation.

This, however, is the formal marriage. Latterly the spirit of the times has been creeping into European Turkey and intelligent Turks state that many a little girl remains faithful to some childhood playmate, and after attaining the age of 12 and putting the veil between her face and the world for all time, she will come to his bazaar and chat with him, and, providing no unfriendly face be nigh, will uncover her countenance and let him feast his eyes upon it.

Once a young couple are actually engaged the day is set when the groom shall come and get her. This may be the very next day or at most a month later; seldom much longer. The hadji is then summoned to the home of the bride and asks her if she is willing. Knowing her fate if refusing a match set by her father, many an unhappy girl remains mute at this question, but an anxious mother will shake her daughter's head and the law is satisfied. Thrice she or her representatives make this acquiescence and the law is fulfilled.

Leaving the home of the bride, the groom then repairs to the cleric establishment, where he announces the fact of his marriage. Usually he brings his wife to his parents' home to live, or, if she be a wealthy orphan, as are many Turkish girls, she will live in her home, with him as master and other wives to come.

RAVAGES OF BEETLES.

How Famous Roof of Westminster Hall Is Being Destroyed.

More than five hundred years ago a foreman carpenter designed the hammer beam roof in Westminster Hall for us and finished the job in 1397, charging six shillings a day for his genius. It was cheap enough, and his work might have lasted another five hundred years but for the Westminster beetle. The Westminster beetle has eaten into the wall posts, and the posts above the hammer beams till one can scoop out the rotten wood by the handfuls, and the whole arched edifice is sinking by inches, says a London journal.

Needless to say, the beetle is eating into other parts of the oak besides the beams we have mentioned. Neither purlin, nor the longitudinal struts which form the side arches, nor the fine Gothic tracery and carving are sacred to this infamous parasite; but the wall posts and hammer beams and posts are principally mentioned because on them lies the work of supporting the hammer beam roof; and also because some of these great timbers have suffered most from the ravages of the larva of the beetle. It is almost possible to stand inside some of the cavities. The arched hammer beam roof is like an inverted A with a smaller A inside it, helping to support the big A at the apex. Imagine a line drawn like a cross-bar through the A and reaching to the walls of Westminster Hall on either side. The smaller A might rest on this cross-bar and support the big arch.

As a matter of structure the two halves of this imaginary cross-bar do not join in the middle. They only project far enough to allow the bowed legs of the smaller A to rest on their ends. These two projections are called the hammer beams. They end in carved angles and support, and are braced to the large A by upright posts. We hope this description is moderately clear, and will at any rate serve to show the ingenuity with which the fourteenth century English carpenter devised his balancing system of stresses and thrusts.

What is happening now is that the weakening of the hammer posts and beams, as well as of the arches which spring from them, is actually pulling the wall posts and plates clear away from the walls. It will be necessary and sufficient to brace the whole structure together with a light and imperceptible steel framework. Little can be done to repair the ravages of the beetle, though steps are being taken to fill up its cavities, and by means of various preparations of sulphur to discourage any further activity on its part.

The Westminster beetle is a greyish animal, not unlike a skate-shaped wood louse. It is the larva which does the damage, and this warrior has an enormous appetite and very powerful pincer-like jaws. Confined in a corked bottle it will quickly eat its way through the cork. One specimen which was confined in a bottle with a tin-protected cork retired from the contest with the tin and was in danger of starving. Its life was preserved and its appetite restored by a meal of the familiar Westminster oak. The larva always eats its way in along the grain of the wood. The light golden-brown color of much of the roof is due to a species of mildew or rust.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Headache.

In order to cure recurrent headache the first thing is to find the cause and remove it if possible. The situation of the pain will sometimes point to its origin. Frontal headache is often caused by pharyngitis, by inflammation of the mucous membrane or the inner bones of the nose or of the frontal sinuses, by anaemia or by eye strain. Eye strain occasionally but less frequently causes pain at the back or at the sides of the head. When pain of this kind recurs often at the beginning of school life it is almost always owing to astigmatism or some other eye trouble. Decaying teeth or chronic ear disease frequently provoke pain at the side of the head.

Most headaches that are not caused by actual diseases of the brain or its membranes, like abscess, tumor or meningitis, can be relieved temporarily by drugs, but this is a foolish way to treat them, for the pain will return as long as the cause is there. Moreover, most drugs that relieve headache are heart poisons and in the end do more harm than good. If you suffer from chronic headache let a physician examine you carefully. Generally he will find the underlying cause, and often, although not always, he will be able to bring about a permanent cure.

A Votes For Women Test

A remarkable experiment, devoted to a solution of the problem, "Would the majority of women vote if they were allowed?" was made on Sunday recently at the time of the general election under the auspices of Le Journal, with the aid of feminine societies.

Over thirty voting booths were set up at various centres throughout Paris, where all women, irrespective of property or class distinctions, were invited to place a paper in the urn, thus indicating their desire to vote, although not asked to express an opinion regarding the candidates for the Chamber of Deputies.

Despite the vigorous booming for several weeks previously by Le Journal, the results were hardly satisfactory. Fewer than 17,000 women over a million, the total female population, responded to the urgent solicitations of the Feminists.

The latter, however, express satisfaction, especially considering the variety of voters, who represented all ranks of society. In general, Paris opinion was not impressed and feels that the Feminist movement has in no way been advanced by the results of the straw ballot.

MATTING THE MISSISSIPPI.

Memphis Carpeting the River Bed to Save the Channel.

The bottom of the Mississippi river, or, rather, portions of it near Memphis, Tenn., are being supplied with a carpet in the shape of gigantic mats woven of willow trees, which are being constructed in sections on the surface of the river and then sunk into place. The river for several years has been cutting a new channel that threatens to leave Memphis high and dry a mile away. The turbulent river already has to its credit, or discredit, a score of towns deserted in this manner, with consequences serious enough. In the case of Memphis, however, these consequences would be disastrous almost beyond description. Her costly harbor facilities would be utterly ruined and the city left with a huge mudbank between its fine levee and the stream.

The threatened danger was first noted by government engineers about a year ago, and preparations immediately started to avert it. While the insatiable river has for several years been eating railroads, houses and farms in the vicinity of Memphis, sucking them into its muddy maw and carrying them down to the gulf of Mexico, it seemed that the hungry stream had at last met something that would check its appetite when a sheer wall of solid rock appeared at Hopefield Point, opposite Memphis. But the rock was soon being undermined.

The willow mats now being placed in the river at that point are expected to put a stop to the erosion. Some of these mats are a mile long and 200 feet wide. As fast as a section is completed it is weighted with rocks to sink it into place and then pinned to the bottom with piles. The Mississippi is the only river in the world that enjoys the distinction of having its bottom carpeted.—Christian Herald.

They Charged Overtime.

Wilson Barrett used to tell an amusing story against himself. At a time when he had a lot of workmen redecorating his private residence, thinking to give them a treat, he asked if, after work one evening, they would like to have seats to go and see him play in "The Lights o' London," at the Princess Theatre.

They said they didn't mind if they did, and being complimentary tickets, all went on a Saturday night to see their employer's performance.

At the end of the week Barrett's eye caught sight of this item against each workman's name on the pay-sheet: "Saturday night. Four hours' overtime at Princess Theatre, eight shillings."

HOW TO CURE STOMACH TROUBLES

Excessive acid in the stomach or hyperacidity, as it is called, is primarily responsible for nearly all cases of indigestion, dyspepsia, gastritis and flatulence which quite frequently lead to stomach ulcers. The successful treatment for the prevention of such cases depends entirely upon neutralizing the excess acid, stopping the food fermentation and healing the inflamed mucous membrane that lines the stomach. For this purpose, specialists are now universally advising the use of pure bisurated magnesia which has recently been found to be unequalled in the treatment of even the severest cases. One to two teaspoonfuls in a little water immediately after eating stops all pains almost instantly, neutralizes the acid and soothes the inflamed stomach and if regularly used, will quickly remove the cause of the trouble. Being well known, bisurated magnesia can be obtained from any druggist and will keep indefinitely if kept tightly corked.

Keeping Groll Off the Grass

A Job Neatly and Effectually Performed.

By HENRY BERLINGOFF.

Stub Reilley was willing to admit that the "old man" was a more important figure in the office than George Fielding, but the rack itself could not wring from him an admission that any one else loomed as large, least of all Douglas Groll, the junior partner.

Groll had incurred Stub's enmity the first day the boy had come into the office, and since then he had done nothing to cause a reversal of Stub's opinion.

Fielding was a wholesome sort of chap whose very capacity for making friends had won for him a place of authority in the office of Sommers & Groll. Every one liked him. The loyal Stub worshiped him and would have gone to the end of the earth at his order.

Stub had even raised from the dead his mythical grandmother to bury her at a more auspicious moment because Fielding had hinted that there was a lot of work to be done even if the "champs" were playing a double header at the ball grounds. Greater tribute than this no small boy can pay.

Naturally when Gertrude Vance was looked upon with especial favor by Fielding she became the chief goddess in the office.

Mr. Sommers' sonorous call of "Patrick!" sometimes went unanswered, but the boy fairly jumped to Miss Vance's desk at the softest call of "Stub!" and would sharpen her pencil or bring her a fresh set of carbons before he answered the increasingly impatient call of the head of the firm.

And because Fielding cared for Gertrude it angered Stub to notice the familiarity with which the junior partner treated the little typewriter. Gertrude could not very well resent these trifling impertinences without losing her place, and she could not afford to do that when she and Fielding were saving up every penny against the time they should find some tiny suburban home suited to their modest income.

They were working hand in hand toward that end, and she could only pretend not to notice the hand that rested caressingly on her shoulder whenever Groll stopped at her desk to give an order or ask a question.

Stub instinctively sensed her embarrassment, and he gritted his teeth impotently whenever he saw Groll moving toward the typewriter's corner, vowing with boyish intensity that he would get even.

He watched Groll with a quiet attention that permitted no move to escape, and that resourceful business man would have been surprised had he realized how much Stub knew about his personal affairs.

Stub was ever alert to get hold of some bit of information that he could use as a club, but Groll grew more and more daring in his attention with the knowledge that the girl feared to speak to Fielding.

Groll always was particularly offensive when Fielding was at the bank. The firm had two branches uptown, and every morning the receipts from these branches were brought down by the trusted clerks and turned over to the cashier, who accepted the credit slips without question and passed the sealed package on to the bank with his own deposit by Fielding. The packages of bills were made into brick shaped forms and sealed at either end. The messengers were trusted employees, and there never had been the slightest inaccuracy.

Stub loved to watch the arrival of the packages. It was his ambition to be a messenger himself some day and carry a revolver under license from the police.

The bulges in the messengers' coat pockets filled him with envy, and he was saving his tips with the idea of purchasing a revolver of his own against that happy day when he should be intrusted with one of the leather satchels chained to the messengers' wrists.

Then came a day when Groll went into the senior partner's office, and soon he and Sommers went to the cashier's cage. Here the two, after a brief consultation with the latter, went toward Fielding's desk.

"I tell you that I saw him make the exchange," Groll was saying as they moved toward the closed desk. "I was in the cage for a moment and saw him bending over his desk."

"Did Mr. Fielding go to his desk after he left the cage?" asked Sommers of the cashier, and the latter nodded an unwilling assent.

"He had a bottle of medicine that he wanted to put there. He had a bad cold."

The cashier carried the bunch of keys that were duplicates of all the keys in the office, and they soon found the one that fitted Fielding's desk. As the roll top was raised to release the catch that held the drawers locked Stub could not refrain from drawing near. The trio did not notice his approach, so interested were they in the investigation.

With an exclamation that sounded very like a groan Sommers drew from the bottom drawer a package that was unmistakably the deposit from the north side branch, and with trembling hand he reached for the sharp envelope opener that lay upon the blotter.

"I've had my suspicions for some time," announced Groll jubilantly. "I happen to know that Fielding is planning to marry Miss Vance, and he has been speculating with what they call their building fund for some time. He planned this move to get back his losses and at the same time gain enough to buy a home. I have been watching him carefully, and today my suspicions were aroused.

"The money is not counted here in the office, and he planned to place the blame on the cashier or the messenger and go scot free."

Stub grinned at the jubilation of Groll's voice and stood on tiptoe the better to observe the proceedings. Sommers had slit the wrapper that the seals might be preserved intact for future reference, and all three men gave an exclamation of surprise when, instead of the bank notes, Sommers drew out sheets of crisp bond paper cut to greenback size.

"Perhaps his nerve failed him," suggested Groll, who was the first to break the silence.

"Nerve nothin'," interrupted Stub. "I was wise to your game. I had the switchboard when the girl was out to lunch, and I was rubberin' on the wire when you told Mr. Beekman to fix the package today like the one he gave you. You was trying to get Mr. Fielding out of the office so you could break off the engagement, and maybe Miss Vance would go to lunch when you asked her.

"Pig Moran up to the branch goes to th' same choich I go to. I got him th' jobs an' he found out that there was a lot of cut paper in Mr. Beekman's wastebasket last night. I see you bring in the package this morning, an' I see you and Mr. Beekman in Brown's last night when he give it to you.

"I was wise. I swapped packages on you, an' it ain't your fault that Mr. Fieldin' ain't comin' back from the bank tellin' that the north side package was a fake. You didn't see me switch it. You didn't even know I was in th' cage, but I was there all right, and that's how it is that you got back the same package you thought you was givin' Mr. Fieldin'. I'm there, too, when it comes to handin' lemons."

"Telephone Mr. Beekman and your friend Moran to come down here at once," commanded Sommers. "Groll, you know best whether or not to make arrangements to sell out your interest in the business."

"You needn't send for Beekman," said Groll sullenly as he laid a heavy and detaining hand upon Stub's shoulder. "You can let Vanserson buy me out if you want to. This devilish kid is too smart for his own good. If you let a word out about this I'll kill you," he added as his nervous fingers tightened their grip on Stub's shoulder until the boy winced with pain.

"Forgit it," admonished Stub. "I put a 'keep off the grass' sign on Miss Vance, an' that's all I was after. I guess that goes."

At a sign from Sommers, Groll released the boy and followed his partner into the private office to arrange the details of the sale of his interest.

None of the others had noticed the little group, and as Stub hitched off to his desk he looked at the trim figure of Gertrude Vance seated at her machine.

"I wisht I was big enough to marry her meself," he mused, "but it's the next best thing to see her marry Mr. Fielding. Anyhow, I jest had to keep Mr. Groll offen the grass. He's too fresh—that guy."

LUCKY BURGLARS.

Life In a Detention Prison on the Isle of Wight.

On high ground, about a mile from the town of Newport, in the Isle of Wight, is one of Britain's most remarkable institutions, the preventive detention prison, Camp Hill. Within its grey stone walls are housed 170 men whom the law regards as habitual criminals.

When an incorrigible burglar or swindler is captured and sentenced, he is, under the present system, sent not only to a term of penal servitude, but on completing this is despatched to Camp Hill for an additional term of years.

The treatment the inmates receive is much less rigorous than that meted out at other prisons. In the first place their cells are large and airy, each having a window to the open air, which the occupant is allowed to open or shut as he pleases. Then there is a library, from which prisoners can borrow books to read in their cells. "Sherlock Holmes," "David Copperfield," and works of an exciting nature are eagerly devoured.

What is appreciated most of all is the permission to smoke. After dinner, which consists of meat, stew, or fish, with plum pudding to follow—none of your skilly for Camp Hill—the men can produce their pipes and have a smoke and a chat. Every inmate has this privilege, unless he has been refractory, and some of them, by good conduct are allowed to smoke after their evening meal.

There are other privileges. Each prisoner receives threepence per day for his labor, and he is permitted to spend half this sum, ninepence per week, at the canteen. The remainder is saved up for him until his release, or sent to his dependents. It is from the prison canteen that the tobacco comes—strong, well-flavored tobacco that lets you know you are smoking. Butterscotch is also in great demand, followed by strawberry jam, marmalade, peppermint drops, plum cake, and chocolates. Liquid refreshment, probably to the prisoners' intense disgust, is confined to lime juice, sherbet, and various fruit syrups.

Another source of revenue is open to the Camp Hillers. By good conduct a prisoner may earn a stripe every six months, and a cash prize of five shillings accompanies each stripe, half of it being spendable. William Sikes usually squanders it in one glorious feast, his weekly ninepence and the half-crown providing an orgy of sweets, oranges, and jam that would delight the heart of any schoolboy.

At Camp Hill the prison barber is not an overworked individual, for the men are allowed to own safety razors, and are permitted to shave themselves every day.

Like Boils. Worst on Face. Watery When Rubbed. Also Hands Cracked and Smarted. Cuticura Soap and Ointment Cured.

Main St., Eye-Brow, Sask.—"I was bothered with small pimples similar to little boils for four or five years. They were all over me but worst on my face. Of course they gave me a bad appearance. The pimples were both painful and itchy so I scratched till quite large sores would be the result and they seemed to be very watery after I rubbed them to a sore. My face was very scarred during the time it was sore.

"I was troubled with sore hands most all winter for two years. They kept cracked till they would be bleeding, and they smarted and were so sore I could hardly bear to get them wet.

"Upon seeing Cuticura Soap and Ointment advertised I thought there would be no harm in trying them so I started with a small sample. I purchased a full-sized cake of Cuticura Soap also a box of Cuticura Ointment and before I had quite finished this I saw I was lots better so the second cake of Cuticura Soap and box of Cuticura Ointment was purchased. But little was used when I was entirely cured." (Signed) Mrs. Wm. Dickson, May 23, 1913.

HUNTED IN WILDS.

White Men Flee From Mexico Into British Honduras.

Tucked away in a little corner of Central America and bordering on Mexico for about 100 miles is a little patch of the British Empire that is feeling the effects of the turbulent times in the neighboring republic. The river separating the two countries is called the Rio Grande, like the one between Texas and Mexico, but is known also as the Rio Hondo.

Many British working in the mahogany and chicle camps in the Quintana Roo territory of Mexico have sought refuge in Belize from the hostility of the natives. It is stated that practically all mahogany cutting has ceased, and unless conditions improve there will be a shortage of chewing gum. It is obtained from the sapote tree.

One of the biggest mahogany concerns had its principal camp at Mengel and had in its employ a large number of white men, who lived there with their families. Some of these men were off some distance in the tropical forests when the natives learned that the United States had seized Vera Cruz. The lives of Manager J. A. White and his assistant, C. R. Stanley, were threatened. Mr. White and the other employes and their families at Mengel succeeded in getting across the river to British Honduras, but Stanley, who happened to be away from headquarters at the time, was forced to flee into the dense brush to escape the mob that was upon his trail with the avowed purpose of killing him. For ten days he wandered about in the wilds of Quintana Roo, subsisting on roots and what little game he was able to kill with a revolver, his only weapon. He had been given up by his friends as lost when he appeared at a little settlement near the British Honduras line.

The Maya Indians, who inhabit the more remote parts of Quintana Roo, have never been conquered by Mexicans and its members are hostile to that Government. During the Diaz regime constant warfare was carried on to subjugate the Mayas. They were killed by thousands and the survivors were driven back into the interior and finally the ancient and sacred capital of the tribe, Chan Santa Cruz, was captured. This and other defeats broke the spirit of the Mayas and they have carried on guerrilla warfare against the Mexicans.

It is well known here that Americans and British traders in Belize carried on a profitable trade in supplying the Mayas with arms and ammunition in return for chicle, mahogany logs and other tropical products.

British Honduras became a British colony in 1862. It was settled by British in the latter part of the eighteenth century, despite the armed opposition of the Spaniards who were in possession of the country. The town of Belize, where the British governor makes his headquarters, has a population of about 15,000 including about 500 whites.

New French Army Rules.

The French are rejuvenating their army. They have concluded that a captain must retire at fifty-one, major at fifty-four, lieutenant colonel at fifty-six, colonel at fifty-eight, brigadier general at sixty, generals of divisions at sixty-two and generals of corps at sixty-four, while members of the high council of war may hang on a year longer.

PERFECT HEALTH DUE TO THE BLOOD

No Girl or Woman Need be Constantly Ailing and Unhappy

Nature intended every girl and every woman to be happy, attractive, active and healthy. Yet too many of them find their lives saddened by suffering — nearly always because their blood is to blame. All those unhappy girls and women with colourless cheeks, dull skins and sunken, lustreless eyes, are in this condition because they have not enough good red blood in their veins to keep them well and in the charm of health. They suffer from depressing weariness and periodical headaches. Dark lines form under their eyes, their heart palpitates violently after the slightest exertion, and they are often attacked with fainting spells. These are only a few of the miseries of bloodlessness. Nothing can rescue girls and women from the inevitable decline that follows anaemia except a generous supply of new, rich, red blood, and nothing has ever proved so successful in creating red, good blood as Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People.

Thousands and thousands of girls and women owe their good health and charming complexion to the use of this medicine. Here is one example of its power to cure. Mrs. Rose Ralli, Toronto, Ont., says: "For a long time I suffered with anaemia, nervousness and general debility, in fact I was beginning to feel a positive wreck. I tried several medicines and emulsions. For a time I would feel better for taking them and then the effect would wear off, leaving me worse than before. The continued drain on my health altered my appearance, my friends telling me I had a haggard and worn appearance. This naturally did not help to improve me, as you know no woman likes to be told she looks "worn out." Finally Dr. Williams' Pink Pills were suggested and my husband got me a supply. I used them and found the result good — not only good, but the benefit lasting, and I am now enjoying perfect health, have a good colour and have regained my natural buoyancy. I trust my letter of gratitude may be the means of helping others who are suffering as I was."

New health, new strength, new vitality, follow the fair use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. You can get them from your medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

BIRDS OF PREY—Note: The Regina papers are not doing a thing to Calgary's oil boom. The above cartoon from the Regina Leader is a specimen "knock."

How Khaki Is Dyed.

Khaki is an invention of the Hindus. The word means "earth-color." It was at first produced by immersing the cloth in a bath of manure. Other dyes used in India have been burnt chicory, catechu and diamines. The modern khaki is produced by dyeing in a mixture of oxide of iron and oxide of chromium. It can be obtained by dipping the stuff into a bath of ferrous sulphate and spreading out to dry in the air. In practice the process is more complex, solutions of ferrous sulphate pyrolignite of iron, acetate of chromium and alum being employed in combination. The tissue takes up a large quantity of the metallic precipitate.

Flowers and Spices Antiseptic.

The odor of cloves has been known to destroy microbes in thirty-five minutes, cinnamon will kill some species in twelve minutes, thyme in thirty-five minutes. In forty-five minutes common wild verbena is found effective, while the odor of some geranium flowers has destroyed various forms of microbes in fifty minutes. The essence of cinnamon is said to destroy the typhoid fever microbe in twelve minutes and is recorded as the most effective of all odors as an antiseptic. It is now believed that flowers which are found in Egyptian mummies were placed there more for their antiseptic properties than for merely ornamental or sentimental purposes.—London Globe.

"Setting the River on Fire."

In old English times, when each family was obliged to sift its own flour, it sometimes happened that an energetic man would turn his sieve so rapidly as to cause it to catch fire. The style of sieve used in those days was called a "temse," and is became a customary saying that a lazy man would never set the temse on fire. Now, it happens that the name of the river Thames is pronounced like the name of this old fleur sieve, and after many years, when the old-fashioned temse was forgotten, it was thought that setting the temse on fire meant setting the river on fire, and that is why to-day we say that a stupid person will never set the river on fire.

Nothing Unusual.

Several years ago a tourist fell over a rock from a height of about 100 feet, near Europa Point, Gibraltar. He was killed, of course. The lieutenant in charge of the guard-room, however, inserted in his guard report for the day that "nothing unusual had occurred."

For this he was "carpeted" before the town mayor, who asked for an explanation.

"Well, sir," replied the young officer, a Scotsman, "if the puir mannie had na' been kilt it would have been a very extraordinary fact, but as the puir body was kilt—why, sir, I thought it was na' extraordinary or unusual."

The plea was accepted.

His Title.

When Prince Victor of Hohenlohe Langenburg was serving as a midshipman his vessel touched at a port where there was an English garrison, and the commanding officer came on board. He asked the captain whether there was not a prince related to Queen Victoria among his officers. "Ought I to call him 'Your Highness' or 'Your Serene Highness'?" he inquired.

"Please yourself," said the captain, "we always call him 'Sandage,' because he's a German."

FEMALE GARDE'ERS.

New Outlet For England's Superfluous Women.

The great number of superfluous women throughout England means an almost overpowering rush for every profession or branch of work which open hospitable doors to feminine wage-earners.

The normal English woman is a natural born gardener. In her childhood she has had her own little patch of ground in which, aided by someone in authority, she plants little posies. All through her girlhood she interests herself in the home garden and marriage and her own establishment bring her a garden of her very own.

Until fairly recently, however, she has not had a chance to study gardening systematically and practically and the idea of making a profession of it never occurred to her.

But as the labor market became more congested because of feminine applicants Lady Warwick and Lady Wolseley, both enthusiastic gardeners, decided almost simultaneously to open schools of gardening from which women could be graduated and take their places as professional workers.

The lot of the woman gardener at first was not easy. Everyone knew there was no reason why she should be less competent than a male gardener, but British prejudice is hard to break down and professional gardening by women was a new thing and therefore regarded with distrust.

However, some few great land owners were persuaded to allow women to come and "assist" their gardeners and their ability was quickly proved. Now there is actually a demand for women gardeners.

Their pay has not yet risen to the proportion it should, but their competence is recognized.

There are at present in England alone 17 colleges for women gardeners, all of them flourishing and on firm financial bases.

The students are almost always girls or women of good families, vicars' daughters with their way to make in the world, reduced gentlewomen and daughters of deceased army or navy officers. They have always had some experience in home gardening, and what they want is the benefit of practical instruction and the advantages of a diploma.

Poultry keeping, bee keeping, farming, horticulture and domestic science are also taken up in some of the schools, and in all these branches women have shown themselves surprisingly successful.

Phantom Monoplane.

The first air-ghost has just been encountered on Salisbury Plain by one of the most skilful of army aviators, who went up on a monoplane on a cloudy day accompanied by his mechanic. The aeroplane entered the clouds, and the pilot was continuing his flight in them, when suddenly he discovered another monoplane, no more than fifty yards away, coming straight towards him out of the mist. He dived almost vertically, and after a headlong descent levelled out once more, but his relief was only momentary. The other pilot must have performed exactly the same manoeuvre, for no sooner was he speeding along again on a level keel than he saw the monoplane once again looming out of the mist, heading straight towards him. Terror-struck, the pilot dived again, emerged below the clouds, and forthwith landed. Not until then did the explanation strike him. He had fallen a victim to an hallucination of the clouds familiar to every Alpinist, and seen his living shadow projected upon the film of vapor.

Strange Meeting.

Canon Roberts, of Manchester, rector of St. John's, Hongsight, who rowed in the Oxford boat fifty years ago, is the hero of a strange story of coincidence.

On one of the steamers following the race this year he met a gentleman of upright carriage and healthy eye, who hovered around for some minutes. Taking courage in both hands, he dared the question:

"Did you happen to row in this race fifty years ago?"

"I did."

"Are you Roberts?"

"I am. Who are you?"

"Kelly."

"You rowed bow to my three?"

"That's right."

And in all the past fifty years they had never met since the boat race of 1864 till the boat race of 1914.

Battleship Reading Room.

An interesting innovation will be made in the designing of the battleship New York, which is now under construction at the Brooklyn navy yard. This is a large and commodious room in a location very accessible to visitors, which is to be used as a library and reception room for the members of the crew. In this room is to be the crew's library, and the room is to be fitted with reading tables, writing desks, paper and magazine racks and chairs. Adjacent to this room are to be lavatory facilities for the use of guests of the crew. This provision is new in warship design.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Coughs.

Experience has shown that there are two distinct kinds of coughs—one proceeding from an affection of the lungs and air tubes, as in a simple cold, the other proceeding from effervescence in the stomach. The lung cough is a symptom which necessarily requires attention lest serious consequences ensue. The stomach cough is a much more simple matter and may easily be got rid of. It is caused by the effervescence of the food and drink which are put into the stomach. A knowledge of this fact ought to lead persons so affected to ponder a little on the nature of their ailment and the peculiarity of their digestive powers. Some stomachs agree best with alkalies, others with acids. One person likes a bitter substance, another a substance which is sour. The person who desires a satisfactory explanation of these circumstances will consult his own physician. Many stomach coughs arise from an undue love of sweets—sweet tea, sweet drinks, sweet cake, sweet custard and all kinds of confectionery. To some this love of sweets is in no way injurious, but to others it is exceedingly baneful.

HAVE PRETTY HAIR

Soft, Fluffy, Abundant—Use Parisian Sage. It Stops Falling Hair and Itching Scalp.

If your hair is not as soft and beautiful, or as fresh and full as that o some friend, do not despair—do as she does — give it daily attention. Beautiful hair is largely the matter of a little care. If it is too thin, make it grow. If it is too dry and brittle, soften it up—lubricate it. If you have dandruff it is because the scalp is too dry and flakes off. Freshen up the scalp and dandruff will go.

Parisian Sage, sold in fifty cent bottles at drug and toilet counters, is just what you need—it softens the scalp, nourishes the hair roots, immediately removes dandruff, and makes the hair wavy, lustrous and abundant.

Parisian Sage quickly stops itching head; cleanses the hair of dust and excessive oil; takes away the dryness and brittleness, makes it seem twice as abundant, and beautifies it until it is soft and lustrous.

You cannot be disappointed in Parisian Sage. Always sold by Warne Drug Company on money back if not satisfied plan. Look for the trade mark—"The Girl with the Auburn Hair." It's on every package—accept nothing else.

An Ancient Custom.

The ancient custom was observed on Easter Sunday of presenting a highly-colored Easter egg to every worshipper at the morning service at the church of St. Mary Woolnoth, which stands at the corner of King William street and Lombard street, London, facing the busy Bank crossing.

As the congregation left the church the eggs were distributed by two young ladies. On each egg was written the text from which the rector had preached.

The origin of the custom is unknown. Records have been found of a presentation of Easter eggs at the church in 1235. The eggs are of different hues, and the lasting coloring is done by a secret process by the two daughters of the rector, the Rev. J. M. S. Brooke.

Crippled With Rheumatism

And Skeptical After Trying Many Medicines — Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills Cured Him.

When the kidneys fail to purify the blood the poisons left in the system cause pain and suffering, such as backache, lumbago and rheumatism. Read how this skeptic was cured by Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

Mr. F. W. Brown, Kingsbury, Que., writes:—"I have been completely cured of backache and lame back by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. I also recommended the pills to a man who was a cripple from rheumatism. He was skeptical, as he said that he had tried nearly everything on earth. Finally he consented to try them, and to his surprise was greatly benefited in the first week, and the pains left his legs until he was so supple he could walk without pain or difficulty. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills have worked wonders in this place, and we think there is no medicine like them."

Three Able Eaters.

The biggest eaters in public life, when one narrows it down to three men, are Secretary William Jennings Bryan, Senator Ollie James and Senator Moses E. Clapp. Secretary Bryan always eats his usual dinner at home before going out to attend a formal dinner. His one specialty, however, is cheese of various denominations. Clapp is most formidable at consuming good, thick cream. James is best in an all around eating tournament.—New York Sun.

Wheeling Yourself.

Electric wheel chairs, which need no practice to operate, have now appeared as a substitute for the push chairs common at seaside resorts. Pressing on a lever with the foot makes them go ahead, and the harder the pressure the faster they will go, though the top speed is not much faster than a walk. Removing the pressure on the foot lever puts on the brakes. The steering is done by means of an ordinary steering lever.—Exchange.

The late Rev. Silvester Horne, who died on a steamer just before arriving in Toronto recently, and who represented Ipswich in the British Parliament, used to tell an amusing story concerning a visit which Mr. Balfour once paid to that town. An old lady, hard of hearing, seeing the crowd of people outside the station and the extra police present, mixed up the Unionist leader's arrival with the Ipswich Assizes, and asked a neighbor for whom they were waiting. When she was told it was Mr. Balfour, the old lady said:

"Well, I suppose if the poor man has done anything wrong he's got to suffer for it."

One typical offender was went to say, after the clock had struck three, "Fifty-nine minutes to four! If it is only a question of minutes, I may as well be off!"—and he went!

Participating versus Non-Participating Life Policies Again

FIFTEEN YEARS AGO a Publisher of this City at age 43 took out a Ten Pay 15 year Endowment Policy of $2000, No 81226 in The Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada paying therefore an annual premium of $187.20.

The Non-Participating Premium would have been $170.40.

The extra paid for profits per year (for 10 years only was $16.80.

On the 1st of May 1914 the above Policy matured and he received in cash $2620.25.

Had this man taken a Non-Participating Policy he would have saved $168.00 extra in premiums paid for profits during the ten years but he would have lost $620.25 at maturity of Policy as he would have received only $2000.00 instead of $2620.25 as he did.

Where is there a man that would not like to invest money at such a rate and that too in the Largest and Strongest Life Insurance Company in the British Empire?

You are invited to call and investigate.

HORRIBLE DISASTER IN AN ALBERTA MINE

PROSPERITY FOLLOWS GOOD ROADS SYSTEM

Says W. A. McLean, Speaking to 100 Guests of the Automobile Association---Most Successful Outing.

MEETING AT HASTINGS

There has yet to be discovered an exigency that will daunt the moving spirits of the Peterborough Automobile Association. After the heavy shower of rain yesterday, which caused a great number of the members to think that the outing to Hastings would be postponed, the officers of the Association by an hour of strenuous effort, turned what might have been a lamentable failure into a most successful treat that out-distanced by far any excursion they have ever held. When the speakers rose to address the gathering in the dining-room of the Spellman House, last evening, they faced a crowd of one hundred interested men, and outside lining the streets of the village to the surprise and curiosity of the inhabitants were twenty-five automobiles which told the story of why, how, and under whose auspices that century of men had gathered.

As guests of the Automobile Association yesterday were the members of the County Council, the pathmasters of the County, Mayor Buller, Ald. Green and Ald. Dobbin and others, to the number of one hundred. They were given a very enjoyable auto drive to and from Hastings, and in that Village a meeting was held that is bound to bear fruit in the improvement of the highways, by means of which it is possible to traverse this County from one end to the other.

And the outing was no stilted affair, where men were bound by hampering rules, and spoke guardedly to one another by entrenchments of enforced aloofness from their companions of the day, but the members of the Association proved ideal hosts, and the County Councillors and the other guests were unanimous in declaring the outing a most enjoyable affair. The guests were looked after in every way possible. They were comfortably quartered in the autos on both trips, a splendid repast was served at the Spellman House, their convenience was looked after in every respect, and the speeches that were delivered were truly entertaining.

But while too much cannot be said of the good time that the Association gave to all who went, it is to be remembered that the whole excursion centred around one definite motive, and that motive was to make a real and definite step forward in the securing of better roads for the County of Peterborough. If they were successful in entertaining their guests they were even more successful in launching their campaign for good roads throughout Peterborough County. Mr. McLean, the well-known Government Engineer, and Mr. Doolittle, President of the Ontario Motor League, were the chief speakers, and they outlined the practical advantages of good roads, and the steps to secure them, in a manner that gripped the minds of the County Council and the Pathmasters present. Mr. Canfield, Dr. Sutton, Mr. Rackham, Dr. Amys and Mr. Allan are to be congratulated that as a result of their efforts there were so many present to hear the addresses and that the large number of County Councillors and Pathmasters, who responded to the invitation, were provided with cars for the journey to and from Hastings.

Besides the local men and men from this vicinity there were present interested workrs from Campbellford, Millbrook, Keene, Hastings and Norwood. The meeting in the dining-room of the Spellman House was presided over by Mr. Coulthard, President of the Automobile Association, who handled the programme in a capable manner.

Mr. Doolittle, President of the Ontario Motor League, in his address, said that one result of the good road movement would be to get the country boys to remain on the farm, and the younger men of the city to get so sick of city life that they would repopulate the farms. In ten years' time the population outside of the cities would be doubled.

Mr. Doolittle remarked on the fertility of Peterborough County and its possibilities; but he said that the men of this district did not realize that the men who bought their crops were not, after all, the most profitable visitors. They took away a dollar's worth of goods for every dollar they spent, whereas the tourists in a great many cases, left reasonably large sums, without taking any of the produce of the country with them. And Peterborough County was not nearly as attractive to tourists as it could be made to be. He told of how, near Hamilton, a trench two feet deep had been dug and filled with stone. That had become a permanent roadway that had stood the test for twenty years and would stand the test for a thousand years to come. A

CLOSING EXERCISES

The closing exercises of the Lakefield Preparatory School were held last night, a large number of invited guests being in attendance including Rev. Canon Davidson, Dr. Cameron and R. M. Hamilton, of Peterborough; Mr. Thos. Allen, of Millbrook; Mr. Currie, of Port Hope, and a number of Lakefield people.

Rev. A. W. McKenzie, principal of the school in his opening address, dwelt on the pleasant relationship that had always existed between pupils and teachers.

The presentation of prizes then followed. Among those who received awards were P. F. Davidson, son of Rev. Canon Davidson, who was presented with a prize for languages, and Donald Cameron, son of Dr. Cameron, who received an award for mathematics.

Major Leonard's prizes for the best essays on "Canada's Duty to the Empire," were also presented. The first prize of $30 went to J. F. Davidson, of Peterborough, and the second prize of $20 to G. Merritt, of Toronto. Donald Cameron, of Peterborough, was third. The headmaster informed the gathering that the essays had been judged by Rev. T. B. McCorkindale and Rev. H. A. en Olief, of Lakefield, who had had great difficult in making their awards.

Rev. Canon Davidson was called upon for an address and spoke on the subject of "Distinctiveness." He said that the Grove School was a distinctive school, different from other institutions in its kind of teaching and general atmosphere. He urged the boys to aim to be distinctive in character audi n their work in life, and paid a compliment to the headmaster. Mr. McKenzie, and his assistants, Messrs. Marling and Graham. Mr. O. A. Langley, of Lakefield, also addressed the gathering on the subject of "Success in Life."

The singing of the National Anthem brought an enjoyable evening toa c lose.

RAIN MEANT $100 TO ONE FARMER

Arrived Opportunely for His Strawberry Patch

SAVED PEARS TOO

Friday's rain saved the strawberry and pea crops in this section. It provided a new lease of life for other crops, but these were beginning to look anaemic, especially on the higher ground. One gardener, who usually handles many crates of berries, states that the rain was easily worth $100 to him. Some of the fruiterers are showing berries to-day of which the difference between those that were grown on high ground, and others which grew in damper places, is very noticeable. There is also a decidedly noticeable price variation.

America's Greatest Detective Offends His Confreres.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., June 20. —By adoption of a revised honorary membership list, the International Association of Police Chiefs yesterday dropped the name of Detective William J. Burns.

Henry Gallagher of Montclair, N.J., presented the report. At the same time J. L. Beaver of Atlanta, Ga., attacked Burns, declaring that the "antics" of the detective in the Lee Frank case were a "disgrace to the profession."

The chiefs declared themselves in favor of the segregated vice district.

"Just Strong Coaxing.

ST. JOHN, N.B., June 20.—At the resumption of the Dugal enquiry yesterday, Senator N. M. Jones of Maine, manager of the Partington Pulp & Paper Co., Ltd., said that W. H. Barry declared to him that in view of the terms which had been made in connection with the bonuses, that the large holders of crown lands should contribute to a campaign fund. The company finally paid $3,225 by check.

"There was no demand," said Jones, "just rather strong coaxing."

TO THE ELECTORS OF WEST PETERBOROUGH

Mr. Soden solicits the Temperance vote on the ground that he is in favour of the abolition of the Bar, Club and Shop Licenses. Will Mr. Soden state on the public platform that he will VOTE WITH EITHER POLITICAL PARTY for the abolition of the Bar, Club and Shop License, or over his own signature in the Public Press.

My promise to the Electors is—I WILL.

G. A. GILLESPIE.

G. A. GILLESPIE
Liberal Candidate in West Peterborough.

On Saturday, June 6, I gave the Temperance Associations a signed statement that if elected I would vote with either political party on every possible occasion for the abolition of the 1,300 bars, 215 shop, and 58 club licenses in Ontario. I repeated this statement in my Opera House address June 18. Furthermore, if I ever get the opportunity I will vote to prevent the manufacture of liquor. I ask for your support and influence.

NEW BY-LAW TO BE RESCINDED?

Property Committee Recommend This Along With Other Changes in the Market Requested

COVER FOR VEHICLES

A deputation from the Retail Merchants' Association, including Mr. T. C. Elliot, Mr. Thos. Barrie, and Mr. N. Cameron, waited upon the Property Committee of the City Council last night, and asked several things of that body.

As a result of their request, the Property Committee will recommend to the City Council that the recent Market by-law, requiring all selling butter and eggs to have their names and addresses on their baskets, and requiring the weight of fowl to be ticketed on the birds, be rescinded in its entirety also they will get estimates on the cost of paving a space inside the present Market sidewalk and erecting a suitable cover over it as a protection from the rain and snow.

These are radical steps and will come as a surprise to the citizens of Peterborough and the residents of the surrounding townships who use the Market, the more so owing to the fact that the proposition to erect a cover over a strip inside the present sidewalk has always been treated coldly by the Councils in the past.

If the Council accepts the recommendation of the Property Committee, the new Market by-law, which caused so much friction before it was made a law a short time ago, will be rescinded. In that case those selling butter and eggs on the Market will no longer need to display their names and addresses on their baskets, or those selling fowl to have a ticket showing the weight of the bird attached to it. The by-law has only been law since the 1st of May, and the producers of the country were just beginning to realize that they must comply with the regulations, when now comes the intelligence that the Property Committee have reversed their former opinion and have recommended that the by-law be taken off the municipal statutes.

The suggestion of the deputation of the Retail Merchants' Association last night was that while they agreed with the city fathers that the purpose of the

NINE KILLED IN AIR MIX-UP

During Austrian Manoeuvres Aeroplane and a Big Dirigible Collided

VESSELS DESTROYED

Examiner Special:

VIENNA, June 20.— An aeroplane rammed an airship here to-day during the Austrian military manoeuvres. There were nine deaths and both air vessels were destroyed. It seems that the great military dirigible, twenty-three hundred feet in the air, was rammed amidships by the military aeroplane. The dirigible caught fire and collapsed with seven doomed occupants. The aeroplane crashed to earth, killing both pilot and observer.

Review of The Grocery Market

The western crop and general Canadian market situation is reviewed as follows in this week's issue of Canadian Grocer:

Office of Publication,
Toronto, June 18, 1914.

In the West and also in Ontario and in a less degree Quebec and the Maritime Provinces also all eyes are now on the developing crop, and particularly the wheat crop of the prairies. Reports are still favourable, although a reasonable amount of rain will still be required to bring the best results. The government report places the Western crop at 10,247,000 acres of wheat, an increase of 211,000 acres over last year, and the condition of the crop at June 1st had the unusually high average of 93 per cent. The acreage for oats has increased 284,000 acres, and for barley 16,00 acres, and the condition of these crops is placed at 92.

The outlook is still not certain enough to make definite figures and the fact that in the United States there is the biggest wheat crop of history assured makes a spread between the markets. American wheat is comparatively cheaper than Canadian at present, and on this ground the claim is made that Canadian flour should come down to compete with the American product in the export business; however, there is little demand at the present time.

Business is taking a better tone and some wholesalers are much more optimistic, taking the stand that from now on business will be on a better basis and the retailers have their stocks in much better condition than when the depression was first felt.

Cheese is finding a strong market now that the quality has improved. There is a good American demand with the result that there is a continued falling off in shipments to the old country and prices have come up there. Shipments across the water since the 1st of May are 125,000 boxes, as compared with 105,000 boxes a year ago and 212,000 boxes in 1912. Butter has found a more solid market and some business is being done with the West in competition with New Zealand importations. The high prices of a week ago were caused by some strong competition for the good quality stuff by packers at Cowansville.

A feature of the week is the continued decline in the prices of hogs and as a result there seems to be some doubt as to whether hams will take the usual summer advance, particularly as it is felt that there are some big stocks on hand. Lard is weak and there are fractional changes in price.

There are seasonable adjustments in the prices of fruits and vegetables. Nuts are very dear and spices are strong with cream of tartar higher than for some years past. Teas and coffee continue strong with little prospect of cheaper prices.

A 10c advance has taken place in corn meal, as predicted, and there are prospects of further changes in an upward direction if the corn market maintains its strength

THE TWO POLICIES STRIKINGLY COMPARED

Mr. J. C. Smith Shows Clearly That the Duty of the Hour is to Vote for Gillespie and For Rowell.

A LOGICAL ARGUMENT

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Sir,—Canada is supposed to be governed by the people and for the people. But is this really a fact? Well, I think it is—sometimes. For many years the minority has ruled the majority upon a certain question, and the majority has submitted to this about as willingly as a bucking broncho submits to be ridden by a cowboy. But the cowboy usually sticks to the saddle, and so it is with this beautiful minority. The kicks registered from time to time may have loosened the girths a little, and may have given the rider some severe jolts, but nevertheless, there he is to-day sitting in the saddle and riding as jauntily as he did fifty years ago. It may be asked how is this possible in a country that is ruled by the people? Is it not strange that although the majority has during all of these years been protesting against the liquor traffic, the minority has succeeded in forcing it upon them?

There are several minor reasons for this, one of which is the trickery of the petty politicians, who always remind me of the sign over the door of a small wood-working shop, "All kinds of Twisting and Turning done here".

But passing by all of the minor reasons, and taking a broad and comprehensive view of the whole question, I think that the great outstanding reason why the minority has ruled Canada for so long is the failure heretofore of any great party leader to take up the question and make the legal suppression of the traffic a plank in the party platform. Under our system of government it is extremely difficult, if not impossible, to accomplish any great reform unless one of the parties will take it up. To state the case fairly I must give the reasons advanced by the party leaders for declining to take up the question. The Liberal leaders have generally told us that legal suppression is right in principle, and that it is also very desirable, but that the country was not ripe for such legislation. And they argued that by taking up the question they would alienate the pro liquor Liberals, and that they could not rely upon the Temperance Conservatives to come across and help them. Whether they would or not is still a questio vexata, as they have not yet been put to the test by any great Dominion leader. Then the Conservative Prime Ministers have said they did not believe in legal suppression, and consequently they flatly refused to have anything to do with it. The Temperance people have therefore been compelled to confine their energies to moral suasion and to the passing of certain restrictive laws, all more or less defective. I am aware that many people agree with the view of the Liberal leaders, and possibly they may be right although I do not like to think so. But just here is an important point which is very generally overlooked. The leadership of either of our political parties is a great position, and who ever occupies it wields an enormous influence either for good or evil, and if either leader had taken up the question and had made it perfectly clear that he intended to stay right with it and fight for it the same as he would for protection, free trade or tariff revenue, this would have had an immense educative influence, and would eventually have drawn the people to his standard by the thousands. It would doubtless surprise us all if we knew how many converts Rowell has made during the past few months. And he is only a Provincial leader. However, the foregoing are the facts. And the beaneke is still bucking, and the cowboy in stiff up. But now, a red letter day has arrived. A Provincial party leader has taken up the question, and the people of Ontario will be given a chance to throw off this intolerable yoke, and decide that they will no longer submit to minority rule. If we do not respond we must be less than men. There are two policies before us which I will not attempt to compare. Can you compare the noonday sun in all his effulgence with a tallow candle? If you can—well, we will let it go at that. Rowell did not catch the Tories in swimming and steal their political clothes. On the contrary, he begged the Government to take up the question and promised his help. But they declined. Besides this, Sir James, evidently forgetting that the people of Ontario have British instincts and love fair play, deliberately imposed upon us the three fifths clause. Intelligent British subjects will not stand for such legislation. Rowell's policy has now been put up to the churches so squarely that he will be an artful dodger who can evade it. And I believe that Flames Shooting Through the Mouth of The Shaft of Ill-fated Mines Puts an End to Rescue Work.

200 COFFINS ORDERED

Examiner Special:

HILLCREST, Alberta, June 20. — During a terrible night of anguish, four babies were born to women whose husbands were lost in the disaster. Though the rescuers are still working manfully at the shafts of the ill-fated mines, there seems no hope for any more apparently lost in the disaster, thirty per cent of whom are foreigners and the rest English speaking men.

There was a terrible scene of desolation throughout town this morning, as one after another corpses were brought up out of the mines. Practically every home is in mourning, with some bread winner in the improvised morgue. There will be a public funeral to-morrow. Provincial and Dominion governments have sent temporary assistance. It is probable that funds will be opened for the destitute women and children.

HILLCREST, Alberta, June 20. — (Later)— This morning the flames started to shoot through the mouth of the shaft and all rescue work was discontinued. Up to that time 52 lifeless bodies had been taken out. The miners state the mine was in a deplorable condition and had been closed down for two days preceding the explosion. One had no doubt accumulated and a carelessly thrown match started the catastrophe. The bodies of James Quigley, mine superintendent, and Thomas Layter, fire boss, were recovered during the night. Two hundred coffins have been ordered from Winnipeg by wire. The inquest will start at 10 o'clock to-day.

Ald. Anderson's Sister Passed Away in Alameda

Alderman Anderson received a message yesterday evening informing him of thed eath of his sister, Mrs. E. W. Davidson, of Alameda, Sask. Deceased lady had many friends in Peterborough, who will be sorry to hear of her demise. She leaves behind her husband and two little boys.

THE COMING OF THE COURT

The Coming of the Count, which was announced in yesterday's and to-day's paper, has certainly aroused the curiosity of Peterborough people. It is expected that he will arrive within a very few days, and he promises to be an interesting personage.

Infernal Machine In Malls.

MONTREAL, June 20.—An infernal machine, containing enough nitro-glycerine to demolish all the houses within a block of its location, was found late Thursday night beneath a window of the seventy-ninth precinct police station on St. Hubert street. Attached to it was an explosive cap which needed only the slightest jar to explode the powerful material within.

The bomb was taken to police headquarters for analysis and examination by experts. There is no known motive for its being placed near the police station.

Lightning Instantly Kills Farm Hand.

ST. CATHARINES, June 20.—Edwin James Canner, an employe on Senator E. D. Smith's farm at Jordan Harbor, was instantly killed by lightning while working in the field. He was 34 years of age, unmarried, and came fom Northampton, Eng., about seven years ago.

THE PITH OF IT.

The open bar is regarded as the champion curse of the country. But if the temperance sentiment of the county votes against closing it, the partizan spirit will have shown itself a greater curse than ardent spirits served over the open bar. A terrible responsibility rests upon the temperance electors of Ontario; upon the church members who have prayed for temperance until they are hoarse. If they vote for the open bar they will have accepted some of the excuses the father of evil always has ready for distribution when he wants to win the game between right and wrong.

CAN'T BUILD SHIPS.

Rt. Hon. Winston Churchill and Rt. Hon. R. L. Borden assured us that Canada can't build ships, and Mr. Borden in a burst of patriotic fervor declared that it would take Canada from twenty-five to fifty years to build a Dreadnought. But great statesmen don't know it all. Canada has done some rather decent ship-building of late. The Collingwood Ship-building Company, located in Canada, and a mighty big credit to Canada, has shown Messrs. Churchill and Borden that they are wrong. It got an order from the skeptical Mr. Borden's Marine and Fisheries Department for two gigantic ladder dredges, the largest of the kind ever built in Canada, built as soundly as any vessels of their kind in the world. This same despised Collingwood Ship-building Company built the "Noronic" of the Northern Navigation Company's fleet, an ocean liner for inland sea service — as staunch and perfectly equipped as any Atlantic greyhound. And on Thursday, June 18th, this same impudent Collingwood Ship-building Company launched the largest, swiftest, and best built steam freighter on the Great Lakes—680 feet in length, beam 58 feet, and depth of hold 31 feet. Messrs. Churchill and Borden, kindly address apologies to the Collingwood Ship-building Company, Collingwood, Ontario, Canada — yes, Canada.

SEEKING COVER.

The indications are that the Ontario Government is getting frightened over the great popularity being developed by Rowell's policy of abolish-the-bar. Sir James Whitney seemed to trust to Mr. Hanna, the bar member of the Cabinet, the fortunes of the Government by solidifying the support of the liquor traffic, the beneficiaries of the bar. Mr. Hanna seemed to see the premiership in his grasp when Sir James listened to his advice to precipitate an election a year and a half before the constitutional time, and to feel that his opponent for the reversion of Sir James' shoes, Hon. Adam Beck, was effectively sidetracked. Mr. Beck opposed a general election and Mr. Hanna advised it. Sir James has evidently repented of having fallen in with Mr. Hanna's scheme, discards his unwise advisers and takes the rejected Mr. Beck into conspicuous favour. Sir James has decided to come out of his retirement and will hold a meeting at Massey Hall next Tuesday night; and he has selected as his lieutenant, to appear on the platform with him, Hon. Adam Beck. Sir James is so alarmed at the unexpected and great strength developed in the country by Rowell's policy that he abandons Mr. Hanna and his Sniderism and puts his trust in Mr. Beck and the Hydro-electric policy. It is, however, difficult to see where he will gain by that. The Hydro-Electric is not an issue in this contest in any sense. Both parties are agreed to it. Though Liberals originated the Hydro-Electric scheme, the fortunes of politics left its development to Hon. Adam Beck, who, in the work he has done so well, had the assistance of the Liberals when he and Sir James Whitney "had their backs to the wall" fighting against a hostile Conservative element in Toronto, led by the Toronto News. Hydro-electric is not an issue in this contest, neither is the Workmen's Compensation Act for Mr. Rowell and the Liberal party cooperated and will cooperate in the promotion of the interests of both.

Whatever is said, whatever shift or turn is made, abolish-the-bar is the chief and, practically, the only question before the country at this time.

POOR SENSITIVE SOULS.

What sensitive souls some temperance people and nearly all liquor license leaders are. They hold up their hands in pious horror at the desecration of the gospel ministry, implied in advocating a political issue and speaking in favour of it from, or appearing upon, public platforms in favour of it.

The refusal by the Ontario government to accept Mr. Rowell's offer that he and his party would join with the government party in passing a law to abolish the bar and thus take the issue out of party politics, forced Mr. Rowell to make the abolition of the bar a political question. He is facing the situation like a man, and should count upon the support of the temperance men and women who have listened to their pastors pray for abolition of the bar and have said 'amen' to his prayers for it and have themselves in the family circle prayed to God to save their children kneeling beside them from the curse of the open bar.

Yet it is a "shame" for ministers of the gospel to take an active part in the work of abolishing the bar. Ministers would be false to their trust, dead to their responsibility, blind guides, if they refrained from taking part in a political fight for the abolition of a curse that more than any other, except hypocritical church members, makes their ministry barren.

Sunday observance, a moral question, has been in politics and ministers have preached and prayed for it publicly, but no on has found fault with them. Ministers are citizens, and as a class, the highest types of citizenship, they have the rights of citizenship and independently of the responsibility of their office, have a right to deal with any question that affects the welfare of their flocks, especially a tremendous moral issue like abolition of the bar. St. Paul himself went into politics. When he was haled before the tribunal of the Roman governor of Judea, he appealed to Caesar.

The fact that ministers are on the side of "abolish-the-bar" means the assumption of a logical position. Who has officially any better right than ministers to take the platform or appear on a platform in its interests? At the Rowell meeting in the Opera House on Thursday night there were eight ministers of the gospel of different denominations on the platform. Did they do any wrong in showing their approval of a great moral movement for which they have been working in an abstract way for years as a part of their duty, the whole of their duty being to help its application in a concrete form — in realization. This attitude of ministers is natural, and serves to bring out the line of distinction. One does not expect friends of the liquor traffic to be on a platform of abolition of the bar. They are consistent; they stand for the traffic to a man, and can one condemn ministers of the gospel for having as keen a sense of duty, as a devotee of the liquor traffic?

The ministers are consistent and set a good example to the weak kneed temperance elector, who, if there should be any such, will rise from his prayers for the destruction of the drink traffic, brush the dust from his knees, ad go walk arm in arm with an advocate or victim of the traffic to the polls and vote for its perpetuation. One is forced to recall—"Ye blind guides which strain at a gnat and swallow a camel" and the whole spirit of its textual and moral connection.

THE GOVERNMENT AND LABOUR.

The overnment poses as the friend of Labour. What evidence can it adduce in support of its right to do this? If the government had shown an interest in Labour such as is claimed for it, how is it that Mr. Allan Studholme, the only Labour representative in the House, during his six years in the Legislature, has voted once for the government and sixteen times against it. Not because the Labour member was partizan, for he is independent in a manly way. He voted against the government because it antagonized his efforts to improve the laws in the interests of the working classes. He and Mr. Rowell proposed some dozen reforms, to better the conditions of employees, especially girls and children in industrial occupations; and the government voted them down and voted against the working men, the working women and the working youths and the working girls. That explains why the Labour member had to vote against the government.

One would think that the government could stand one labour member out of 111 members in the House. Mr. Studholme represents East Hamilton acceptably to the Labour interests. He is again a candidate and the Liberals have not put up a candidate to to oppose him; but the government appreciates the Labour representative of Hamilton so highly that it has put up a Conservative candidate against him, so that if the latter is elected Labour will owe it to the government that it will have no representative; nobody to officially speak for it, in a Legislature of the greatest industrial province of the dominion which has more industrial workers than nearly the whole of the other provinces put together.

Mr. Rowell moved a resolution in the House providing for the establishment of a Government Department of Labour, with a responsible minister at the head of it, whose business it would be to study labour conditions and devise and provide legislation to meet its wants and requirements. The government voted down the resolution ad showed its customary indifference, if not hostility, to the interests of Labour.

Mr. Hanna, Provincial Secretary, is regarded by his admirers as something a little short of an angel on account of his Prison Farm, where criminals and offenders against the law are treated with the greatest tenderness and fed and housed as if they were worthy members of society. While this policy is right within reasonable limits, Mr. Hanna and his government kept the working man out of a Compensation Act for seven long years and though an Act was passed last session, the government has not yet brought it into force, and goodness knows when it will bring it into effect.

Employers of labour and thinking employees are emphatic in declaring that strong drink is the greatest enemy of the working man as well as of society generally. The government is hostile to closing the open bar, the place from which a steady procession of criminals emerges to reach Mr. Hanna's luxurious prison farm, Mr. Hanna is in duty bound to take care of prisoners, by way of compensation. He is fighting against the abolition of the bar; he wishes to retain the bar which produces nine-tenths of the criminals. If he sows the seed of crime he is under obligation to take care of the crop, and no Prison Farm luxuries he can devise, will compensate for the crime and misery, which the open bar he is trying to retain, produces.

The Ontario government is no more a friend of Labour and its interests than it is the friend of temperance. If it is the friend of Labour, why is it opposing the only Labour candidate in all Ontario? If it is the friend of temperance why is it that everyone engaged in the liquor business, all that profit by it, all the enemies of temperance are solid for the present government. Where one might find one friend of the Liquor traffic voting to abolish the bar, one can find and will find ten thousand voting to keep the bar. A man is known by the company he keeps, and a government is known by the character of its supporters when such an issue as the abolition of the bar is in question.

Her Views On Marriage

PHILADELPHIA, June 17. —"The marriage ceremony has outlived its usefulness ad should be relegated to oblivion."

This, in a nutshell, is the view of Dr. Anna Shaw, president of the National Woman Suffrage Association on a subject which holds such an important place at this time of the year when the wedding bells are joyously pealing.

The brides and grooms of this June time, as well as other married folks, will no doubt appreciate some more of her views, expressed in an interview to-day on the marriage contract.

Has Been Asked to Wed.

"Why folks are always seeking an old maid's view on matrimony is something I could never understand," Dr. Shaw said. "But it seems to be the case and, what is more, they even go a step farther and ask me to marry them.

"Probably it is because I have a broad view of the subject, and do not believe in being tied down by rules that are as old as the hills. I have this much to say, and that is the ceremony should be cut out. It is useless and has served its day. Moreover, it does not fit in with modern times and present day conditions. It is too old fashioned."

"The marriage service, for one thing, is a poll-parrot affair. The method as used in reciting the pledge is ridiculous to say the least. The minister says one thing and the groom repeats it after him. Then, turning to the bride, he says it again and she repeats it after him. There is no solemnity, dignity or character to that kind of a marriage.

Often Has Officiated.

"I have been accused of making light of the nuptial ceremony because I refuse to follow this fashion. To me marriage is too sacred an institution to permit any alloted promise. The proof that I am right lies in the success of the marriages that I have performed—in the happiness of the couples. I have officiated at a great many ceremonies, especially when I had my own church in Cleveland, and I have never known of a divorce among the parties."

"I have always believed in making the ceremony fit the occasion. In other words, I have different service for each marriage. The principals consult me beforehand and we prepare the vows. It is for this reason that the pledge is always different, according to the views and convictions of the couples."

"In this way they are impressed with the service and realize the sanctity, beauty and significance of the marriage contract. To them it means something more than a mere jumble of words. It is their own pledge and not likely to be repeated at every other wedding.

Believes in Brevity.

"Long ceremonies are boresome. Therefore I try to make mine as short as possible.'

"As for the word 'obey,' I only had one girl who wanted to make such a crazy promise. In fact, she insisted on it. There was only one thing for me to do; I refused to marry her. She had to take the bridegroom to another minister."

"No woman obeys her husband, No man with common sense asks his wife to obey him. In fact, it is a greater disgrace to expect than to give such a thing. No man would respect another man for demanding it."

"Therefore I think that it is positively wicked to use this word in the marriage ceremony. It is spiritually and morally wrong to encourage a woman to make a promise she knows in her heart she will not keep. She is a fool and a perjurer at the same time."

To Keep Skin In Fine Condition All Summer

It would be much better for the skin if little cream, powder or other aids used during the heated term, mixed with perspiration, dust and grime, these things are anything but beautifying. Ordinary mercolized wax will do more for the complexion, and without giving an oily, streaked, spotted or pasty appearance. It is the ideal application for the reason, as it not only keeps the pores clean, but daily removes particles of scarf skin which have been soiled by dirt or weather. By constantly keeping the complexion clear, white, satiny, it does more toward perpetuating a youthful countenance than any of the arts or artifices commonly employed. One ounce of mercolized wax, obtainable at any druggists, will completely renovate the worst complexion. It is applied at night like cold cream and washed off in the morning.

To keep the skin from shrivling or wrinkling, or to overcome such conditions, there's nothing better than a face bath made by dissolving 1 ounce powdered saxolite in ½ pint witch hazel.

ORCHARD AND GARDEN NOTES

Keep the cultivator going.

Keep the hedges clipped this month.

Stop cutting asparagus the middle of the month.

If the season is dry, strawberries will be benefited by a thorough watering.

Look out for currant worms and the leaf miners that work on shrub foliage.

Keep seed pods cut off the rhubarb. It might also be well to add manure to the land.

Another sowing of Golden Bantam sweet corn and late peas may be made now.

Mow the lawn frequently. This will thicken the grass, making a better lawn.

Keep the dahlias trimmed to one or two main stems. Better flowers result.

Thin all vegetables that are crowding. Beets and Swiss chard thinnings make good "greens."

Perennials for next year's bloom may be sown the latter part of this month. More of these should be grown in every garden.

Nitrate of soda is a clean, quick, fertilizer to put on the lawn. Apply at the rate of 200 pounds per acre.

Ants may be destroyed by punching holes in the hills with a fork handle and saturating cotton batting with carbon bisulphide. Put this in the hole and cover it with earth.

Cut worms will soon begin to be troublesome. A bran mash to which Paris green and a very little syrup have been added, scattered near the plants, will usually get rid of them.

Considered Others.

"How can you smoke those vile cigarettes?"

"Many great men have done the same thing. Robert Louis Stevenson smoked cigarettes."

"I know that, but Stevenson had the decency to go to the middle of the Pacific Ocean to do it."

CLAMS AND SOME OF THE BEST WAYS OF COOKING THEM

The months without an "r" in their make-up hold no terrors for the little bivalves commonly known as clams. And by the way, did you ever know that the reason that these shellfish are called clams is because of the firm "clamp" of their shells?

There are almost as many interesting possibilities in the preparation of clams for the table as there are for oysters.

Cream Clam Soup.

One of the best possible ways of preparing clams is in cream clam soup. Here is an old, well-tried recipe: Drain a quart of clams and chop fine, return to their own liquor and bring slowly to a boiling point. Then let the mixture simmer for twenty minutes. Strain through a fine sieve and thicken the liquor with one-third of a cupful of butter, the same amount of flour and seasoning of salt and pepper. Now scald four cups of milk to which has been added a slice of onion and two blades of mace. Strain and add the milk to the clams. Just before serving add the yolks of two eggs slightly beaten.

Clams on Toast.

To make a delicious entree of clams on toast put the clams on a broiler over a hot bed of coals until they have opened. Then take them out of the shell with a fork, saving the liquor. Cream together a teaspoonful of butter with one-half teaspoonful of flour. Thicken the broth with this mixture and season with salt and pepper. Place the clams on pieces of buttered toast and pour liquor over them and serve immediately.

Scalloped Clams.

Scrub the clams thoroughly and then place over steam to force open. Take the clams from the shells, place in a shallow baking dish and cover with a white sauce. Then add a layer of breadcrumbs and bits of butter, and bake in the oven until a light brown. This can be prepared either in the shallow baking dish or in the individual shells, which can be placed on a baking pan and baked in the oven.

Clam Fritters.

To make delicious clam fritters begin with one pint of chopped clams seasoned with a little salt. Now beat up two eggs, add one-third of a cupful of milk, and one and one-third cupfuls of flour, sifted with one-half teaspoonful of baking powder. Mix this with the clam mixture and proceed as for fritters, frying in hot fat.

Clam Chowder.

There are ever so many ways of making clam chowder, but there is no way to make it without taking considerable time and trouble. Here is a well-tried rule that calls for two pecks of clams, one quart of potatoes, sliced thin, and a piece of salt pork half the size of an egg, two onions, one teaspoonful of salt and one saltspoonful of white pepper, one tablespoonful of butter, one quart of milk, and six butter crackers. The milk should be heated in a separate dish and added last. Put the pork over the fire in a saucepan and add the onions. Fry them without browning, and add the sliced potatoes and the seasoning. Steam open the clams and add their liquor to the potatoes. Cover and cook in the oven until the potatoes are done. Then add the clams and the seasoning, heat through, add the soda crackers and then pour over all the hot milk. Remember that boiling toughens the clams.

AN ANTI-SWATTER.

Alas for the poor fly! He has few friends nowadays. One of the last to be kind to him was the dear old Countess of X.

"Julia," said her ladyship, who noticed one buzzing round the window and giving himself a headache butting the glass, "Julia, open the window and let that poor fly out."

"But, madam, it is pouring rain."

"You are very thoughtful, Julia. Show the fly into the ante-room and let it sit down till the shower is over; then let it out."

FITTING UP THE PORCH

Now is the time when those who are fortunate enough to have some variety of porch or piazza naturally turn their attention to arranging it tastefully and comfortably. Since the owner's leisure time will undoubtedly be spent here rather than indoors when the weather is fine.

The piazza floor is naturally subjected to a great deal of tracking from the wet grass and dusty roads, and it is therefore advisable to choose a neutral and dust-coloured paint for the floor tone, unless it is a hardwood floor, in which case a dull light brown stain is the best.

The end of the piazza where one most frequently sits should have some simple form of rug to give it the effect of an outdoor sitting room. There are so many simple woven grass and straw mats made now for this purpose, besides the serviceable jute and fibre rugs, that one has a large field for choice.

Although the green grass rugs do not hold their original colour for long, they usually fade to a desirable tan colour that is quite satisfactory. These flat and comparatively smooth floor coverings are much easier to keep clean than the heavier cotton rugs that require hard sweeping.

There is a good deal of choice in the matter of piazza furniture, but unless the piazza is a very large one, with a broad roof offering plenty of protection to the things beneath, these should be chosen with an eye not only to comfort, but also to durability when subjected to the weather.

It must also be remembered that piazza furniture is always being moved about to the spot where one can get the best breeze, and for that one reason should not be heavy or bulky. There is practically nothing that is not obtainable in willow and wicker furniture for the porch, but to be in good taste it must be of the simplest design. Wicker is usually preferred to willow on account of its greater durability.

Chairs that are left out of doors become so weather-stained that they often soil the dresses of those who lean back in them. To prevent this, and also to make the chairs more comfortable, stretch around them a piece of crash awning cloth or unbleached muslin.

Cut these covers the shape of the backs of the chairs, about two inches narrower at the bottom than at the top. Finish with a two-inch hem all round and with inch-wide tape sewed at the four corners of the covers to tie; when they are tied to the chairs, they will not sag or wrinkle.

Small chairs for little folks are often overlooked when fitting up a piazza, and it may not be generally known that miniature sizes of all the well-known chair designs may be had from the manufacturers.

Porch pillows should be covered with table oilcloth, very light in weight, before the outside cover of washable material is put on. Then if they are left out overnight or in the rain no damage at all can be done. A set of square cushions, used singly or placed one on another, is often preferred to chairs by the younger people.

They may be made from denim or jute with excelsior for a filling.

To insure shade at all times on the piazza we are obliged to resort to awnings and screens, which, if well chosen, will add to rather than detract from the tasteful effect. Awnings must always be chosen with an idea as to how the colour will blend with that of the house. Greens, buffs and browns are the best tones for outdoors in the generality of cases. Red is very durable, but it gives an effect of heat rather than shade.

As a means of decoration the hanging basket is not to be despised, but be sparing in the number. Two are sufficient for a small porch. Fill with ferns, geraniums, petunias, pansies or graceful training vines. If perchance the vines grow too long, clip them to within a foot or two of the basket. If you suspend a fern ball it will soon become a mass of curling, feathery leaves. Give it plenty of water, as the moisture evaporates rapidly.

Find room for a pot of mignonette. It is well known that flies avoid the odour of this charming, old-fashioned flower, and its presence is a sure protection from their annoyance. A corner stand supporting a bowl of goldfish will prove an attractive accessory to the furnishings of the porch.

WORTH REMEMBERING

Make for yourselves nests of pleasant thoughts. None of us yet know, for none of us have been taught in early youth, what fairy palaces we may build of beautiful thoughts, proof against all adversity,—bright fancies, satisfied memories, noble histories, faithful sayings, treasure houses of precious and restful thoughts. —Ruskin.

* * *

The book which makes a man think the most is the book which strikes the deepest root in his memory and understanding.

"He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit, than he that taketh a city."—Proverbs xvi.. 32.

How often with sad hearts and in great discouragement we feel as if there are in our life, certain sad conditions and distressing causes, that prevent us from being what we would like to be. But as far as real worth and character are concerned, nothing whatever can arrest its finest, noblest development.

"Nor stony tower, nor walls of beaten brass,
Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit." —Julius Cæsar.

One very small boy the other day asked another if he was going to be a lawyer or a doctor. "A lawyer of course," was the prompt answer, "because he makes the most money." Oh! the pity of it, that this spirit of money getting so absorbs our age! The question, "What a man has?" is asked so often instead of "What a man is?" Material possessions add very very little to, instead they often detract from, the highest, purest happiness in life.

A young man with scholastic ambitions is suddenly told that what was considered a slight eye trouble will prevent his studying any more. Thus seemingly are crushed the aspirations he has been cherishing ever since he was old enough to have any. But in his case his life is bound to be a "success" in the very best sense of that word, no matter how different from what he would have planned.

In the distance is a great mass of factory buildings, which have been the cause of much regret, because they have been a blemish in a beautiful landscape. Recently at a cloudy sunset, the rest of the country was in shadow, but the rays of the sinking sun shone full on that great pile, lighting up the rows of windows until the whole became a radiant, glorified vision.

Thus these trials, discouragements, disappointments may be what God has sent into our lives to make character strong, helpful and beautiful.—I. H. N.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

permanent foundation had been secured so that all that was necessary was to renew the surface from time to time. To-day the County of Wentworth had spent three-quarters of a million dollars on their roads. And during the last few years the farms had increased four and five times over in value. That was an example of what good roads could do for a country. The good roads had put the country within an hour's travel of Hamilton and a few hours of Toronto. The goods were easily got to market and increased profit was the result. There, some men made two or three thousand dollars a year out of intensive farming on ten acres of land. There it was not necessary to own and work two hundred acres of land to become prosperous.

Peterborough County had the land and the scenery, a big asset to making the country an attractive one. He urged that the County take up the system of County roads, to make every farmer a prosperous one, to enjoy their prosperity with the coming generation and not have their sons and daughters running from the farms to the cities of the East and West.

Ex-Warden J. H. Garbutt was called upon, and in response, spoke briefly. He appreciated the ovation that had been extended him, and wished to express the thanks of the County Council to the Auto Association for the outing and the luncheon. He recalled the hospitality of the Association in their trip to South Beach a year ago, and said that one of the aims of the Association that was being realized was that of bringing the city and country population closer together.

The whole community, he said, was looking for good roads. He was pleased to see the plan for a very extensive system of improvement to the public highway that was proposed by the Government to carry out during the next few years. The farmers, as well as the men of the city felt the desire for some of the comforts of life and appreciated the benefit of good roads. The County Council in the session not yet concluded, approved the County System of Roads and in the very near future he thought, would adopt the County system.

Warden Shaw was the next speaker. He was greatly interested in the good roads question, but the proposition of the County Roads system that came before the County Council of Peterborough involving the expenditure of $6,000, $7,000, or $8,000 per mile was too expensive he thought. The road from Norwood to Hastings over which the men had travelled today, was as good a specimen as one could wish for, and roads equal to that could be built at an expenditure of about $1,000 a mile.

Mr. McLean, Ontario Engineer of Highways, was given a rousing reception, as he responded to the chairman's request for him to address the meeting. The subject that had brought the men together, he thought, was one of the most important before the people to-day. He didn't know of any more important thing, ever that had to be dealt with at the capitals—Toronto and Ottawa—than that of the municipal councils in the matter of good roads. It was one of the most important works that Canada had to undertake. Unfortunately his duties in the past had not brought him into Peterborough County as much as he desired. But on the trip from Peterborough to Hastings he saw that the councils hadn't been idle, and he complimented them on the good work that had been put upon the roads. But one thing that had impressed him was the small expenditure that could be made to result in much improvement. The roads of a county should be constructed to meet the requirements of the traffic. Some roads where upwards of 2,000 automobiles passed in the course of a day needed an expenditure of thousands of dollars per mile. But the ordinary country roads over which the farmers drove to the grist office, to market, and to church, might be more cheaply built and maintained.

Where they had good roads in any country they have come under the supervision of experts. And the era of good roads would not be ushered in in Ontario until there was one man permanently employed to stay on the job and look after the road building and repairing three hundred days of the year. About ten per cent. of the construction should go into the supervision. They should get a good man in each municipality and keep him on the job. Good roads couldn't be had by doing a little once a year. It wasn't possible to keep a house, machinery or a business in condition by only attacking its faults once every year.

In Peterborough County the problem was a comparatively simple affair. It was not necessary to pay the freight on the stone that was used to put the roads in condition, but it could be picked up almost every where, put into piles, crushed and put on to the roads.

All the roads too, the speaker had noticed, followed the concession line as it had been originally surveyed from place to place. If the road were shifted one or two hundred feet to either side, hills could be repeatedly avoided. If no action were taken now the next generation would be needlessly climbing up and down the same hills. A small expenditure for the relocation of these roads would make them 50 per cent. better and reduce the cost of maintenance.

About twenty counties in Ontario were operating the County Roads system. In all of these there had been opposition at first, but in none of these had they even reverted to the old system. Even in the cases where there were real discrepancies introduced on account of the local conditions, they did not ask to have the system stopped, but the people said "Correct the faults and then go on with the work." The people of Ontario were absolutely fair, and if a fair proposition were put to them they would enter into it.

The sole duty of the County Council was not to reduce the tax rate. If so, why not abolish the honourable body, and do away with the taxes altogether. Its duty was to collect sufficient taxes and see that the money was expended as it ought to be.

Far too many County Councils were penny-wise and pound foolish. They neglected to spend small sums to repair roads and had to spend large sums to reconstruct them. In counties where the thing was fought the hardest the constituents are now enthusiastic supporters of the new system, and were anxious to let contracts in every direction and get on with the work.

The county system should serve the farmers' traffic from market towns and shipping centres. Whether they connected or not was a secondary matter.

Formerly the Provincial Government paid 30 per cent. of cost of road; now the recommendation of the Good Roads Commission is that they pay 40 per cent. of cost and maintenance. Cities should help to maintain highways near them, and tourists and autoists roads should be maintained, not by the farmer, but by the Province.

"Ultimately," concluded the speaker. "Every highway in Ontario will come to that state where it will be pleasant to travel on it at every season of the year."

In answer to question Mr. McLean stated that the statute labour should be under a permanent commissioner, so that one man would not tear up one year what had been put down by another man the previous year. The road between Peterborough and Norwood needed to be relocated, graded, dragged, macadamized, and rolled with a steam roller, and in some places drained with tile pipes.

Before the meeting closed County Clerk Elliott spoke for a moment, moving a vote of thanks to the Automobile Association, Mr. Doolittle and Mr. McLean.

The two latter gentlemen were honoured by three cheers before the meeting was brought to a close.

Bribery Charges A Sensation

Special to The Examiner.

GODERICH, Ont., June 20.—When the charge of alleged bribery is brought up before Magistrate Kelly this afternoon against the Conservative candidate, Dr. McKlin, and Rev. Joseph Elliott, the retired Presbyterian minister who was defeated by Wm. Proudfoot, K.C., at the last elections, it will probably be adjourned till next week and several material witnesses are out of town. The case is causing a great sensation here as the parties are all well known.

All Day Meetings In Tabernacle

There will be an all-day meeting in Bethany Tabernacle to-morrow with services at 11 a.m., 3 and 7 p.m. Rev Walter M. Turnbull, of New York, will be the speaker. Mr. Turnbull is a former resident of Peterborough, having lived here all his life until a few years ago when he went to India as a missionary where he spent several years in active Christian work among the Hindys.

Mr. Turnbull is a young man of ability and his friends here will be pleased of the opportunity of meeting him again, and hearing his discourses.

LOCAL SALVATION ARMY HEARD FROM IN OLD LONDON

LONDON, June 19.—The close kinship between the Salvation Army and Canada was picturesquely illustrated in Victoria street this morning when, desiring to honour Canada's new Acting High Commissioner, the Canadian delegates to the International Salvation Army Congress, now meeting in London, marched through the west end streets, headed by the Peterborough band to the Canadian Government Office. There they played a selection of airs, including "Nearer My God to Thee," as a sad reminder of the Empress of Ireland disaster.

The chief officers were received in the High Commissioner's room by Hon. George H. Perley, who most cordially welcomed them to London and paid a warm tribute to the services the army rendered in Canada. He made especial reference to Canada's sympathy in the Empress of Ireland losses. Mr. Perley accompanied the officers to the street where he was greatly cheered by the Salvationists and a large crowd of onlookers, while the band played "The Maple Leaf," the company singing the words with tremendous zest. Mr. Perley repeated his message of welcome, sympathy, and good-will.

Among the Salvationists were Commissioner Lamb, representing Canada; Brigadier Taylor, Toronto; Major Taylor, St. John; Major McLean, Winnipeg; Adjutant McElheney, Peterborough; Bandmaster Peryer, Staff Captain Holman, Ottawa; Staff Captain Walton, Montreal; Adjutant Macdonald, Edmonton, and Brigadier Green, Vancouver.

POLICE COURT

In Police Court this morning only one prisoner was ushered into the presence of the Magistrate, and the expectant knot ofs pectators.

A Young's Point man came to Peterborough for a few days, and for the first time in twelve months, yesterday, allowed his appetite for the stuff that is always crossing the bar, to get the better of him. He promised to remain sober for ever and ever if he was allowed to go, and taking his word for it the Magistrate dismissed him without having to pay a fine.

"Arthur Bell! Arthur Bell! Arthur Bell!"

In the court room and down in the Police Station, Chief Thompson and eDtective Newhall called the name three times. But there was no response, and the case of Arthur Bell, charged with supplying liquor to a blacklister, was enlarged until next Saturday.

Little Stories Picked Up In Smith With Mr. Gillespie

There were one or two little notes from the Gillespie campaign in Smith that may be of interest to those who are following the present issue closely.

Some time ago Rev. Dr. Pugsley conducted special services in and around Peterborough that were said to have been productive of much good. At one of the churches in Smith at which he laboured— the name is withheld for particular reasons — there were three men so stirred by Dr. Pugsley's presentation of a man's duty toward God and himself that they turned over to a new page in their lives. They were not wholly bad, but they had been diverging here and there from the straight and narrow pathway. They live in the same community and one of their neighbours asserts that all three are strongly in favour of the present temperance movement, and their attitude is attributed to the work of Rev. Dr. Pugsley.

The above is told just as it was stated, and without trimmings. If you can see anything between the lines it is yours.

This is the story of a young man, his faith in humanity and his ideals. And it is positively true. In fact these notes were gathered incidentally by the Examiner while accompanying Mr. Gillespie. This young man did not mention what his political leanings were, but his temperance attitude is unwavering. There are no drinkers in the family, but a church-going spirit has imbued him with deep principles and one of them is an abhorrence of drunkenness.

"When I think of the men who I have seen at church while temperance sermons were being preached, whom I have heard talk temperance, and who have lived temperance—in short who have been an example to me and other fellows— suppose they should fail to live up to what they have advocated? That is my only fear, for if they fail to support Rowell, I for one, doubt whether I would ever give any attention to temperance men and temperance campaigns again. Suppose that I were to follow their expressed example and then find that they had not been true to themselves, where could I expect to place my trust in future. For this seems to be an unusually opportune time." Those are practically his words, the words of a young farmer who has good clean ideals, who has a trust in his fellow men, and who is ground of friendship."

Don't imagine that none of the farmers tipple. But the Smith tipplers are decidedly few. However, here is one man on the 7th line who hides nothing in regard to his intentions.

"Sure, I take my horn when I get into a bar with a couple of friends. But I'm going to vote against the cursed stuff, for I only take it on the ground of friendship."

There is another young chp of about twenty-six up near the lake who claims that more attention should be given to the question of tax reform. As soon as all the people awaken to this question, he declares, they will unite in their demands. According to his story their farm was assessed a few years ago at $3,000 without buildings. On this the tax amounted to $24. Then when something over three thousand dollars was expended on buildings and fences the tax went up practically to $50. In other words, a few necessities were added to the farm and his father was fined an amount which would have paid the interest on a tidy sum which could have been used. "Why even Mr. Burnham supports that measure," he said, "although I have not heard him mentioning it in this election. But the Ottawa citizen and other Conservative papers are demanding tax reform. When the labouring men of the cities grasp the significance of the ideas they will be heard from."

This young man is one of the most ardent supporters Mr. Gillespie has anywhere. Temperance is his main plank, but the general betterment of the people is his general platform. He quotes Henry George on single tax, Lloyd George and others on social reform, and on temperance he is thoroughly posted. He even quotes Mr. Soden, but not to that gentleman's advantage. There are hosts of City young men whose eyes would be opened if they were to get into closer touch with their fellows in the townships.

Up at Young's Point they tell a little story about Mr. Burnham. It is quite humorous, but characteristic of him. He opened the meeting in the lock village while Mr Soden was speaking at Selwyn or Zion church. Mr. Burnham held the attention of his audience for a time although it was remarked that his reference to Burleigh power, a Federal question, was rather extensive. Then when he had said all he had intended to say and a little extra, he told the audience that he was not going to fill in any longer; that he had motored over in 21 minutes and that Mr. Soden was considerably overdue. And without any more ado, so the incident was related, Mr. Burnham sat down. Mr. Soden arrived shortly afterwards and the meeting proceeded.

200 LIVES ARE LOST IN A MINING DISASTER

Terrible Catastrophe at Hill Crest Where Miners Are Entrapped in Burning Mine---A Large Number of Those Killed Were Foreign Labourers

HILLCREST, Alta., June 20.—Practically all hope has been abandoned that any of the miners entombed in the Hillcrest mine, where an explosion occurred yesterday morning will be rescued. The total loss of life is now estimated at 197 men. Forty survivors only, of whom 27 were injured, have been brought to the surface. Fifty-two bodies have been brought out, forty-two of them having already been identified. Rescue parties are doing all possible to reach those who may be still alive in the mine.

The colliery, which is on the Crow's Nest branch of the C. P. R., between Frank, Alta., and Fernie, B. C., is reported to be on fire, smoke issuing from the pit mouth in dense black clouds and preventing rescue work.

The scene at the pit mouth beggars all description. Hundreds of tear-stained and anxious-faced women and children were there waiting some news of their loved ones, who had so recently left them. Two hundred and thirty-seven men entered the mine yesterday morning, but so far only forty have been brought out alive, most of whom were unconscious, but were revived by pulmotors.

The scenes around the mine tell a terrible tale of the havoc wrought and the fearful force of the explosion. So great was the violence of the explosion that a fair-sized concrete building located about ten yards from the mouth of the pit had the roof blown clean off. Men, horses, timber, rails, and wagons are jumbled in a chaotic mass, and the path is so strewn at every step with the debris that only those men who were fortunate enough to have been working near the pit mouth have any chance of being brought out alive. In fact old-time miners declare their belief that after such an explosion no man now unrecovered from the innermost working of the pit can possibly emerge alive.

Special relief trains are rushing to the scene, carrying doctors and medical supplies for the injured, and extra gangs are being organized to work their way into the depths of the earth in the hope that in the heart of the mine, which has been so badly wrecked, there may be found some few alive among the toilers who went to work yesterday morning to their doom with such awful suddenness a few minutes later.

Directors Cannot Account For It.

MONTREAL, June 20.—Mr. J. M. Mackie, managing director of the Hillcrest Collieries, Ltd., last night issued the following statement:

"We received a wire this morning advising us of an explosion in the mine, and stating the extent of the damage is unknown at the present. We have 277 men on the payroll, including office help and outside labor. It is probable that 250 men were in the mine at the time of the explosion. A wire received at the C. P. R. offices here states that 65 men have been taken out alive, but at this writing we have no direct report. Our men are doubtless too busy at rescue work to communicate with us.

"In planning our mines we constructed two different entries about half a mile apart, which are connected underground, and great precaution has always been taken in the ventilating of the mine. Our engineer's weekly report just received states ventilation was good in all parts.

"We are at an utter loss to understand how such a tremendous catastrophe could have occurred."

Two Hundred In Belgium.

LIEGE, Belgium, June 20.—Two hundred coal miners were entombed in the Vieville Marihaye colliery near here when fire broke out yesterday.

Two hundred of their comrades escaped when the alarm was given.

The fire was still raging yesterday and every effort was being made to rescue the miners left in the pits.

FAULTLESS LAUNDRY WORK OF THE PETERBOROUGH LAUNDRY

Description of the Plant, System and Efficiency of the Service Supplied by Mr. Hetherington

"It would do any woman's heart good to walk into the Peterborough Laundry, on Charlotte Street, and feast her eyes on the piles of beautifully ironed and spotlessly white goods ready for delivery" said a west-end lady to her visiting guest. The visitor answered—

"Well. What a comfort! Wish we had a laundry men in our town that could be depended upon to turn out such work. It must save you a whole lot of uneasiness to know that you can send out your family washing and get back clean linen, done up in faultless condition."

This conversation having been held in the hearing of a newspaper man, he was led to make a call at the Peterborough Laundry and see for himself what facilities it possessed for handling laundry work in such quantities without fault-finding.

Mr. Hetherington, the proprietor of the Peterborough Laundry, was found busy in the ironing room, personally superintending the work, and himself, ironing the collars, of which there are hundreds. He is a real enthusiast in his work. It was learned that he has been devoting recent years to the perfection of his plant, which has cost him many thousand dollars and many hours of careful study and painstaking work.

Certainly, his efficient and up-to-date laundry equipment, is a credit to his enterprise, and leaves little room for improvement.

Excellent System

The system of collecting and delivering goods for the laundry is simple but accurate; and, the building up of the large trade which Mr. Hetherington now enjoys owes much to the perfection of this system. Disputes or losses are rare, and the delivery waggons call with such regularity that the confidence of patrons is soon secured.

There is no need for a woman to be a slave to the wash tub any longer. One of the reasons why people have hesitated to send their clothes to a laundry is because of the fear that they will be washed with other people's clothes. The Peterborough Laundry washes everybody's clothes separately. This prevents the possibility of mixing the clothes with your neighbour's. Clothes are washed thoroughly, rinsed, blued, the water and wringing out by modern machinery, without loss of buttons or tearing, and returned within twenty-four hours, if necessary, and ironed or ready for finishing, if the finishing is to be done at home.

The Plant

It is only about thirty-five years ago since the first laundry machine operated by power was introduced; but within the last half of that time the improvement in these machines had been most marked. To-day what helps to make the Peterborough Laundry so successful in handling such large laundry orders is its well-installed modern machines, built to meet every requirement of the public and the every-day needs of the laundry man.

There never was a time when customers insisted on such good work, and Mr. Hetherington's aim has been to give the people of Peterborough the best results that advanced machinery and skill can give. His plant is equipped with the latest systems and methods of washing, ironing and mangling, which entitles the laundry to give its patrons the height of perfection in service at a moderate cost. Families are now relieved of all worry and care of their soiled clothing, so that wardrobes may be kept in spic-and-span condition all the time.

The many advantages of these washing, ironing and pressing machines over the ordinary hand-iron are that they do the work effectively. The ironing is done by machinery, subjected to steam pressure of dry, superheated steam, which penetrates the goods, raises the nap, revives the colour, and imparts a freshness equal to the new article. No scorching or burning, no buttons are broken or damage of any kind done to shirts or waists One of the recent new machines which has been installed in the Peterborough Laundry is a six-roll flat-work ironer. This particular machine is able to turn out a large amount of work in a given time and is particularly adapted for large bed linen covers, table covers, sheets, hotel work, etc. The goods passes into and over six padded rolls, each heated cylinders, which iron and heated cylinders, which irons and dry as rapidly as the goods can be handled.

In addition to this valuable and efficient machine, the Peterborough Laundry has a number of up-to-date devices and machines, such as steam bosom presses, ironers for finishing men's shirts; gas-heated collar, cuff, neckband and yoke presses; body ironers, sleeve and skirt ironers and shapers, seam dampeners, collar and cuff dampeners, and starching machines. The finished work always presents an appearance equal to new work and is unapproachable by an hand-iron work, no matter how skillful it may be done.

Office Staff and Employees

The office staff and employees of this laundry are principally women, because of their special fitness for executing laundry work. Over twenty work people are constantly employed, and each one has become an expert at the work. Just now, the summer business is crowding the laundry with orders, so that the full capacity of the laundry is required. Besides the local work, a large business is received from outside points all over the district, including hotels and large institutions.

To Hold Outing Next Saturday

A week from to-day the Automobile Association is holding an excursion to Indian River. The autoists will motor to Indian River, and there will partake of a fish dinner, on the banks of that diminutive stream, where the fishing is reputed to be the best in the vicinity.

Auto owners who do not belong to the Association cannot know what it means to take advantage of these trips which are organized by the officers of the Association, and enjoy the benefit of the hours of planning that are spent on these outings by the prime movers in the Association. Otherwise they would themselves be active members. It would be wise for all who are not already members to take out a member ship ticket before the outing next Saturday.

TO COACH THE MILITIA

A distinct honour has come to a local boy, Homer Obenauf, because of his prowess with the rifle. Mr. Obenauf has accepted a position to coach the rifle team of the First Regiment, Company G., of Cincinnati. Col. Hubler, of Dayton, who is commanding officer of the First Regiment of Cincinnati, made the appointment.

The first regiment has a membership of between six and seven hundred men, who are drilled on the rifle range. Mr. Obenauf secured the position because of the high showing he made on the state rifle team last summer. He has been a member of the local company for four years. He was the local representative at the state meet at Camp Perry for several years.

Mr. Obenauf will transfer immediately from the local Fifth regiment, Company M, to the First regiment, Company D, Cincinnati. He will have supervisory charge of drilling the men on the rifle team. Owing to the fact that the First Regiment, of Cincinnati, is one of the most important in the state as well as one of the largest the position tendered the local boy is a distinct honour. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Obenauf, of 42 East Delason avenue.

The Cincinnati papers have carried several stories relative to the appointment of Mr. Obenauf, praising his ability in the highest terms. He is a graduate of Wittenberg college, Springfield, O., and during the winter was professor of science in the high school at Tippecanoe City. While in Youngstown he was an active member of the local company and was regarded as the best rifle shot in the organization.—Youngstown Indicator.

Mr. Obenauf is a brother of Mrs. T. W. Dawson, Park Street, and is well known in this City.

ONTARIO'S GOING DRY.

Bygone years brought ceaseless struggle,
Weary path and grim defeat,
Hope deferred and painful striving,
Home to guard and home loves sweet.
Let the record be forgotten,
Raise the drooping standard high,
For a glad new day is dawning
And Ontario's going dry.
Stretch the hand to raise the fallen,
Break the captive's cruel chain,
In the heart of little children
Wake the song of joy again.
Spread afar the stirring watchword,
Vanquished evil soon shall die,
Truth shall reign, and right shall triumph
When Ontario has gone dry.

LITTLE DAMAGE TO THE FRUIT

Examiner Special:

ST. CATHARINES, Ont., June 20.—Fruit growers said to-day that while there was a slight frost last night, it did not damage to any extent the fruit, as the fruit is already set, being past the blossom stage, and it would take a pretty heavy frost to kill it. Tomato plants suffered, however, and it is reported that a lot were put out of business.

Waited On Premier

Examiner Special:

LONDON, June 20.—Although Premier Asquith to-day told a deputation of working women who waited on him to-day, that he could not accede to their request for the introduction of any woman's suffrage measure "at this time," the deputation came away with the opinion that he would do something in that direct ion if the Home Rule controversy could be cleared off the board.

Ald. Johnston's Attempt To Injure Gillespie Needs The Support of Solid Facts

Peterborough, June 20th, 1914.

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—According to the report of the Times this morning, Alderman Johnston stated at May's School House, that Mr. Gillespie's endorsation of the Hydro-Electric, was luke warm when he was a member of the City Council.

I beg to say that I was a member of the City Council during this time, and Alderman Gillespie's support was whole-hearted, enthusiastic and could always be depended upon to support the Municipal enterprise of Hydro-Electric lighting. If I am wrong, I am willing to leave it to Ex-Mayor Bradburn and to City Clerk Armstrong or any one else who knows the whole facts.

Alderman Johnston is also reported to have said that the Rowell party had lent no assistance when special legislation was required for carrying out the scheme for the City of Peterborough, and in answer to this, I wish to say that the Private Bill for the City of Peterborough, for its Municipal lighting, could not have passed the Private Bills Committee, without the Liberals voting for it, who had voted for it and the Liberals of the Private Bills Committee, carried the City of Peterborough Private Bill, with the help of a majority of two Conservatives. In other words, half of the Conservative Private Bills Committee in the Legislature, with the exception of two Conservatives, voted against the City's Bill, and all the Liberals of the Committee, voted for it.

I canvassed a large number of the members of the Legislature in 1913, and I was turned down by Sam Nesbitt, Conservative M.P.P., Mr. Johnston of Belleville, Conservative M.P.P. and the Conservative member of the Legislature for West Hastings.

The Honourable Adam Beck told me, and I believe that he told Ex-Mayor Bradburn, that the support of the Toronto Globe and Toronto Star in favour of Hydro-Electric, was strong and extremely valuable in supporting Mr. Beck in the Legislature and with the public.

I am willing to leave all the above facts to Ex-Mayor Bradburn, or to Mr. S. R. Armstrong, City Clerk, to verify, and I have spoken to neither one of them as to these facts.

I wish to correct an error which Alderman Johnston has apparently fallen into.

Yours truly,
G. N. GORDON.

HE DYED THE PEARL.

And Now Paris Dealers Are After the [illegible]

PARIS, June 20. — A commotion was caused among the pearl merchants in Paris to-day over a black pearl, the original commercial value of which was $1,500. This pearl has been manipulated by an expert, known as a pearl-dyer, and when he finished with it it looked like one worth about $30,000. It was then offered for sale through the ordinary channels, with the intimation that, owing to pressing need of ready money, the owner would accept $6,000 for it. A charge was then laid against the owner and pearl-dyer by the president of the Paris Syndical Chamber of Dealers in Precious Stones. This is now being considered by the judge. When the pearl-dyer was told of the charge he said he had improved the pearl by a special secret process invented by himself. He laughed at the idea of being charged. "Doctored pearls," he exclaimed. "Why, on the Paris market there are more than $100,000,000 worth of doctored pearls."

Would Girdle the Empire.

LONDON, June 20.—Sir Henniker Heaton has written to Postmaster-General Hobhouse, urging the appointment of an imperial postmaster-general.

Sir Henniker advocates that postmasters-general of colonies and the United States confer with the Imperial postmaster-general on the establishment of a uniform cable rate of one penny a word throughout the British Empire and the United States.

SOUTH PORCUPINE TRAGEDY.

James Knowles, well-Known Lawyer, and G. A. Veteran, Murdered.

COBALT, June 20.—Jas. Knowles, lawyer, of South Porcupine, a veteran campaigner in South Africa, was killed yesterday morning on the street of that town by Emil Lebrie, a Frenchman, who struck him over the head with a milk bottle. The blow fell upon a portion of the skull where a silver plate had been placed as a result of a wound received in battle, and concussion of the brain resulted in death. Lebrie was arrested. It is stated that the quarrel was over a trivial matter.

Knowles was one of the best known figures in the north country, although only there about a year. He was solicitor for Tisdale township, was 48 years of age, and single. He came from Saskatchewan, and was a brother of W. E. Knowles, M.P. for Moose Jaw, and of F. W. Knowles, of Guelph.

He was a participant in the Jameson raid in South Africa and took part in the war and had eleven bullet wounds in his body.

Rev. R. E. Knowles, pastor of Knox Church, Galt, and a novelist of note, is also a brother of the deceased.

Landslide In Italy.

NICE, France, June 20. — Twelve persons were killed and seven injured by a landslide yesterday in a tunnel of the new railway from Nice to Cuneo, Italy. It is feared that more people were buried beneath the debris.

A Bull's Eye.

If an advertiser could make every advertisement, and every word in it, do its best work for him, he would make a record and invariably hit the bull's eye. Perhaps such a score is not possible, but the rifle with which he shoots, may be the best possible, thus enhancing his chances for a perfect score.

The one best rifle, the nearest to perfect in advertising, is the newspaper. Others have been tried and are being tried by new and inexperienced advertisers; but as they watch results and grow in wisdom, they put their faith primarily in the newspaper. The example of these experienced ones is worth following.

Peace Nears End

"Death-bed" Gathering of the Mediators To-day.

U. S. NOTE AN ULTIMATUM

Mexican Delegates Stand Firm In Their Determination Not to Accede to a Constitutionalist as Provisional President of the Republic of Mexico—Arbitrator Naon Still Hopeful.

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., June 20. —An informal conference last evening between two of the A B C mediators and both American delegates served only to emphasize the apparent hopelessness of the Mexican peace negotiations. The pacification plan was discussed but the conversation was listless.

The papers that will sound the death-knell of the mediation movement are being prepared. Everybody concerned is of the opinion that the formal conference to-day, following the return to Niagara Falls of Argentine Minister Naon and one of the mediators, will be in the nature of a death-bed gathering.

The American delegates are standing firm on the declarations set forth in their note to the Mexican delegates, the contents of which were contained in the statement issued by them Thursday night. The Mexican delegates have not changed their determined refusal to consent to the proposal of Americans that a Constitutionalist be chosen as Provisional President.

It was pointed out that the words "we must insist" by the American delegates was intended to be an ultimatum. The Mexican delegates have refused to be influenced by them. The situation seems to spell disaster for the peace efforts. It is probable, however, that the break-up will not come until next week.

The report from Mexico City yesterday that Huerta would appoint Pedro Lascurain as Minister of Foreign Affairs seemed to furnish ground for hope that a peaceful settlement of Mexico's troubles was in sight, although the attitude of the Constitutionalists is such that the reinstatement of Lascurain would probably not change the situation.

Mediators Still Hopeful.

WASHINGTON, June 20. — Hope that the wavering mediation program still might bring peace to Mexico was expressed here late last night by Argentine Minister Naon when he left here for Niagara Falls after conferences with President Wilson and Secretary Bryan and Luis Calvar of the Washington agency of the Constitutionalists.

"I maintain hope for two reasons," he said, "First, I am in the position of knowing more than you and, secondly, I see no reason for changing my attitude."

GRAND TRUNK'S STRAIN.

Britain Gets Too Much of Magazine Revenue Says P. M. G.

OTTAWA, June 20. — Hon. L. P. Pelletier stated yesterday that he expected a satisfactory arrangement would be reached between the British and Canadian postoffice departments regarding the division of the revenue from the postage on magazines coming to Canada. In order to encourage the sale of British magazines in Canada a preferential rate is given such magazines. The same condition applies to Canadian magazines going to Britain.

Canada pays half the cost of this service, but as nearly all the magazines come from Great Britain to Canada and as each country collects the postage on the magazines sent from that country, Great Britain collects nearly all the revenue.

The Canadian Postmaster-General refuses to continue the arrangement, but from communications which he has received, he thinks that a satisfactory adjustment will be reached. He thinks that Canada will be allowed one cent a pound.

Will Demand Arbitration.

OTTAWA, June 20. — Before the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway exercises it's option of leasing the eastern division of the Transcontinental Railway, it will, according to intimations conveyed here, ask for a board of arbitration to determine what should and should not be figured in the total cost upon which the company must pay rental.

Twenty-Five Lawyers Sentenced.

ST. PETERSBURG, June 20.—The trial of 25 lawyers on a charge of insulting the Ministry of Justice during the trial of Mendel Beilliss ended yesterday in the conviction of all the defendants. Two, M. Sokoloff and M. Korsunki, were sentenced to eight months imprisonment and the others to terms of six months each.

Liner Zig-Zagged

So Say Pilot and Sailors on Board Collier Alden.

KENDALL GAINS SUPPORT

Statement of Captain of Empress of Ireland That Ship Was Struck Amidships Is Corroborated by Deckplate Found on Storstad —Alden's Sailors Back Up Testimony of Galway.

QUEBEC, June 20. — The alleged defective steering gear of the Empress of Ireland and the rapidity with which she went to the bottom of the St. Lawrence after being struck by the collier Storstad on May 29 formed the two most conspicuous details connected with the calamity enquired into yesterday by the Dominion Commission sitting in the court house here. On the first of these two points evidence was submitted by a number of sailors and Pilot Napoleon Lapierre, who were on the collier Alden, which was passed by the Empress around the time that she was said to be steering badly by James F. Galway, a quartermaster, who claimed Thursday that the liner's helm jammed for three minutes on the night of the disaster.

These witnesses all agreed that the Empress, as the pilot put it, zagzagged down the river, though they all had to confess that while still a good distance away she showed red to red in conformity with navigation laws, and passed more than a cable's length away. A discussion on the ownership of the Alden and the Storstad arose while this testimony was being put in, as both carried coal for the Dominion Coal Co., and it was found that they were chartered to this concern by different agents and do not belong to the same line.

C. S. Haight, acting for the Storstad owners, in the morning searched diligently in his cross-examination of George O'Donovan, the engineer who looked after the steering apparatus, for some fault in it, but beyond getting a popular description of a piece of intricate mechanism, he gained nothing to support the theory that the gear was unreliable.

Mr. Aspinall, the C. P. R. lawyer, seemed by his questions to men of the Alden, to suggest that the liner's alleged sheering was due to the fact that they had her straight ahead, and that any variation in the appearance of her lights was due to momentary influences of the current which were immediately corrected. It was obvious, too, that though the men said they were afraid of a collision, no attempt was made to slow up their boat.

On the bulkhead question the evidence showed that the water rushed into the liner in tremendous quantities, and in a few moments had reached within eight feet of the top of her watertight compartments. Lord Mersey said that a few days ago he had concluded that the ship had the two watertight compartments which she could float with, filled, opened up by the first blow of the nose of the collier, which had dragged away more of the Empress' starboard side when she fell back, and that, therefore, nothing could have saved the vessel.

A piece of small, but substantial evidence, corroborating the conclusion of Captain Kendall that his ship was struck amidships, will be put in as an exhibit to-day. It is a first-class cabin door with No. 328 on it, and was picked up on the Storstad. The only cabin of this number was on the starboard side of the ship near the first funnel, and some fifteen feet from the skin.

Late in the afternoon Jacob Saxe, the third officer of the Storstad, another eye-witness of the disaster, gave his evidence in chief, and his cross-examination by Mr. Aspinall is expected to form the most interesting phase of to-day's proceedings.

Pilot Napoleon Lapierre, who was on the Alden, said that she kept full speed, though he feared a collision with the Empress. He did not go slow because colliers did not like to be slowed down. They had to make good time to Montreal, and did not want to stop unless there was danger of running ashore.

PURE MILK FOR CITIES.

New Federal Aid Regulations Are Issued at Ottawa.

OTTAWA, June 20.—The new Government regulations according to which assistance will be given to cities and towns of not less than 5,000 persons to endeavor to ensure a pure and wholesome milk supply for their inhabitants and especially to prevent the sale of milk from tuberculous cows were issued yesterday.

Legislative authority must be secured by these cities and towns for the purpose of agreeing to the regulations. These cities and towns must undertake and provide that dairies which sell milk and cream shall be licensed; that no license shall be issued unless the dairy conforms to a required standard, the standard being an ample amount of air space in the stable, two square feet of window glass for each cow, and stable well ventilated, drained clean, and sanitary; that after two years from the date of the first test of the cattle the herd show a clean bill of health, from the veterinary inspector; and that inspectors shall be appointed by these cities and towns.

On receiving notice from a municipality that it desires assistance the Department of Agriculture will send a veterinarian to inspect the cows. Inspectors will use the tuberculine test. Cows found to be affected with open tuberculosis will be slaughtered. Reactors to the test and suspicious animals may be retained in the herd, but no milk or cream shall be sold until it has been pasteurized.

Compensation will be paid to the owners of slaughtered animals upon the following basis: One half the value of the cow if destroyed as a case of open tuberculosis, one-third if destroyed as a reactor at the request of the owner.

PETERBORO' LACROSSE CLUB DEFEATED HAVELOCK BY 5 GOALS TO 3 LAST NIGHT

Locals Won Interesting Battle on Wet and Slippery Field

4 TO 0 AT HALF TIME

Under most disagreeable weather conditions and on a field that was a severe handicap on fast play, the Peterborough Lacrosse team defeated Havelock in an intermediate O.A.L.A. game at Riverside Park yesterday by 5 goals to 3. The heavy rain earlier in the day had left the turf very slippery, and at the north end of the field the baseball diamond was a sea of mud, both teams losing good chances by slipping at critical moments. A cold northwest wind chilled players and spectators alike, while the weather materially affected the attendance.

Th Petes were always in front, leading at the end of the first quarter by 2 to 0, and at half time by 4 to 0. Havelock scored two goals in the third period, and each team counted one in the final period. A second or two after time was up the Petes found the nets again, but the score was not allowed.

In some respects it was an easy victory for the homesters. Although Havelock had a considerable portion of the play the local defence held them out in good style, and the villagers marred their chances by poor shooting. The Petes lost opportunities in the same way, but seemed to work in better than the boys from the east. The latter were game, however, and never let up for a moment. With a four goal defeat facing them when they opened the second half, they came right on and when they scored a couple of goals they were contenders until the end.

Fleming, in goal for the Petes, showed a rattling fine game, handling the Havelock shots coolly and accurately, and clearing well. In front of him Ed. Dillon, although handicapped with an injured knee, was a stone wall, breaking up attack after attack. Geo. Mein played his usual dashing and effective game on the defence, and Hardy, a new comer and a fine stick-handler, gave a good account of himself. Crough's long runs and effective checking relieved the pressure frequently. Halpin showed speed and aggressiveness, and Manion also played excellent lacrosse. McCoy, Robertson and Kelly were a tricky attack, and they made things interesting for Percy Lancaster, editor of the Havelock Standard, who played goal for the villagers. They buzzed a few by him and bounced a good many more off the editorial shins.

The Havelock team like the Petes, and a good many aggregations in this year of the rejuvenation of Canada's national pastime, was a mixture of veterans and youngsters. In the former class must be placed Goal-keeper Lancaster, and his right bower, the evergreen Harry Andrews, who played point. The editor and the pedagogue handled a good many shots effectively, in fact Andrews stopped one too effectively, taking the count when a fast one from Manion hit him on the head. Robson did nice work at cover, and Quinlan was good at centre. On the home Armstrong showed up particularly well, and O'Brien, the juvenile, who played outside, took the eye of the crowd. He was as busy as Inspector Snider in a Scott Act campaign, and handled his stick nicely, although his shooting was very wild.

Frank Doyle, secretary of the O.A.L.A., clad in the dignity of his position and in a pair of immaculate white ducks, with top dressing, of course, refereed the game. He was strict and the Petes suffered the most from a penalty standpoint.

The line-ups were:

Peterborough.		Havelock.
	Goal.
Fleming		Lancaster
	Point.
Dillon		Andrews
	Cover.
Hardy		Robson
	1st Defence.
Mein		Pacey
	2nd Defence.
Crough		Rose
	Centre.
Halpin		Quinlan
	2nd Home.
Manion		Armstrong
	1st Home.
Robertson		Paquet
	Outside Home.
McCoy		O'Brien
	Inside Home.
Kelly		Ferguson

Play was fairly even at the go-in, with both teams missing good opportunities. Then the Petes got going and after a neat combination attack, McCoy batted the first goal through from a scrimmage. Shortly afterwards, Robertson dashed in and beat Lancaster with a pretty shot from the side.

The Petes did all the scoring in the second quarter. Halpin scored goal No. 3 after a long run and a shot from well out, and Kelly made it 4 to 0 when he took a pass close in and easily scored.

In the third period Ferguson scored for Havelock on a shot that glanced off one of the Petes into the nets, giving Fleming no chance to save. Soon after O'Brien added another on a good shot.

In the last period Manion fooled Lancaster on a good shot from well out and Armstrong scored Havelock's last, leaving the final count 5 to 3

Petes Batting and Pitching Averages Up to Date

The batting averages of the Petes up to date show Catcher Kelly out in front with .325, and Outfielder Dad Stewart only a point behind. Kelly gained 18 points in the one game he played since the last averages were published, and Stewart tacked a 24-point again unto his figures. Welsh dropped from .351 to .307, owing to a slump early in the week, but he quickly recovered his batting eye and has been stinging the ball hard. In addition to Kelly and Stewart, Byrne, King, Blount, Tracey and Sterling all gained through the week. Blount has scored twenty-three runs and is well out in front in that department.

HINDUS IN CONTROL.

Crew of Komagata Maru Cannot Get Up Steam.

OTTAWA, June 20.—Advices yesterday to the Department of the Interior indicate little change in the situation at the coast where the party of 400 Hindus are demanding admission through the immigration gates.

Some development is looked for today, when the Japanese cruisers arrive, presumably to look after the welfare of the Komagata Maru, the Japanese ship which has the Hindus on board. The difficulty appears to be to get up steam on the transport ship in view of the threatening attitude of the Sikhs.

If the vessel is able to get to the three-mile limit, she will be out of Canadian jurisdiction and may be escorted across the Pacific by the cruisers.

Petes Will Be Home With Brants Monday Will Get Big Reception

The Petes, after a most successful road trip, will return to Riverside Park on Monday and will open a series with the Brants. That the home brigade will get a warm reception and be greeted by big crowds on this stay at home is evident from the enthusiasm which has greeted their five wins on the present trip. The Petes have been looking like a new team during the past two weeks and have been going at a clip that should send them up the Canadian League ladder. They have developed a faculty for coming from behind, performing the stunt during their last three victories. Rain prevented a game in Brantford yesterday, but the teams will play a double header to-day, with Belting, Cresswell or Stark the Petes' pitching selections. Fans should remember that Monday's game ad all next week's games except Saturday, will commence at 4.15 o'clock.

RELATION OF PULPIT TO PARTY POLITICS

There are some people who, we believe, are honestly not very clear as to the propriety of a clergyman discussing a question in the pulpit that has become an issue between two political parties and about which there are some differences of opinion in every congregation. To those people we would address a few words.

No one seriously questions the right of a minister to discuss the subject of temperance in the abstract in the pulpit or anywhere else. All are agreed upon this.

All the Churches have clearly seen that preaching temperance in the abstract on Sunday with concrete bars undoing their work the other six days of the week was about as foolish and ineffectual as texts of Scripture addressed to a wolf intent upon the capture of a lamb.

The clergy of all denominations have discovered that the greatest enemy of their work, as of society in general, was the organized and licensed liquor traffic. Moral suasion and the educational method have been tried from the time of Solomon down, but the same tale of ruin and desolation is repeated to-day as was the case when the great Hebrew seer uttered his solemn warning about the wine and the adder's sting. The modern situation is vastly worse because the powerful distilled liquors are a comparatively recent discovery.

Moral suasion grievously failed, and the churches, as the result of centuries of chastened experience, have now pretty unanimously reached the conclusion that the only way to arrest the spread of the evil is total prohibition.

Years ago pressure was applied to the then Liberal Government of Ontario, and the Local Option law was passed. This partial measure of prohibition was not accepted by the Churches as a finality, but as the best thing obtainable at the time. It marked progress.

Then, in 1909, a union convention of the Churches asked for the abolition of the bar and drinking in clubs. No party was willing to assume the responsibility for such a revolutionary measure until Mr. Rowell became the leader of the Liberal party in Ontario. He took the Churches at their word, and "Abolish the bar" became one of the planks of the Liberal platform.

Now the question arises, are the ministers and layman who urged upon Mr. Rowell and his predecessors the adoption of his course, to sit back and do nothing? Are they to leave Rowell to fight alone the battle of the Churches, and are they to forsake him in the midst of the contest that they have been instrumental in thrusting upon him?

"Abolish the Bar" is not a political but a moral issue. Or, rather, it is political only that it must be in politics sufficiently to pass the Legislature.

It is in "politics" only because Sir James Whitney has three times refused to take it out of politics by passing a measure in agreement with the Liberal leader giving the temperance people what they desired.

It therefore again comes back to the question of whether the Churches shall strive with all their power to secure what they have unitedly been demanding for more than a decade. We do not honestly see how they can refuse without proclaiming themselves sanctified shams, animated neither by sincerity nor consistency.

If a clergyman were to advocate the election of Rowell because of his attitude toward Tax Reform it would be a different matter, for Tax Reform, however important, generally speaking, is no especial concern of the churches.

But "abolish the bar" is the business of every Church and Minister who supported such a movement.

We hold it is not only proper but their express duty to advocate this cause both in the pulpit and outside. This course means sincerity and consistency. This is not politics but good faith.

We hear that the Church is becoming "priest-ridden." This is not the case. There are no threats of eternal torment. There are merely appeals to the reason and to reasonable men to be fair, to be honest with themselves, and faithful to the cause they have espoused.

In adopting this course, as many have already done, they will unloose the flood gates of vituperation and abuse. It will require men of courage and faith and strong moral fibre to do their full duty and stand the test.—Belleville Ontario.

Notice is hereby given that a Quarterly Dividend for the three (3) months ending June 30th at the rate of ten per cent. (10 per cent.) per annum has been declared upon the Capital Stock of this institution, and the same will be payable at the Offices of the Company in this city on and after July 2nd, 1914.

The transfer books will be closed from June 20th to 30th, both days inclusive.

HAS ACUTE ILLNESS.

F. Augustus Heinze Takes To His Bed During Copper Probe.

NEW YORK, June 20.—F. Augustus Heinze, one-time "copper king," is very ill in his residence, 1 West Thirtieth street. Two physicians yesterday reported it would not be advisable to disturb him to take testimony for use in the Supreme Court.

His counsel, William Travers Jerome, told Justice Erlanger Heinze was dying, and pleaded with the court to visit the Heinze residence and take his deposition. Justice Erlanger, however, sent Dr. George A. McDonald and Dr. Robert C. Kemp to examine Heinze. They reported that he was suffering from liver and stomach complaints, and has frequent hemorrhages, but probably will recover.

AN OLD TESTAMENT ODDFELLOW

EXAMINER FINDS GOLD.

Thursday night's Examiner advertised for a lost gold purse. It was lost down the river somewhere.

Friday morning Mr. N. C. Cameron, local secretary of the Retail Merchants' Association stepped into the office to advertise the purse found.

Another case of The Examiner finding almost impossible things and bringing loser and finder together.

WERE WELL PLEASED.

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—On behalf of the members of the choir of the Murray Street Baptist Church, I am requested to publicly thank the captain and crew of the steamer Manita for the kindness and courtesy shown the choir on their excursion to Gore's Landing and return on Thursday last. The steamer is an ideal craft for pleasure, while the crew were most obliging and courteous. The run from Rice Lake to Peterborough on the return trip was made in about two hours, the trim little steamer travelling her natural gait all the way.

Yours truly,
F. W. MILLER,
R. J. KIDD.

NEW BY-LAW TO BE RESCINDED

by-law was a good one, yet it was having the effect of driving the farmers away from the local Market, and should therefore be rescinded.

Their suggestion was acted upon on the motion of Alds. Stratton and McIntyre.

On the motion of Alds. Duncan and Stratton, it was decided to accede to the request of the Merchants' Association to pave a strip inside the present market sidewalk and cover it for protection from rain, etc., to the extent of procuring an estimate of the cost.

The City Clerk was instructed to ask the City Solicitor if men, other than producers, could be stopped from selling on the Market.

On the motion of Alds. Stratton and Duncan it was decided that the Committee would recommend to the Council that the large buyers and dealers be allowed to buy on the Market after 9 o'clock each morning.

BILLED FOR $100.

A letter was received from W. S. Hare the contractor for garbage collecton, enclosing a bill for $100 for 364 loads of ashes he had not been allowed to unload at Goose Pond, and which he had been forced to take elsewhere.

The matter was left over for consideration at the next meeting.

Churchianity is gradually giving place to Christianity, and possibly extremely narrow party men may have developed into broader and better men. Whether they have or not will be revealed on the 28th.

Intelligent people are tired of the license system. It is not founded upon any right principle, and it practically makes the state a partner in the whiskey business. The fee is so small when compared with the cost of the traffic to the state that this is simply a farcical financial transaction.

The "Review" asks what else will the Liberals do besides banishing the bar. Considering the necessarily slow progress of most of our legislation (excepting, of course, a little bill that went through lately re Ferguson), the Liberals will have done a big work if they banish the bar in one session.

The speakers at Mr. Boden's meeting praised the Whitney policy, and then denounced Rowell for not abolishing the shops. I am so dull that this appeared to me like saying, here are three evils. Whitney says let them alone. I will not abolish any of them. This is lovely, beautiful and perfectly splendiferous! Rowell says, I will immediately abolish two of them, and a little later will let the people wipe out the third. Oh the bad man! How wicked of him not to do more! But doubtless I am all wrong and they were only using certain words and phrases to conceal their thoughts.

Mr. Soden does not claim to be an ordinary temperance man like Rowell or Gillespie, whom he considers are not sufficiently "advanced." But he claims to be an extraordinary temperance man. And there are those who believe that he is. It would not be right at the present time for us to send a representative to Toronto to support a government that is leaning on the bar.

Clearly the duty of the hour is to vote for Gillespie and strong drink—the drink of lions.

J. C. SMITH.

MANY WIDOWS AND FATHERLESS CHILDREN IN HILLCREST NOW

Funeral of Over 150 Miners—Scarcely a Home Escaped the Disaster in Some Way or Other

GENERAL MANAGER'S WORK

HILLCREST, Alta., June 22—Two days after the explosion which killed nearly 200 miners, the "white man's camp," as Hillcrest collieries is termed, is beginning to breathe more freely, and at the same time to realize fully the extent of the calamity. Taking stock of the catastrophe, the little town finds itself with several scores of widows and hundreds of fatherless children. There is scarcely a home that is not affected by the calamity, while the mining camps in close proximity to Hillcrest count among the dead some of their numbers.

Almost directly under Turtle Mountain, the natural graveyard of victims of the Frank slide of a few years ago, was enacted yesterday afternoon the last scene of the Hillcrest disaster. Over 150 bodies were buried while around stood widows and children.

The funeral was an impressive one. In the valley where the graves counted perhaps less than two score on Saturday, to-day the number is augmented to as many hundreds, and there are more to come within the next few days. Other bodies are being prepared and it is feared that several found resting places beneath the tons of earth and rock in the bowels of the earth. Two bodies at least are known to be thus hopelessly buried.

The stories of the survivors now that the tensity of the situation is relieved, are related more coherently.

But for the severing of the fan supplying fresh air to the depth below perhaps some of the forty who were saved would never have come out alive. In this General Manager Brown of the Hillcrest collieries was the hero of the hour. Realizing the perilous position of the inmates of the mine when the explosion occurred, it was his first thought that survivors would make their escape by means of the slope to mine No. 2. Knowing the plan of the mine, he immediately made a rush to the mechanism controlling the interior fan and quickly reversed.

"When I felt that whiff of fresh air, I knew I was saved," is the statement of several survivors. They were ready to fall in their rush to safety, and but for that moment of time and that whiff of fresh air, the stories from the interior would have been eliminated altogether from the history of the greatest mining disaster that ever occurred in the Dominion, and 44 additional lives would have been added to the already large list.

There are still a score of bodies in the mine. Hope has been completely abandoned that any spark of life remains, for while the interior fires have been extinguished, no human being could exist for any length of time in the gas-impregnated atmosphere.

In one short street of the town there are 13 widows, a result of the explosion. Some of these have lost husband and sons upon whom they depended solely for existence. The street, which is a short one, contains but 36 houses, and had been named "Peaceful Alley."

Rasmussen For Pole.

COPENHAGEN, June 22.—Ole Olsen, a Danish millionaire, Saturday undertook to finance a new North Pole expedition under the command of Knud Rasmussen, the Danish Arctic explorer. The expedition probably will start for the north next summer and will be provisioned for two years. All possible modern appliances are to be provided and Rasmussen is to have a staff of scientists with him. He will establish his base at Cape York, Greenland.

Boy Dead After Auto Accident.

TORONTO, June 22.—Leslie Martin, aged 10, of 772 Lansdowne avenue, who was run down on Lansdowne avenue on Thursday night by a motor car driven by Kenneth G. Sinclair of 209 George street, died at the Western Hospital on Saturday as a result of his injuries. The body was removed to the morgue, where Coroner Morgan opened an inquest on Saturday night.

LION TAMER EATEN.

Young College Man Is Killed and Devoured by Animals.

CHICAGO, June 22.—Emerson D. Dietrich, 26, a graduate of Cornell University, was torn to shreds and practically eaten alive last night by five or six lions, whose cage he had entered for the purpose of feeding them.

There were ten lions in the freight car, located on a side track at Sixteenth street and Indiana avenue, in the heart of the city. During the excitement thousands of people were thrown into a panic by the information that some of the lions had escaped and were being pursued by rifle squads from all nearby police stations and the Union Stock Yards.

The ten lions are the property of Mme. Adaine Castillo, who is to open an engagement in a local theatre in July. Keeper McCord, who witnessed the tragedy, said:

"Dietrich went into the den, where six big lions are kept, and I followed him. 'Teddy,' the leader in the attack upon Dietrich, started to play with him, and Dietrich ordered the beast to lie down. Four of the lions were facing him at the time, including 'Teddy.' Almost immediately 'Teddy' slunk around behind Dietrich and in a second was on his back, tearing him and clawing him frightfully. The others then joined in the attack; and what followed was awful—awful."

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

Thomas Wright, of 560 Bathurst street, London, the Grand Trunk employe who was injured on Thursday with a crow-bar, died yesterday.

James Howard, 171 Oak avenue, Hamilton, committed suicide by shooting himself with a shotgun early Sunday morning near his summer residence at Burlington Beach.

Sir Edward Carson says that if the amending bill simply repeats the Government's offer of the optional exclusion of Ulster from Home Rule for six years he will have nothing to do with it.

The lion of the hour in Paris just now is Mr. Mark Klaw, the American theatre magnate, who has been fortunate enough to break the bank at Monte Carlo. His winnings amounted to 750,000.

Mrs. John Noble of London, Ont., who was severely burned last Sunday night when an oil lamp she was carrying exploded on her being seized with an epileptic fit, died in Victoria Hospital last night.

Rev. C. Sinclair Applegath last evening in the Lincoln Avenue Methodist Church, preached his farewell sermon, having accepted the pastorate of the Methodist Church at Islington, near Toronto.

Hundreds of French-Canadians gathered yesterday to observe the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of Societe St. Jean Baptist of Springfield, Mass., the second oldest French society in the U. S.

A petition with 20,000 names praying that Jack Krafchenko's sentence of death be commuted to imprisonment for life was forwarded from Winnipeg to the Department of Justice at Ottawa on Saturday.

A Three-times Derby Winner.—This picture of Lord Rosebery, who is with the Hon. T. Agar-Robartes, was taken on Epsom Downs, England, last week. Lord Rosebery appropriately enough is entitled to call himself Baron Epsom of Epsom. He has won the Derby three times—with Ladas, in 1894; Sir Visto in 1895, and Cicero in 1905. Lord Rosebery has been ill for some time, but is now recovering nicely from his indisposition.

HECKLERS DUCKED

Crowd at Lloyd-George Meeting Punish Disturbers

WOMEN ARE CHASED AWAY

LONDON, June 22.—A nearby artificial lake gave a big crowd a unique opportunity to vent their wrath on suffragist interrupters of David Lloyd George, Chancellor of the Exchequer, who spoke at Denmark Hill, in the south of London, but chivalrous discrimination was employed as between the men and women disturbers, the women being chased off the grounds and the men being ducked in the lake.

The Rt. Hon. Thomas J. MacNamara, a Radical member of the House of Commons, who presided, appealed to the assembled multitude to leave it entirely to the stewards to deal with the disturbers, but the request was disregarded. The man who fared worst was a clergyman, said to be a member of Sylvia Pankhurst's east end army.

Undeterred by the fate that had befallen other disturbers, he demanded in stentorian tones to know why the Government had not given votes to women. His clerical garb seemed to produce the effect on the crowd that a red flag does on a mad bull. They rushed and carried him off his feet and pitched him headlong into the lake, from which, after frequent complete immersions, he was rescued in a half-drowned condition by a man in a boat.

During the course of his address, the Chancellor made it clear that the amending bill, which will be introduced in the House of Lords to-morrow, simply will repeat the Government's original offer of temporary exclusion from the Home Rule Bill of such counties in Ulster as vote for exclusion.

New Big Gun Record.

LONDON, June 22.—A new record with a 9.2-in. gun, the heaviest in England's coast defence, has been made by the men of the Royal Garrison Artillery, under Col. Hibbyn, in the Western Forts, Isle of Wight. They made nine hits with ten rounds at a range of nearly 8,000 yards.

Not Opposed to Militancy.

LONDON, June 22—The East London Federation of Suffragettes, of which the deputation which visited Mr. Asquith are members, repudiated Saturday night the Premier's assumption that they are opposed to militancy. The federation adopted resolutions declaring that the organization carried on its militant fight for the vote in its own way, and explaining that Sylvia Pankhurst did not accompany the deputation simply because she was too ill to go.

R. N. W. M. P. For Far North.

REGINA, Sask., June 22. — Inspector Beyts of headquarters, Royal Northwest Mounted Police, left here Saturday evening for Chesterfield Inlet, where he has been ordered to establish a new northern detachment. Accompanying him are Sergt. Caulkin, Constables Pasley and Kennedy. They go to Ottawa, thence to Halifax, where a steamer has been chartered for them. They take three years' provisions, and one of their chief duties while in the hinterland will be to trace murderers.

Only Two Lost in Wreck.

ST. LOUIS, June 22.—Thirty-three persons were on board the excursion steamer Majestic when it sank in the Mississippi river near here early Saturday, and of these two were unaccounted for, a watchman and a deck hand. The others either swam ashore, were taken off in lifeboats, of which the steamer carried six, or found safety on the upper deck, which remained above water.

More Protection For Fish.

OTTAWA, June 22.—The special fishery regulations for Ontario have been amended so that the sale and export of black bass, maskinonge and speckled trout are prohibited, except that any person from a foreign country, who has secured an angler's permit, can take with him the lawful catch of two days' fishing upon leaving the province.

URIC ACID SUFFERING

Uric acid is an accumulation of poison which finds lodgment in the system when the kidneys fail to remove it from the blood. In the kidneys and bladder it forms stones, in the joints and muscles it causes rheumatism. In any case the pain and suffering is almost beyond human endurance. Uric acid is promptly removed from the system when the kidneys are kept healthy and active by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills

LONDON, June 22. — The list of the King's birthday honors has been issued by the Colonial Office. The King has been pleased to give directions for the following promotions in and appointments to the most distinguished order of Saint Michael and Saint George:

To be G. C. M. G.: Rt. Hon. Robert Laird Borden, Rt. Hon. Earl of Liverpool, K.C.M.G., M.V.O., governor and commander in chief of the Dominion of New Zealand.

K. C. M. G.: Walter Davidson, governor of Newfoundland; Rt. Hon. George Eulas Foster, Minister of Trade and Commerce of Canada; William Bell Irving, Attorney-General of the Commonwealth of Australia; Hon. Charles Eugene de Boucherville.

C. M. G.: William Kirkpatrick McNaught, Ontario.

Knights Bachelor: James Albert Manning Aikins, K.C., Canadian House of Commons; Hon. Adam Beck, Minister without portfolio, Province of Ontario; Thomas George Roddick, Montreal.

Among the Knights Bachelor named is Douglas Mawson, the explorer.

The list includes a large number of barons and baronets, but there are a few notable names in it. Lord Kitchener of Khartoum, His Majesty's agent and consul-general in Egypt, is made an earl. Sir Herbert Cesens-Hardy, Sir Edgar Vincent, Maj.-Gen. John Fielden Brocklehurst and Sir Leonard Lyell are raised to barons. Among the baronets is Albert H. Stanley, manager of the London underground railways, who is English born, but raised in the United States. Mr. Stanley came to London from Detroit and assumed his British citizenship last year. For a number of years he was connected with the Detroit United Railways and the Public Service Railways of New Jersey.

Other baronets named are Sir Joseph Beecham, the manufacturer and philanthropist; Georg Henschel, the composer, and Sir T. Vansittart Bowater, Lord Mayor of London.

Sir Robert Laird Borden became Premier of Canada in September, 1911, after leading the Conservative Opposition in the Commons at Ottawa for over ten years. He was born at Grand Pre, N.S., June 26, 1854, and is the eldest surviving son of the late Andrew Borden. His family were among the first settlers in Nova Scotia. He was educated at Acacia Villa Academy, Horton, and began the study of law, in 1874. He was called to the Bar in 1878, and in 1889 he was married to Laura, youngest daughter of the late T. H. Bond of Halifax. In 1896 he was elected to the Commons for Halifax, which he represented till his defeat in the general election of 1904. He was then found a seat in Carleton County, Ont. He won the Halifax city and county seat again in 1908 and in 1911.

Sir George Eulas Foster has seen many years' service in the Canadian Parliament. He was first elected to the Commons from Kings County, N.B., in 1882, and, except for a brief interval after 1896, has been in Parliament ever since. He was born in New Brunswick on Sept. 3, 1847, of United Empire Loyalist descent, and was educated at the University of New Brunswick, Edinburgh University, and Heidelberg, Germany, and later became professor of classics in the University of New Brunswick in 1872. He made his debut as a public speaker as a temperance lecturer and from that went into politics. In 1885 he became Minister of Marine in the Government of Sir John Macdonald, and the next year shifted to the Finance Ministership. This portfolio he retained under the Premierships of Sir John Thompson, Sir John Abbott, Sir Mackenzie Bowell and Sir Charles Tupper. Sir George in politics has been an Imperialist, and an advocate of preferential trade within the Empire. When the Conservative party was returned to power in 1911 Sir George Foster became Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Sir Charles Eugene Boucher de Boucherville of Boucherville, P.Q., was Premier of Quebec in 1874 and 1891. He was born on May 4, 1822, and was educated at St. Sulpice College, Montreal, and at Paris, France, where he graduated M.D. in 1843. He is descended from Lieut.-General Pierre Boucher, Sieur de Grosbois, who became governor of Three Rivers in 1661, and was also grand constable of New France. He was made C.M.G. in 1884.

William Kirkpatrick McNaught, C.M.G., has sat in the Ontario Legislature as Conservative member for North Toronto, and has been one of the Hydro-Electric Commission, but was recently defeated for the nomination in Northeast Toronto. He entered public life as a member of the directorate of the Canadian National Exhibition, rising to the office of president.

Sir Adam Beck has been chiefly concerned in the campaign for Hydro-electric power, which he began in 05. As a result of his efforts power is distributed under public control from Niagara Falls to many municipalities in Western Ontario at the cost of production and transmission. Sir Adam Beck is also noted for his interest in horse-breeding. He was born at Baden, Ont., June 30, 1857, and in 1898 was married to Lillian, daughter of the late C. J. Ottaway. He was mayor of London, Ont., in 1902, 1903 and 1904. He is a manufacturer with factories in London and Montreal.

Sir James Albert Manning Aikins of Winnipeg, represents Brandon, Man., in the House of Commons. He was recently elected president of the Canadian Bar Association, of which he was one of the founders. He was born in Peel County, Ont., on Dec. 10, 1851, of Irish-Canadian parentage. His father, Hon. James Cox Aikins, was appointed a Senator at Confederation and Secretary of State in the administration of Sir John A. Macdonald, in 1883. Sir James was educated at Upper Canada College and the University of Toronto. He is honorary colonel of the 90th Winnipeg Rifles. He has acted in several important capacities for the Dominion Government in the west, and for many years was honorary treasurer of the Manitoba Law Society. He has been a solicitor for the C.P.R. in Winnipeg from its entry there till he resigned to contest Brandon in the Conservative interest in 1911.

Sir Thomas George Roddick, M.D., C.M., was born at Harbor Grace, Newfoundland, in 1846. He went to Montreal in 1864 and after graduation in medicine at McGill was for six years surgeon of Montreal General Hospital. After holding various offices at McGill he became dean of the faculty of medicine in 1901 and resigned in 1908 to accept the governorship of of McGill University. He was elected to the House of Commons for St. Antoine division of Montreal in 1896 and 1900 as a Conservative. He organized the hospital and ambulance service during the Northwest Rebellion of 1885, and is prime mover in organizing the Medical Council of Canada, of which he is now honorary president.

"THE TERMS OF SURRENDER"

By Louis Tracy

"Derry!" he repeated blankly. "How have you found out that those I once held dear called me 'Derry'?"

She forced herself to speak calmly; though her hands were clenched, in sheer physical effort to quell the riot in heart and brain.

"I am not as other women," she said," "so I say shamelessly that I loved you practically from the hour we first met. Do you remember? You looked at me, and then turned your eyes away resolutely, lest you should hurt my feelings by seeming to gaze at my scarred features. I knew that night that you were a man scourged by the wrath of Heaven, and my sympathies went out to you; for in my own small way, I realized what you felt. But your affliction was of the spirit, and mine of the flesh, and I could afford to laugh at my malaise except—except on an occasion like this, when a man says he wants to marry me, but says nothing of love. No, please! Hear me out. I am really answering your question, in a woman's way, perhaps, but candidly, with the frankness that should blight romance. When we parted at Valparaiso, my thoughts dwelt with you. You are the one man I have ever cared for, in that way. During these weary years I have hugged the delusion that some day you would tell me that you loved me. Well, I admit that love was implied when you spoke of marriage; but you have often been annoyed or amused by my distorted method of looking at things, and you should not resent it now when it happens to describe the situation exactly—because you yourself almost began by saying that you wished we had met before another woman came into your life. Yes, I know—at any rate, I can guess—why you were buried alive for seven years. My action may sound contemptible; but a woman in love does not stop to weigh nicetties of behaviour. When I could get no news of you by other means, I wrote to a school friend at Denver. Among the people she met when making inquiries were a Dr. Stearn and a Mr. Benson. They did not tell her much; but feminine gossip is far-reaching, and sometimes it probes deeply. I know you loved Nancy Willard. I know how you blamed yourself for the death of your mother. I know that your friends thought you were mad, but pitied you, because yours was a grievous plight. You see now how I peeped and pried into your life. Oh! it was mean and despicable of me. It is not for you to plead and make excuse. That is my wretched task. Is it any sort of vindication to tell you that my heart ached because of that far-away look ever in your eyes while we voyaged south? You have not forgotten that I said you resembled a man walking in his sleep? Well, I wanted to find out what sort of folly or suffering had induced that trance. My poor heart sang with joy when you stepped ashore at Carmen, and I saw that your obsession had gone, that you had come to life again, that no pale spectres stood between us. Now you have heard my confession, it is for you to take time—before—you commit yourself—to vows—which you may regret."

It was as much as she could do to utter those concluding words. The tears she might not repress were stealing silently down her cheeks, and small, dark patches showed where the tightly drawn veil touched the corners of her mouth. The hotel porch was visible between two clumps of tropical shrubbery, and, when a mule-drawn street car moved out of the way, Power saw Sinclair's tall, thin figure standing in the doorway. Evidently, his glance was searching the gardens for the missing pair, and the departure of the tram rendered them visible. He raised a hand, and opened and closed it twice. Power waved comprehension, and Sinclair vanished. Perhaps he had a shrewd notion of the subject of their talk, and was minded not to disturb them till the last moment.

"I take it your father means that we still have ten minutes at our disposal," said Power.

The girl nodded. If she spoke then, she would have screamed.

"You have relieved me of a highly disagreeable task," he went on composedly. "Of course, I accept none of the unkind and unjust strictures you passed on yourself. This has been a strange wooing; but it is the best apology for the real thing I can contrive in the conditions. Some day, soon, I shall take you in my arms and tell you that I love you. When that day dawns, I shall be hindered by no ghosts; none other, that is, than a lurking fear lest such a wreck of a man may not be deemed worthy of the pure, sweet love of a woman like you. Good God! Can it be possible that so great a happiness is entering into my broken life?"

Then the delirium of joy vanquished the girl's fears, and she contrived to say, haltingly:

"Derry, do you really care for me? Do you think that such a poor scarecrow as I can make you forget all that you have endured?"

He laughed, and the blithe ring of his mirth was so eloquent of his real feelings that the blood raced in her veins like quicksilver.

"We must begin by refusing to call each other hard names," he cried. "In truth, I regard myself as a tolerably compact wreck, while 'scarecrow,' as applied to you, would make a cat laugh. Suppose we stick to 'Derry' and 'Meg' until the wonder passes, and we venture among those endearing terms in which our language is so rich. But, if you must have my opinion about your face—if you won't be happy till you get it—I want to tell you now that before I kiss your lips I shall kiss that dear, scarred cheek, because I know well that, by God's providence, when the Indians thrust you into the flames of your ranch, a mark was set on you that reserved you for me. Were it not for that, you could never have waited for me during the long years we travelled together on the Panama. Why Meg, there is no woman to compare with you in all this great city! But look here! Confound my impudence! Man-like, I blandly ignore my own defects. How about my limp?"

"Derry, in my eyes, there is no man in all the world to compare with you."

"Then we are profoundly satisfied with one another, and I really don't see what we have to bother about otherwise. I am now going to tell your father that we have arranged to be married as soon as I arrive in England, which will not be more than two months from this day. I think he likes me, and will endure me as a son-in-law. If I obeyed my own impulses, I should not leave you again. I suppose that common sense urges me to visit New York and Colorado, just to look into my business affairs. In fact, in view of our marriage, I simply must go there. But I shall hurry, never fear. Come along, Meg. I'm wide awake now. You have exorcised the evil spirit that possessed me; but I shall be in a new fever till next we meet, and there is no more parting in this life."

Thus was love reborn in Power's heart. The pity of it was that he did not yield to the tiny god's ardent whispers, and refuse to relinquish his chosen bride, even for a brief space. But, as he said, common sense demanded his presence in America, and common sense has shattered many dreams.

CHAPTER XVI.
POWER DRIVEN INTO WILDERNESS.

Power arrived at New York in midwinter. He found that crowded hive humming, as usual, with life and its activities, but in a new and perplexing way. The Waldorf Hotel had become the Waldorf-Astoria, and, while doubling its name, had increased fourfold in size. Its main corridor had the bustle and crush of a busy street; but every face had an aspect of aloofness, almost of hostility. The old, intimate life of America had vanished. None paid heed to the newcomer. The spick-and-span occupants of the reception bureau evidently regarded him as Room Number So-and-so. Confused and mystified by the well-dressed throng of the hotel's patrons, he failed to notice, at first, that it was composed of individuals, or groups, as unknown to one another as he was to the mass; that, in very truth, it was ". . . no other than a moving row

Of Magic Shadow-shapes that come and go."

He reached the hotel early in the evening, and was fortunate in being able to secure a suite of rooms. Soon wearing of the traffic in that world's fair which caustic New York has nicknamed "Rubberneck Alley," he bought a newspaper, and retired to his apartments. But the day's record held no interest for him. He knew little of the men and women who figured therein; even less of the events which called for big type and immense headlines.

But his eye was caught by an announcement of a performance that night of Gounod's "Faust" at the Metropoitan Opera House. He resolved to go there, never dreaming that the odds were hundreds to one against the chance of obtaining a seat; for New York had just entered the lists against the other capitals of the world and was determined to capture the leading place in the grand opera tourney.

He telephoned the office, "Kindly get me a stall for the Metropolitan this evening."

And, behold!! a blase clerk was actually stirred out of boredom by the surprising statement received from the box office that a stall had just been returned, and he could have it now if he chose at once. So Power never knew what a trick Fortune had played him, since there can be little doubt that the impression made by the marvellous music and extraordinarily human appeal of "Faust" insensibly prepared him for the tragic events of the coming day. Imagine a man of musical bent, who had dwelt seven years among veritable savages, renewing his acquaintance with the muses by hearing the most poignant of stage love-stories told in Gounod's impassioned strains and interpreted by famous singers and a superb orchestra!

The exquisite tenderness of the doomed lover's first address to Marguerite thrilled his inmost being.

"Ne permettrez-vous pas, ma belle demoiselle, Qu'en vous offre le bras, pour faire le chemin?"

He was struck by the coincidence that the woman to whom he was pledged should be named Marguerite! Faire le chemin! Yes, they would soon be taking the long road of life together. What assured happiness seemed to breathe from each perfect note; yet what horror and despair would be the outcome of the man's ardour and the maid's shy diffidence! When Marguerite told Faust that she was ni demoiselle, ni belle, Power could hardly fail to recollect that his own Marguerite, not without cruel cause, was ever tortured by the fear that her disfigurement might some day turn him from her with loathing. Even the slaying of Valentine as the direct outcome of his sister's frailty, seemed, to the overwrought imagination of one member of the audience, to bear an uncanny analogy to his mother's death. There remained one other point of contact between the story of the opera and Power's own life; but, fortunately for him, or his surcharged emotions might not have withstood the strain, he could not recognise as yet that last and most terrible similarity.

As it was, his rapt interest in the opera attracted the attention of his neighbours in the stalls. As a girl whispered to her attendant cavalier:

"That man near us—the man with the piercing eyes and worn face—seems to regard 'Faust' as history rather than allegory."

"Perhaps he sees the allegory," was the answer, and the girl shrugged her pretty shoulders. She was young, and dwelt in a sheltered garden. To her, "Faust" was only an opera. It had nothing to do with the realities of life; which, if she were asked for a definition, consisted mainly of so ordering one's time to miss no important social function.

Next morning, though aware of a nervous system still in a curious state of exaltation, and strain after his overnight experiences, Power yielded quickly to the stimulating effect of the keen, cold air and bright sunshine of a typical winter's day on the North Atlantic seaboard. After breakfast he walked to his bank, and was received as one risen from the dead. Financial institutions, even the soundest and most conservative, have a special flair for clients who allow vast sums of money to accumulate, year by year, at rates of interest which suit the bank's own purposes.

When Power had been welcomed heartily by the manager—his friend of former days, now promoted—the latter said cheerfully:

DEAD IN ADAM, ALIVE IN CHRIST

Our First Parents Were Created Perfect.

PASTOR RUSSELL ON THE SEA

All God's Work Is Perfect—Adam Alone Tried For Life or Death—Adam's Family Born In a Dying Condition — Difference Between Permitting Sin and Causing Sin —Human Depravity a Test to the Angels—The Purpose of Israel's Law Covenant—The Purpose of Jesus' Death—The Church Alive In Christ—In Training For the Work of the Next Age.

[The matter under this heading is supplied by the Pastor Russell Lecture Bureau, who conduct the Brooklyn Tabernacle (unsectarian) Bible Studies, and who have arranged for its insertion.]

Pastor Russell is on the Atlantic homeward bound. While abroad the Pastor also lectured in many cities, and was the principal speaker at a General Convention of the International Bible Students Association held in the British Metropolis. Today the Pastor's text was, "Even when we were dead in sins, God hath quickened us together with Christ." —Ephesians 2:5.

The Pastor began with a review of the trial of Adam in Eden. He proved conclusively that our first parents were created perfect, in the image and likeness of their Creator. Adam disobeyed God, and thus brought upon himself and all of his posterity the sentence of death, "Dying, thou shalt die." "So death passed upon all men"; for all men are members of the race of Adam. All are under the curse of death, which came upon the world as the result of sin.

The speaker also showed that we were not condemned personally, for we were not on trial personally. Father Adam alone was on trial, and when he failed he was sentenced to death. God's great Law declares that "all unrighteousness is sin"; that "the wages of sin is death"; and that "the soul that sins shall die." Adam's children were born in sin—born after his fall from perfection. Therefore it naturally follows that they partake of imperfection; and if the perfect man did not keep God's perfect Law, how could imperfect men keep it?

Having demonstrated that all mankind are under the curse of death by reason of Father Adam's disobedience, the Pastor next discussed the proposition which the Bible sets before the race. That proposition is not a question of Heaven or Hell, but one of life or death eternal. To those who are in harmony with God, who delight to do His will, He is pleased to give life everlasting. But to those who are not in harmony with Him He has decreed to give death eternal—they shall not have any place whatever in all His Universe.

For instance, God's provision for the angels was that since they were perfect, they should, if they maintained their perfection, live everlastingly. From God's standpoint, to live everlastingly—the only way that He would have His intelligent creatures live at all—is to live happily, to enjoy life, to live in pleasure. All the holy angels are happy, perfect and blessed; for they have not transgressed the Law of God. So then, the speaker continued, we see why the Scriptures teach that mankind are under the sentence of death. In fact, the Bible speaks of all mankind, the world in general, as a dead world—not that there are no people who are active, but that all have gone down into the tomb, but that those who have entered the grave have merely preceded the others to the place whither all are going, because of the one sentence upon all.

The Pastor next showed that, according to God's righteous Law, mankind are now unfit to live under the perfect conditions which He has prepared. Even with the best of intentions, imperfect beings continually make trouble for themselves and others. In the present imperfect condition of the race, humanity would make trouble wherever they might be. This is contrary to the Divine will; God purposes to have a Universe in which everybody shall be happy, everybody good, everybody perfect.

With some the question might arise, "Why did God make us imperfect?" The speaker, after propounding the question, then answered it: The Bible declares that God's work is perfect. (Deuteronomy 32:4.) Humanity in their present condition are not God's work. God made Father Adam perfect. After Adam had become a sinner and had brought the curse of death upon himself, he propagated a race by the law of nature. Therefore all of his posterity were born in sin, and for six thousand years have been falling, sinking lower in degradation. This is the Scriptural explanation of human imperfection; this is why the very best of the race cannot do perfectly.

The Pastor then declared that God does not expect humanity to do perfectly now, in their present fallen condition. The Creator gave the Law to Israel for the very purpose of showing them, and incidentally proving to all men, that "by the deeds of the Law no flesh can be justified in His sight." God has decreed that none but the perfect shall have everlasting life, for none but the perfect can keep His righteous Law. He has proved conclusively that no fallen human being can keep that Law. Therefore none of us could have everlasting life if God had not done something for us. The story of what our gracious Creator has done is the "old, old story, of Jesus and His love"—and the Heavenly Father's love, also.

In the past we have failed to realize that God is Love, even though we read, "God so loved the world that He gave His Only Begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him might not perish, but have everlasting life." The proper thought is not that which is frequently given to children, and frequently held by elder persons—that God is angry with us, and that He was about to send the entire race to eternal torment, when Jesus stepped in and saved us from so terrible a fate. This view makes our Heavenly Father appear most unloving and unjust, in that when He knew that we were imperfect and therefore could not do perfectly, He held us accountable for what we could not do. All Bible students are getting rid of this wrong conception of the Almighty Jehovah.

The right thought is that from the very foundation of the world God had a loving purpose in respect to mankind. He knew that the race would sin, but He also knew how in His great Wisdom He could overrule the experience of these six thousand years of sin and death, so that good would ultimately result. If God had not permitted sin, men would not have known how wrong it is and what evil conditions it promotes. Adam probably had no idea what would be the result of his disobedience. He did not know that it would bring sin, sorrow, and mental and moral depravity into the world. He could not foresee the insane asylum, the prisons, etc. Not even the angels would have known the effect of sin if God had not permitted it to enter the Universe.

The Pastor then showed the wide difference between permitting sin and causing sin. He declared that for God to have caused sin would have been for God to do evil. God does no evil; He tempts no man. He was not responsible for the entrance of sin into the world. God permitted Satan to have his own way and become a rebel against the Divine Government. He permitted him to pursue his downward course, in order to let the angels see the result of sin. Therefore He did not hinder Satan from misrepresenting the Divine character.

When Mother Eve came under temptation, God did not interfere. He let her alone. She knew His command; she had her full testing; she ate, and disobeyed. Thus the reign of Sin and Death came into the world, with their tremendous influences for evil. Then He also permitted the angels to be tempted to sin in connection with mankind. After the Deluge, God started a new order of things and let mankind and angels try again under somewhat different conditions.

Next the Pastor declared that this reign of Sin and Death has illustrated certain principles. It has demonstrated what righteousness is, and has showed the necessity for obedience to God. It has also proved that there can be no happiness aside from perfect harmony with the Creator. Both men and angels have learned that whoever sins will suffer.

The Pastor next traced the history of Israel, and showed the purpose of the Covenant made at Sinai, with Moses as mediator. Two thousand years after man's fall, God made a Covenant with Abraham that some day He would bless the world through Abraham's posterity. Still the angels had room to doubt; for Abraham was old and as yet had no child. Years passed by, and finally Isaac was born. Still the world was not blessed. In due time God declared that the blessing would come through Jacob. When he died, God indicated that Jacob's posterity would be heirs of the Promise. But instead of blessing the world, they became a nation of slaves. At length God raised up Moses, who led the nation through the wilderness to Mount Sinai, where they entered into covenant relationship with God. The terms of their Covenant were that if they would obey the Law, they would become great, and all the world would come under their sway.

But it was only a little while before they found that they were sinners, for they could not keep His commandments. Then God arranged for them an annual Day of Atonement, on which sacrifices were offered to cover their sins for one year. So they tried year by year to live without sin so that they would not die, but be worthy to be the people of God. Yet they died, generation after generation. At last they realized that the fault was with themselves; they had entered into a contract which they could not keep. They had agreed to keep the Law of God, and were not able to do so.

That was the very lesson which God desired them to learn, the Pastor declared, and not only Israel, but all humanity. The Apostle explains explains that in dealing with Israel God was dealing typically, so that His people of the Gospel Age would get the lesson by seeing wherein Israel failed, and by realizing that had we been in their place we would have failed for the same reason.

By and by, through the Prophets, God promised to give Israel another Covenant, at some future day. This New Covenant will be more favorable to them. The difference between the Old Law Covenant and the New Law Covenant will not be in regard to God's Law, for His Law is perfect. The Scriptures declare that the difference will be in regard to the Mediator. Although Moses was faithful in all his House, yet he was a member of the fallen race of Adam, and therefore imperfect. He could not give the people life; for he had no real life-rights to give any more than had any one else. As a typical mediator he offered typical sacrifices, which could not really take way sin. But the Mediator of the New Covenant will be empowered to lift the curse of death and to restore, not only Israel, but all mankind, to the image and likeness of God, from which they fell.

The Pastor next discussed the work of the Gospel Age. About two thousand years after the Covenant made with Abraham, the Logos was made flesh, in order to become the Seed of Abraham and bless all the families of the earth. Throughout the Gospel Age a most important work has been carried out. The New Law Covenant cannot be inaugurated until there is a Mediator of that Covenant. This Mediator, the speaker showed, is to be Christ the Head, and the Church His Body.

In the typical ceremony, Moses could not institute the Law Covenant until first he had sacrificed bulls and goats. In the antitype, the great antitypical Moses must first offer the "better sacrifices." Jesus first of all sacrificed Himself; now He must sacrifice the Church. This work requires all of the Gospel Age. At Jordan, when He offered Himself in consecration, He killed the antitypical bullock; and later, He was "led like a lamb to the slaughter." At Pentecost our Lord began to deal with the antitypical goat class—the Church. When the offering of the members of the Church which is Christ's Body is ended, then the Body of the antitypical Moses will be complete. As St. Peter declares, "For Moses truly said unto the fathers, A Prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; Him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever He shall say unto you."

The time for the New Covenant, the Pastor believes, is near at hand. When the antitypical Moses brings in this Covenant, He will remove the the curse of death. According to the Scriptures, it will take Him exactly one thousand years to accomplish this work, to overcome sin, to dissolve the hard hearts of humanity, and to give instead the warm, tender, gentle, sympathetic heart that was lost in Eden six thousand years ago.

The Church, the Pastor declared, were dead in trespasses and sins, like the rest of the world. But God has quickened them—made them alive—through the imputation of the merit of Christ, in advance of the world. God's purpose in so doing is that He wishes now to select a special class from amongst mankind. But not everybody has been invited to be of this class. Millions in heathen lands have never heard of Jesus Christ; and all over the civilized world, there are people who have heard with their ears, but not with their minds. They do not comprehend that they are sinners, that God has provided a Saviour and that He is now inviting some to come into covenant relationship with Himself. Prejudice, superstition, false teaching and false theories prevent many from receiving the Truth.

The Pastor holds that all of the creeds of Christendom contain false doctrines. The Bible, he maintains, says that the Devil put these erroneous doctrines into the creeds. Should any one ask why it is that the Devil could have part in the making of our creeds the Pastor replies that the Adversary misled our forefathers through his wiles; for he is deceitful. Whenever they thought to do something very zealously for God, Satan would lead them past the right mark, into something very much to God's discredit and to their own deception.

Looking over the pages of history, the speaker can see that the Devil has been working hard with all who have ever tried to get out of darkness into light. Therefore it behooves the people of God to watch continually. The only safe course is to try to walk very near to the Lord, in humility of mind, in full confidence in His Power, trusting only in His Word. If anything seem to lead off into guessing for ourselves, the only thing to do would be to say, "I have the Word of God; I will stand by what is written."

In conclusion, the Pastor reminded his hearers that the Bible urges God's people to walk circumspectly; that is, to look well around. It does not mean to be in abject fear and dread, for to so would mean lack of faith in God. The people of God are not hoping to come off conquerors and to win the great prize by any strength or power of their own. On the contrary, their confidence is in God. He who has begun a good work in them is well able to finish it. But each one is to walk in fear in the sense of having such respect for God and His promises and such anticipation of the grand outcome, that each will be very careful to avoid transgression. If coming days should bring severe trials, then coming days will also bring increased joy; for as the Apostle says, "Our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

Mrs. Pankhurst was talking to a reporter not long ago about the comparative deceitfulness of men and women.

"Women," said the reporter, "are the more deceitful."

"No," said Mrs. Pankhurst, "men are the worst. Look at the way they deceive their wives."

"Do you claim," the reporter asked, "that men should never deceive their wives?"

Mrs. Pankhurst smiled and tossed her head.

"Oh, no!" she said. "How could the average man ever get a wife if he didn't deceive her?"

Lloyd's Now Leading Institution of Its Kind.

With the recent acquisition of the Wilts & Dorset Banking Company, Lloyd's Bank of London becomes probably the greatest financial corporation of its kind, as its deposit and current account now aggregates more than 500 million dollars, says the Wall Street Journal.

Lloyd's Bank has a history extending over a long period of years, as the private bank out of which it was formed was established in 1765, and the present banking corporation was formed in 1865. Including its latest acquisition, the bank has absorbed no less than forty-eight other banking houses since 1865, and of these thirty-five were private banks, one of these dating back to 1677. The bank is represented in forty-five out of the fifty-two counties in England and Wales, and a subsidiary company was formed in 1911 to open a branch in Paris, an old French private banking house being taken over.

It is unusual for an English joint stock bank to organize a subsidiary for doing business in a foreign country, but this plan had to be adopted. Under the French law, to conduct a banking business in France would have rendered the entire capital of the bank, no matter were located, subject to taxation. In all Lloyd's Bank now has 880 separate offices. While an incorporated bank, the traditions of the private banking days yet remain, and practically all officials of the bank and its branch managers were educated in private banking houses, and preference is always given to men so educated in taking on new employes.

An Odd Little Island.

The Isle of Man presents many curious features, none of which is more curious than its laws. For instance, the Legislature is called the House of Keys, and was, in other times, a judicial body charged with the duty of interpreting the laws. Any person so bold as to slander this House of Keys was liable not only to a fine in the amount of $50, but to the loss of both his ears.

Two deemsters were once appointed to execute the laws which before the year 1417 were uncodified, and these were known as breast laws, for the reason that they were imparted to the deemsters in secret, to be kept by them within the secrecy of their own breasts as long as they chose, or during their whole service, though they were authorized to impart and explain to the populace as much of these special laws as should at any time seem wise and expedient.

Certain of the Manx laws, as set down after the codification, are extremely quaint. Here are a couple of extracts from the Manx legal rulings:

"If a man steal a horse or an ox it is no felony, for the offender cannot hide them; but if he steal a capon or a pig he shall be hanged."

"In case of theft, if it amount to the value of six pence halfpenny it shall be felony, and death to the offender; and under that value to be whipped or set upon a wooden horse which shall be provided for such offenders."

Floating Churches.

A novel feature of the vessels building at Cammell Laird's shipyards at Birkenhead for the National Steam Navigation Co. of Greece is the little church which has been fitted on board each vessel.

These floating churches have stained-glass domes, tiny altars, and walls adorned with ikons. Standing on the shelter deck and fitted up internally in oak, the church is entered by doors on either side. In addition to the dome, brass-framed rectangular side windows are fitted.

On the occasion of general service the majority of those attending will, on account of the smallness of the church, have to be accommodated amidships in front of it, and in order that altar and priest may be in full view of those present sliding doors have been arranged in the wall of the church directly opposite the altar.

Landlady Gets Better of Joker.

Sir Robert Ball, who was a keen humorist, was never loath to recount a joke at his own expense. The great astronomer was dining with some friends at Straford, and when the bill was presented he said to the landlady: "Madam, I am going to give you a lesson in astronomy. In 25,000,000 years all things must return to their original condition. We shall all be here again eating a dinner precisely identical. Will you give us credit until we come back?" "Well," replied the landlady, "you were here 25,000,000 years ago, and you left without paying the bill then. Settle that account and I will trust you for what you have had to-day."

Ran Into a Hyena.

An unusual accident befell two young officers in Secunderabad recently. They were cycling one night from the club to Trimulgherry. One of them was riding a motor bicycle and towing the other who was on an ordinary bicycle. Suddenly a large hyena rushed across the road in front of them; the motor cycle just missed it but the other one caught it fairly. The hyena fled howling horribly, but the rider of the ordinary bicycle was also thrown right over the handle bars and sustained some rather nasty injuries in consequence of which he was in hospital for some days.

Two Geese From One Egg.

Two goslings have just been hatched out from a single egg on a Cambridge (Eng.) farm. Such an event is almost unprecedented, the birds from double-yolked eggs usually being deformed, if they hatch out at all, which is rarely the case. These twins are well shaped and healthily developed, and there is every indication that they are going to grow into fine, vigorous birds. The egg that produced the twin birds was hatched out by a hen, which is devoted to its foster children.

Two hundred and fifty-seven youths from all parts of the country passed the mental examinations for entrance to Annapolis, which goes to show that the tests are not too difficult except for those who make studying easy.

Education Notes.

The teaching of home economics is now required by law in the elementary schools of Indiana, Iowa, Louisiana, Massachusetts, Montana, North Carolina, Oklahoma and Washington.

A course in social service for parents was recently given at the National Kindergarten college, Chicago. Visiting nurses, playgrounds, juvenile courts and social settlements were some of the topics treated.

In a "rapid advancement class" in Boston, composed of the thirty-six brightest pupils of the fifth and sixth grades and placed under the direction of one teacher from entrance to completion of course, the children finished all the work of the sixth, seventh and eighth grades in a year and a half. Only one hour a day was allowed these pupils for outside study.

Recent Inventions.

A double eyecup has been invented which applies a lotion to both eyes at once as a rubber bulb at one side is pressed.

Hollowed heels for women's shoes to hold money and jewelry, the opening being inside the shoe, have been patented.

To cool hot boxes on railroad cars slowly and safely without loss of time there has been invented apparatus to drip water upon the heated journals while a train is in motion.

To enable ships' officers to detect their approach to icebergs, there has been invented a microthermometer so delicate that it registers changes in sea water temperature to one-thousandth of a degree.

Flippant Flings.

Another victory for the policy of watchful waiting. An old maid aged seventy-three was married in Boston the other day.—Cleveland Leader.

Lucky Missouri! Having given it two regional banks, the government is now buying Missouri mules for army service.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Three horses and a carriage belonging to a princess are to be auctioned off to satisfy a livery bill. Royal auction is becoming so popular!—New York Sun.

As a trophy of the Mexican expedition every married soldier might bring back a pair of Mexican slashed trousers, each leg of which would serve the mistress for a silt skirt.—Exchange.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Food in Warm Weather.

With the advent of warm weather diseases of the breathing organs, such as bronchitis, pneumonia and the like, which claim their greatest number of victims during winter weather, give way to diseases and disorders of the digestive organs, such as summer diarrhea, ptomaine and the various kinds of food poisonings. The winter diseases are due mostly to the breathing of bad air, the warm weather ailments to the consumption of bad food.

People should make sure that they are served only with fresh, clean, pure food all the year around, but extra care must be taken in this regard during the warm weather months, when the risk of receiving tainted or unsound foodstuffs is greatly increased.

Ptomaine poisoning is a serious and distressing illness, which can only be avoided by the utmost care in the selection of meat, fish and other sea food and especially of canned meats.

THE WONDERFUL BRAS D'OR LAKES

CAPE BRETON, NOVA SCOTIA

HISTORY · SPORT · SCENERY

SWORDSMEN OF THE SEA

Cape Breton is rich in history and romances, "for here were many famous battles fought and victories won." To-day health and pleasure-seekers, sportsmen and nature lovers are finding in this lovely island all they can desire in the way of summer pleasures. It is not a fashionable resort, it offers but few high class hotels, but there are many clean, comfortable, unpretentious small hotels and boarding houses. There is also abundant opportunity to own and build a bungalow at an extremely low price. It is the summer residence of many discriminating people from the southern cities, and the chosen vacation land for hundreds more from the populous centres of Canada and the United States.

Yachtsmen find in the Bras d'Or Lakes an endless variety of new scenes, safe anchorages, ample clear sailing waters with only one foot tide variation, while lovers of the rod and reel have abundant opportunity of the enjoyment of their favorite pastime, ranging in variety from trout to tuna.

Beautiful walks, charming drives, sailing, rowing, bathing and many other forms of amusement are to be had on every side. You can go to Cape Breton for ten vacations and there will still be much for you to see and enjoy.

The means of transportation in the islands are excellent. The splendid trains of the Canadian Government, from Montreal, St. John and Halifax, cross the Straits of Canso on the train ferry, and from Point Tupper to Sydney the passenger has an opportunity to enjoy some of the finest scenery Cape Breton can offer.

Cape Breton Island

Is part of the Province of Nova Scotia, being separated from the mainland by the narrow Strait of Canso. This remarkable island has a length of 110 miles and extreme width of 87 miles, and its total area is 3,704 miles. It has been aptly described as "the front door of Canada."

Here nature seems to have made a special effort to produce a perfect vacation land. Not content with making a wonderful coast line of picturesque sandy bays and bold rocky promontories, Cape Breton possesses the beautiful Bras d'Or Lakes, over 360 square miles in extent, surrounded by well-wooded hills, which are dotted here and there with charming villages and prosperous looking farms, through many of which are streams, brooks and rivers, so abundant in this favored island.

Hidden away in these forest-clad hills lies unknown mineral wealth, while in the numerous waterways that almost divide the island in sections, and in the waters around the coast, is that great wealth of fisheries which has attracted the fishermen for centuries, even from distant Europe.

Much fertile land yet awaits the farmer, with a steady market practically at his door for all he can produce. Immense lumber areas will some day furnish employment for the lumberman. The great mineral deposits are commanding the attention of the miner and capitalist, both of this and other lands.

True, the climate is cold in winter, but not so cold as many other parts of Canada or the Western States. The summer climate, from June to November, is well-nigh perfection. That humid, enervating heat of summer, so common to most American cities, is in Cape Breton unknown. The tonic and recuperating qualities of the atmosphere have long been familiar to the medical profession of this continent.

The great water areas and the breezes from the Atlantic Ocean seem to supply the very requisite to produce a healthy appetite, and sound refreshing sleep, while the finest of fresh sea foods and good wholesome farm produce soon counteract the effect of the strenuous, nerve-racking demands of modern metropolitan life.

Orangedale is situated at the head of one of the numerous arms of the Bras d'Or Lakes, and at this station conveyances meet all trains to transport passengers to Whycocomagh, a charming drive of eight miles. Whycocomagh nestles at the base of a lofty, forest clad hillside and its beauty of location will linger long in the memory of every visitor. The glistening waters afford splendid bathing, while boating may be indulged in here with almost absolute safety. Delightful drives and walks are numerous and the scenery is superb. Splendid fishing is available in numerous adjacent localities. There is a mineral spring said to possess wonderful curative properties, and an Indian reservation of 1,000 acres is near at hand. This is truly a charming spot for the summer vacationist.

At the wharf, near the railway station at Iona, is the train steamer "Blue Hill" ready to transport passengers through the twelve miles of beautiful scenery to Baddeck, made famous by Charles Dudley Warner. On the way from Iona to Baddeck many small vessels are passed, their white sails on the blue water backed by the dark green of the hills dotted here and there with numerous farm houses, make a picture of rare beauty and loveliness.

Baddeck has a population of about fifteen hundred with good stores, two hotels and numerous boarding houses. Near the little town is the charming summer home of Doctor Alexander Graham Bell, the inventor of the telephone, who is now devoting much time to the problem of aerial navigation, and here some remarkable experiments are taking place. It is said that the people of Baddeck are so accustomed to the whirr of the aviator's motor that they now pay no attention to it, and that horses have never seen a railway train betray no symtom of fright when a biplane playfully sweeps over a load of hay. Beautifully located on high land overlooking Ross's and Boularderie Island, this delightful town offers a view of land and water that captivates every visitor. It is one of the best centres to see the Bras d'Or Lakes, as from here many enjoyable trips can be made by steamer or by driving. The residents are hospitable and the yacht and tennis clubs freely extend privileges to visitors. There is splendid fishing in the Baddeck and Middle rivers, and salmon in the Margaree.

Baddeck is the home of aviators.

Playing in the sand—Bras d'Or Lake

Grand Narrows.

Is a most interesting place, the fishing here is almost at your doors, cod and pollock will take a fly in this part of the Bras d'Or Lakes and sea trout may be caught in July and August at the bridge. The roads are good and the drives beautiful. This is the halfway point between the Straits of Canso and Sydney, and the Narrows are spanned by a substantial bridge, with a length of 1,697 feet. There is good accommodation and every requisite for summer recreation. From Grand Narrows by Boisdale, Barrachois and Georges River to Sydney is delightful. There are no end of undeveloped attractive tourist places and everywhere is an abundance of water and attractive scenery—the possible summer homes of thousands of people in years to come. Many of the scenes are most strikingly picturesque and novel, until Sydney is reached.

This city has had a remarkable growth during the last few years, due to the development of the steel industry, which has given to the manufac-

the Pittsburg of Canada. Under the term of "The Sydneys" are included Sydney, North Sydney, and Sydney Mines. The latter two are five miles apart by water from Sydney. They are all linked together by a trolley line and are united both socially and commercially. Sydney has one of the finest harbors in America, deep, safe and easy of access. It is two miles wide at the mouth and after extending for four miles it divides into two arms each reaching several miles further inland. In this vast harbor the combined navies of the world could easily find anchorage and vessels of the largest tonnage find ample depth of water in almost any part of it.

It is a progressive business city with splendid stores, hotels, residences and churches. The summer climate is delightful and there is abundant opportunity for boating, yachting, canoeing, bathing, fishing and all the usual summer sports and pleasures.

READ Izaak Walton's "Compleat Angler" if you want to be converted at once into an enthusiastic fisherwoman. No longer will it be possible for you to scoff at the truly delightful sport and when once the angle is tried and a little proficiency gained another disciple is lured to the ancient fisherman of England's oak country.

But it is not said the first book on angling was not written by Izaak Walton, but by a woman, Dame Juliana Baburd, the prioress of the nunnery of St. Albans, whose book "The Treatise of Fishing with an Angle" is still extant. And ever since her time, some four hundred years ago, fishing has been a favorite sport among womankind.

Salmon caught near Baddeck.

It is stated on very positive authority that fish are really not conscious of pain and that their terror of the rod is only a fear of the unknown. A legend has been taught them in connection with the curious long shadow which stretches at best food time across their watery heavens that many of their bravest ancestors have been mysteriously spirited out of existence. The young fisherwoman can therefore be as bloodthirsty as she will, for neither the worm with which she baits her hook for "bottom" fishing nor the fish which she proudly plays to land actually suffers.

Everything about the sport of fishing is so delightful—the long, peaceful hours when the noisiest companion must be quiet if a good day's haul is to be made; the lovely lake or stream, where one can enjoy the beauty of the clouds and the country half consciously while constantly flipping back and forth the supple rod and length of slight string, with which one soon becomes as proficient as the cowboy with his lasso.

IT is said to be wiser to do some practising in a lonely field or from a roof top before attempting real fly fishing with rod and reel, and to do this practise without a hook, for that tiny bit of metal on the end of the line is, in the hands of an amateur, a weapon more dread and dangerous than any hatpin ever worn.

Yachting on the Bras d'Or Lake.

It is said that in learning the art of fly casting if it is not possible to procure a regular coach or teacher the next best thing is the companionship of another amateur. Two persons practising together for an hour a day each with a book of instructions — of which there are many—and carefully watching and criticising the other's throws, become fairly expert at the end of a fortnight. Once they have acquired the knack and can swing the line a good fifty feet and come within a few inches of the object aimed at, then they can try their luck in open water.

The girl who desires a new amusement this summer and has decided to add to her already fair list of accomplishments that of being an expert fly caster should begin her practising at once. Already the fishing season is well on its way and who knows but that when the father or older brother sees how much in earnest she has become and how clever she is with her rod and line an invitation will be extended to go on one of those fascinating fishing trips to Canada or the Maine

"It was with a very subdued air that the Man-with-the-Grouch dropped the wedding announcement of his old friend Gayly into the waste basket.

"There he goes," he grumbled, "the last of a brilliant set—except me.

"And I'll have to walk with the utmost circumspection or some designing woman who wants a husband more than she does a vote will grab me.

"It seems impossible to think of Gayly as a married man. If ever a human being had the happy faculty of being sufficient unto himself it was Gayly.

"I remember him when he was just recovering from his first love affair. That girl in the case was wrapped up in Gayly, but her folks made her marry a rich man.

"Gayly was despondent over the affair for one whole day. He wanted to forsake civilization. He proposed that a half-dozen of us buy a felucca, or a barque or some other queer little craft and sail away

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

SEEING BENTLEY OFF

An Interruption That Was Not Resented.

By ETHEL SEVERO.

Amy Sheldon, leaning idly over the steamer's rail, watched the crowd on the pier and wished just for a moment that there had been an opportunity to get word to some of the people she could trust.

This was all so different from her last sailing, and it brought more sharply to her memory the scene of two days before when she had given Dick Nesbit his ring and had declared that she hated the very sight of his face.

She had last sailed in June, and the pier had been crowded, but until the very last she had seen Dick's smiling face framed in an indistinct blur of other faces. Now she would look in vain, if indeed she looked at all.

She had about decided to go to her stateroom until the boat should swing into the stream.

She half turned to suggest to her aunt that course of action when she caught sight of Dick making his way through the crowd about the gangway, and presently he came on board with a heavy suit case that seemed to argue his determination to take passage on the Aurania.

Amy half turned back to the rail; then she turned again and made her way to the lower deck, where she knew that the purser's office was located.

Passing rapidly through the gangway, she saw that it really was Dick, though he was in earnest conversation with a man in blue and brass, and he did not see her.

He had his pocketbook in his hand, and with flashing eyes Amy made her way back to the upper deck, where her aunt still sat in the winter sunshine enjoying the bustle that preceded the departure.

One of the most admirable things about Aunt Molly was her willingness to do what her tempestuous little niece wished to do, but even the usually placid Aunt Molly demurred when Amy stormed up and demanded that they leave the ship at once.

"But I've said goodby to the Brookes, and Mrs. Brooke is going to send all our mail in care of the London agent," protested the little old lady. "We can't go back home after telling the Brookes that we were to be gone until fall. She will tell all her friends and"—

"And that's just the trouble," interrupted Amy, with a stamp of her little foot. "Mrs. Brooke has been talking—already. She must have gone to the telephone the moment we left last night and told everybody she ever knew."

"But what will Dick think if you start and then turn back?" reminded Aunt Molly, determined not to give up a spring in the south of France without exhausting every argument.

"That's just the trouble," explained Amy. "That horrid Mrs. Brooke must have called him up last night after promising that she would not tell a soul. He's on board. I just saw him in the purser's office buying his ticket."

"I thought that they bought them at the dock," objected Aunt Molly, but Amy shook her head.

"You can buy tickets on board at the last moment. I suppose that Dick—I mean Mr. Nesbit—had to wait until he could settle about his practice being looked after—not that there is so much to the practice," she added spitefully. "I don't believe that he's been in court this month."

"Is he altogether to blame for that?" asked Aunt Molly, fencing for time in which to marshal other arguments.

"And suppose that I did let him waste a lot of time with me?" retorted Amy. "I've been telling him for the last month that I was tired of seeing him about and that our engagement was all a mistake."

"Then I don't think that he is following you," advanced Aunt Molly. "Dick is not the sort of man to follow when he is not wanted. If he is on board it is because he has to reach Europe by the first steamer, and he won't bother us in the least."

"Because I shan't give him a chance," explained Amy promptly. "I am going down to the stateroom to have the steward take our steamer trunks back to the dock. It is lucky that we arranged to have our other luggage follow."

"But what will people say?" demanded Aunt Molly as she rose and started to follow her energetic niece. It was plainly to be seen that the trip was off or at least postponed, and Aunt Molly knew the signs well enough to realize when resistance was useless.

Amy by dint of liberal tipping managed to collect her things on the dock just as the final warning sounded. For the moment it was useless to try to leave the dock.

The port captain stood beside the remaining gangway ready to superintend the lowering of the last connection between ship and shore, and a line was stretched to keep back those who had not gone to the end of the pier to wave a last farewell.

The sides of the ship were lined with eager faces, some smiling, some bedewed with tears. Aunt Molly stood guard over their belongings and looked wistfully at the fortunate ones on the decks.

Just as the signal was given to haul Dick Nesbit appeared at the head of the gangplank and dashed down, his feet not touching the dock before the upper end of the plank was hoisted clear of the ship's side.

He sprang lightly aside to escape the swaying edge of the chute and in doing so he almost bumped into Aunt Molly, who was making a brave endeavor not to look disappointed.

The black bulk moved slowly past the open section of the shed, but Aunt Molly did not see it now. She was busy watching Amy and Dick.

Nesbit, after a single glance at the frowning girl, devoted his conversation to Aunt Molly, with whom he was a favorite.

"Did you get afraid of seasickness at the last moment?" he demanded gayly. "I didn't even know that you were thinking of going abroad or I should have sent some flowers."

Aunt Molly glanced triumphantly at Amy, but that crimson cheeked young woman gave no sign that she had heard the disclaimer.

"I came precious close to taking the trip myself," continued Dick. "You know what a pest Fred Bentley always is when there is a wedding. He always wants to decorate the trunk and do all those things that tease the bridal pair.

"When it came to getting married himself he was scared stiff, for he knew of a dozen chaps who had it in for him. He married Belle very quietly last night and came aboard this morning before daylight. Some reporter asked Ben Houghton about it, and we found that Fred was locked in his stateroom.

"Trimmins, the purser of this ship, is a jolly sort of chap. I've crossed with him three times, and I know him very well. The boys got me to bustle down here with a lot of junk in a suit case. I gave Trimmins some money to tip Fred's cabin and saloon stewards, and Fred's going to get a daily hint from his victims. I was so busy explaining that Trimmins had fairly to fire me down the gangplank."

"And you were not sailing yourself?" asked Aunt Molly.

"I only wish that I could—to see the fun," declared Dick, with twinkling eyes. "If it hadn't been that I caught a big case last night I think I should have done so. I bet Fred's sorry by this time tomorrow that he ever heard of white ribbons and old shoes as decoration for honeymoon trunks and wedding cars."

Amy was watching the steamer swinging into midstream with the aid of two bustling little tugs, but from the corner of her eye Aunt Molly saw that the girl heard.

"And, speaking of cars," ran on Dick, "shall I get you one?"

Without waiting for an answer he tore off up the dock to retain one of the few waiting autos, then hurried back to escort Aunt Molly and the trunks.

It was not until he had helped Aunt Molly into the car and had turned to show a similar courtesy to Amy that she spoke.

"I thought that Mrs. Brooke told you we were leaving on this steamer and that you were following me," she said hurriedly. "I am sorry that I was so silly, and yet I am glad, because I know now that it was just because I was tired and silly that I broke the engagement. Will you come over tonight, Dick—and bring back the ring?"

"Will I?" he echoed jubilantly. "I should say that I would. And, do you know, I am almost sorry that I put up that job on Fred."

"Don't be afraid," reassured Amy smilingly. "That case will be over and we'll be on our own honeymoon before he gets back to play tricks on us. If you had not played the trick I should have sailed, and you"—

"Would not be the happiest man in town," completed Dick. "I guess Fred was of some use, after all."

DRYDALE, ONT., June 15th, 1913.
"I am a general storekeeper at the above address and, on account of the great good I have experienced from using "Fruit-a-tives", I recommend them strongly to my customers. They were a great boon to me, I can tell you, for about two years ago, I was laid up in bed with vomiting and a most terrific pain at the base of my skull. This pain nearly drove me mad. Doctors feared it would turn to Inflammation of the Brain, but I took "Fruit-a-tives" steadily until I was cured. I have gained fifteen pounds since taking "Fruit-a-tives" and I verily believe they saved me from a disastrous illness".

When the Liver Gets Torpid

There is Nothing Like Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills to Set it Right.

Mrs. C. L. Cook, 248 Tenth street, Brandon, Man., writes:—"I have used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills for the last four years for liver trouble, and can say that I have had great satisfaction and help from them. I find that I do not need any doctor if I use them when the liver gets torpid, and believe that they are exactly suited for my case. My husband has used them for kidney trouble with good results, and my daughter in Winnipeg has been helped a great deal by the use of these pills. We say we can't keep house without them, and have cheated the doctors here out of a good many visits. I think Dr. Chase's medicines are just the thing, and have recommended them to many people who have used them with good results."

Established customs are, of course, respectable—and deadly dull.

Remorse doesn't do any good, but it can render one vastly uncomfortable, so avoid it.

Success is a beautiful thing—when it is ours.

Sometimes we know less about ourselves than we do of any one else.

Cold weather, it may be, is helping the ice trust, and maybe it is putting its high price schedule out of business.

An old fashioned winter certainly ought to be accompanied by old fashioned ability to enjoy it.

Antarctic Explorer Describes Harrowing Adventures In Ice Fields.

Dr. Mawson, who commanded the Australian expedition to the Antarctic is in London. Upon his arrival he was met by Sir Ernest Shackleton and Mr. Frank Wild. Dr. Mawson served with Sir Ernest in the expedition that got within 100 miles of the South Pole in 1910, while Mr. Wild was in charge of the western base of Dr. Mawson's last journey.

Dr. Mawson, after the indescribable hardships which he suffered in the Antarctic, is now happily married. Lady Shackleton was at the station to receive the bride, a tall, handsome lady, who is making her first visit to England, under peculiar romantic circumstances.

A special correspondent of the Metropolitan Press obtained from Dr. Mawson an account of his expedition in the Antarctic. Discussing the terrible journey in which his two companions lost their lives, Dr. Mawson said: "Mertz, who survived Ninnis, died of starvation. Throughout we had very little food. He had to subsist on the dogs, which, poor beasts, were themselves starved. The evening before Mertz died neither of us thought we could get back to our base. The continuous work on the plateau and the terrific wind proved almost insurmountable difficulties. Mertz and myself were equally bad, but a few days later it became evident that he was feeling the effects more than myself, and that he was not extracting as much nourishment from the dogs as I. At midnight on Jan. 7, he died.

"I placed him in his sleeping bag and erected to his memory a cross constructed out of half of my one remaining sledge. He rests among the virgin Antarctic snow. Ninnis lies in a crevasse 1,000 feet deep. With the death of my last remaining companion I had to begin my solitary return journey, a distance of 100 miles to the depot, as the crow flies.

"On reaching my base, practically dead beat, I was overjoyed to see the Aurora, but my joy turned at first to dismay when I found that the vessel was steaming away from me. Anyhow, the second season in the Antarctic proved a blessing in disguise, for I doubt if I should have got through if I had then left in the Aurora. During the second winter the weather, if possible, was worse than during the first."

After the death of Mertz Dr. Mawson dragged his sledge for three weeks before he reached his base. His sufferings were terrible. His nails and hair came out, and large masses of his skin came off. The thick skin from his feet came off intact and resembled leather soles, and this he rubbed with lanoline, and lashed to his skinless feet as a sort of bandage, being unable to stand the raw flesh rubbing against his foot-gear. Loneliness did not trouble the explorer, who often pursued on blindly in the driving blizzard, not knowing where he was going. He was unable to sleep, and when eventually he reached his [illegible] reaction set in and his nerves went.

Dr. Mawson laid special stress upon the remarkable degree of cold encountered in Adelie Land, stating that blizzards produced frictional electricity, rendering it no uncommon thing for blue lights to play about the noses and the finger tips of those who ventured abroad. The explorer added that, by the employment of their wireless outfit, the expedition were able to receive from Hobart and Sydney occasional news items, which was published monthly in the "Blizzard," original articles, sketches, and short stories also figuring in this paper, which was produced on the typewriter.

First.—All persons suffering from pulmonary tuberculosis (consumption) shall effectively destroy their sputum (spit).

Second.—All persons suffering from running sores due to any form of tuberculosis shall burn all soiled dressings immediately after removal.

Third.—The room occupied by a tuberculosis patient shall have at least one outside window.

Fourth.—No person suffering from pulmonary or other communicable form of tuberculosis shall handle food designed for the use of others, except when necessary in the performance of household duties, unless the food be wrapped in such a way as to protect it from contamination or unless some necessary subsequent process of preparation such as cooking will sterilize it and prevent its carrying infection to the consumer.

Fifth.—The manufacturing of any kind of goods for commercial purposes or the performance of any work known as "sheep work" in the home of any person suffering from pulmonary or other communicable form of tuberculosis is prohibited unless the product is such as can be sterilized and unless sterilization is done in strict accordance with the requirements of the local board of health.

CHARGED WITH BRIBERY.

Conservative Candidate in C. Huron, and Colleague, Summoned.

GODERICH, June 20.—Dr. A. H. Macklin, Conservative candidate in Centre Huron at the approaching election, and Rev. Joseph Elliott, a retired Presbyterian minister and opponent of Mr. Wm. Proudfoot in the last provincial election, have been summoned to appear before Magistrate Kelly to-day on a charge of bribery. The charges were laid yesterday on the complaint of Thos. Cuddy, and they have caused very great excitement throughout the constituency.

The charges are at the instance of J. B. Hunter, organist in Knox Presbyterian Church, and summons served on Mr. Macklin says in part:

"Whereas you have this day been charged before the undersigned Police Magistrate in and for the town of Goderich, in the said county of Huron, that you on the 19th day of June, at the said town of Goderich, were guilty of bribery by paying to one J. B. Hunter a sum of money, viz $10, with intent that such money should be expended in corrupt practices at the election of a member of the Legislature of the Province of Ontario for the centre riding of the county of Huron, to be held the 29th day of June, 1914, contrary to the law, and to the provision of the Ontario election act."

Rev. Mr. Elliott is accused of "offering to pay."

Manners.

A young woman, her arms filled with packages, slowly entered an elevated car, followed closely by a gruff looking man, who in his rush to get the only vacant seat trod on the young woman's dress and nearly toppled her over. He received a cold stare, but it brought forth only a grunt. Flopping into the seat and leaving the heavily burdened woman standing, the man growled:

"Why don't you hold up your skirts?"—New York Post.

SHE GAINED 36 LBS.

Mrs. George Bradshaw, Marlowe Ont. writes: "I was troubled for many years with weak, watery blood and dropsy. I had nervous headaches, dizziness, and sinking spells and was, in fact, a confirmed invalid. Doctors told me my heart and kidneys were diseased and gave me up. By using 10 boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I have been cured of many of my old complaints and gained 36 pounds in weight."

TO VERIFY LOG.

Storstad's Engineer Will Testify To Orders From Bridge.

QUEBEC, June 22.—The enquiry into the wreck of the Empress of Ireland by the Dominion Commission will be continued to-day when it is expected that Chief Engineer Syversters, of the collier Storstad, who was being examined on the entries of the log books of his department when the investigation was adjourned on Saturday, will go back into the box. An attempt will be made in all probability by the commission to get some definite information about the various orders received in the Storstad's engine-room immediately before and after the collision, as the entries in the logs were written up from the recollection of the third engineer on duty at the time, who acknowledged that he might have accidentally omitted certain facts.

The enquiry is expected to last at least a week more, though Lord Mersey is anxious to get it finished up, as he is desirous of getting home, and cannot do so until the report of the commission is prepared and despatched to Ottawa. Interesting evidence is expected to be given by the divers who have been examining the sunken hull of the Empress, not only in regard to the chances of bringing up the bodies still contained in it, but also probably on the exact nature of her injuries and how they affected her watertight bulkheads.

Technical evidence on the construction of the Empress will also be a matter to be dealt with, while it is also said some expert opinion may be secured on the advisability of a better system of closing water-tight bulkheads and of getting rafts and boats into the water when a ship begins to settle rapidly.

PHILANTHROPIST SHOT AT.

Member of the Rothschild Family Wounded by Dairyman.

PARIS, June 22.—Henri de Rothschild was shot and wounded in the leg in front of a boulevard cafe on Saturday night. His assailant was the former owner of a creamery, who, when arrested, declared that he had been ruined by the establishment of M. de Rothschild of a creamery designed for philanthropic purposes.

Five shots were fired by the man, but only one took effect.

Henri de Rothschild is a doctor of medicine, an author of note and a large contributor to charity.

It has not been determined as yet if the reason given by his assailant for the attack is the real one. Dr. de Rothschild has recently established a number of creameries for the use of the poor.

Downie's Trial Adjourned.

ST. CATHARINES, June 22.—The trial of Leslie Downie, promoter of the Colonial Insurance Company, charged with conspiring to defraud Dr. Curry of Merritton, opened before Judge Carman Saturday, but was adjourned until to-day to allow Dr. McPhedran of Toronto to be called as a witness. It was on the representation that the Toronto physician was to be the chief medical examiner that, according to Dr. Curry, he subscribed $300 to stock.

Canadian Bisley Team Sails.

MONTREAL, June 22.—The Canadian Bisley team sailed on board the steamer Scotian yesterday morning. The team consisting of 20 men is in command of Lieut.-Col. Ross of the Royal Highlander, Montreal, with Lieut. C. W. Gibson of the Royal Thirteenth Regiment, Hamilton, Ont., as adjutant.

Count Karolyi Seeks Money.

BUDAPEST, June 22.—Count Michael Karolyi, leader of the independent party in the Hungarian Parliament, has left here for another trip to the United States. He will sail for New York by the Vaterland on June 28.

Count Karolyi is accompanied by three deputies, and hopes to raise an election fund of several million dollars from his compatriots in America. He visited the United States last April on a similar mission.

Fears Blindness; Shoot Himself.

BERLIN, June 20.—Fearing that an approaching operation on his eyes would not save him from total blindness, Prof. Hans Von Petersen, president of Munich Society of Artists, and one of Germany's most distinguished painters, committed suicide by shooting himself through the head.

BAD BLOOD IS THE DIRECT CAUSE OF Pimples.

Pimples break out on the face and body, and it is impossible to get rid of them, unless you cleanse the blood of all of its impurities.

Burdock Blood Bitters is without a doubt, the very best medicine for this purpose.

This old, and reliable medicine has been in use for nearly forty years, and has a reputation unequalled by any other preparation for removing all the impurities from the blood and banishing the pimples.

Mr. Edward Paquette, Navan Centre, Ont., writes:—"One month ago my face was covered with pimples and a rash. I had tried a number of these so called blood purifiers with no avail. Seeing an almanac of yours in which you strongly recommend Burdock Blood Bitters, I decided to try a bottle, and after I had taken it I could see a decided change, and after using three bottles more all the pimples had completely disappeared."

FRUIT GROWERS SCARED.

Saturday's Frost Will Not Hurt Peaches, However.

ST. CATHARINES, June 22.—Fruit and vegetable growers who had become reconciled to the prospect of the poorest season for peaches in over a quarter of a century were greatly startled Saturday morning by the presence of frost, and incredible as it may seem, little damage in this district can be located, although in spots sheltered from the sun it was still discernible as late as nine o'clock.

The tomato plants, for which the greatest fear has been felt, appear to have weathered the night well. They were well advanced in growth South of the escarpment the effect of the frost was felt somewhat heavier, but not with the severity to cause great damage.

REBELLISTS FOR MONTREAL.

That Is Where Refugees May Go If Government Falls.

MONTREAL, June 22. — Fleeing from the wrath that is bound to come upon them if Huerta should fail and they remain in troublous Mexico, it is likely that hundreds of members and supporters of the Huerta administration will come to the city of Montreal to found a Mexican colony.

A letter has been received by Mr. Higgins of the St. Lawrence Hall from Senor L. M. Rodrigues of Boston, manager of the South American Agricultural Bureau of Information, asking for accommodation for senators, governors and mayors who may have to flee Mexico. The letter asks that one condition be observed, and it is probable that if followers of Huerta do make the hotel their refuge, no Carranzists will be found there.

The St. Lawrence Hall has long been identified with troublous times in America. It was the home of noted confederate refugees during the American Civil War.

Boatman Gives Murder Clue.

SCHENECTADY, N.Y., June 22.—A definite clue to the slayer of the girl whose dismembered torso was found in the Mohawk river developed Saturday, when Claude Hanlon, manager of a boat supply house near the scene where the gruesome find was made, declared that a man carrying a burlap bag hired a row-boat from him on the night of May 20. This man before putting out from shore, Hanlon said, picked up from the bank a concrete block similar to the one used to weight down the burlap bag in which the torso of the victim in the cask murder was found.

FOOTGEAR SEVERAL CENTURIES OLD.—These remarkable old antiques were found stored away in the dark cellar of an old deserted house in London, England. These barbarous citizens were pretty fond of boots!

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Drinking Water.

Water is essential to good health, and yet some persons do not seem to realize that fact. The quantity of liquid one should drink in a day depends upon a person's constitution, the amount of exercise he takes, the kind of food he eats, the weather and many other conditions. But the average man needs from three and a half to four pints of fluid per day. Of this he gets at least a pint in his solid food, so there remains from two and a half to three pints to be drunk. Women need less and children more. It is a good rule to allow children to drink all they want.

LATEST IN ALARM CLOCKS.

One That Jogs the Memory For Every Engagement Listed.

A "memory" clock is about the newest thing in timepieces, according to Playthings. This clock does not differ in appearance from an ordinary clock, excepting that around the outside rim of the dial there are holes so placed that there are four of them between every hour sign. They are marked ¼, ½, ¾ and a star, the latter being directly opposite the hour.

With the clock is furnished a number of small brass plugs, the purpose of which is this: When one of them is placed in one of the holes mentioned, say at a point where it marks a quarter after 1, the clock will make a distinct buzzing noise, loud enough to attract attention, at exactly that time, regardless of how many other pings there are in the clock.

The value of such a clock to a business man can scarcely be overestimated. As soon as he arrives at his desk he can plug up the clock in accordance with his appointments and other matters which have to be attended to at definite times. After the clock has been plugged he can proceed to work and forget all about his appointments. At the first call of the buzzer he knows that a certain matter is due for his attention, which he may promptly forget after it is attended to, sure in the knowledge that the clock will watch out for his other appointments.

Begging by Wireless.

The passengers on a thousand ocean steamers recently received on the same day a wireless appeal to help provide Braille books for the blind of Great Britain. The message, which was sent first to forty-five British steamers on the Atlantic and which by them was relayed to other vessels all over the world, was sent at the request of King George when he opened the new buildings of the National Institute For the Blind. Radiotelegraphy circling the globe instead of a subscription paper! What next? — Youth's Companion.

Broken Eggs.

Part of the high cost of eggs must be charged up to breakage at all seasons. The United States department of agriculture figures this at 7 per cent of the crop. In New York city there is a breakage of two dozen eggs in every thirty dozen cases. As 4,000,117 such egg crates were received in New York last year, this meant a loss of more than 9,300,000 dozen, considerably more than 110,000,000 eggs. At 2 cents apiece this figures $2,200,000 in broken eggs for New York city alone.

London's Ambulances.

London, which has never yet had an ambulance, has at last ordered six of them and expects them to do all the work for the entire city. In case of past accidents the policemen have had to commandeer the nearest wagon, depending on the generosity of the driver, as they were not able to offer him anything.

Fly Catches.

I never make a lot o' roars
If daddy works me hard;
But, gee, it sets me crazy,
And I'm mad enough to squall,

When the team plays ball!

I never make a single kick

That I have learned real good.

But my gladness takes a fall

The Grand Promoter

He Was Almost Out When Luck Turned

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1914, by Associated Literary Press.

It was almost a zero temperature in his office when the grand promoter got down there the other morning.

For half an hour he tried to build a fire with sawdust and an old derby hat, but it was no go.

If he went up to the dentist's office to get warm he would be dunned for $6 borrowed money.

That morning at the table the landlady had glared at him.

He must come down with the cash or skip.

He was played out at every free lunch place within a mile.

Never before in his career as a grand promoter and a grand deadbeat had he been so close to a desperate situation. He felt that he had been wronged. He felt that he was a victim to be pitied.

In a drawer of his three legged desk was an old revolver. He had bought it of a junkman for 15 cents, and he had made use of it to menace his clothes cleaner when that person came up and stood in the door and shouted out:

"You owe me $4, and if you don't pay him cop I shall have you in prison in two minits!"

A sight of the deadly pistol had always sent the cleaner downstairs on the jump and saved the major's dignity, but shouldn't it be used for a different purpose now?

The major placed the muzzle of the weapon to his ear and shuddered.

He opened his mouth, thrust the pistol into the cavity and sighed.

He held it against his heart and counted twenty and—didn't pull the trigger!

"No, no; I will live on!" he exclaimed as the pistol was replaced and he stood up.

"That's right, old rooster!" exclaimed a hearty voice at the door, and the major turned to behold a jolly faced stranger.

"What can I do for you, sir?"

"Give sympathy and help to a brother in trouble."

"Were you about to commit suicide?"

"I was."

"In hard luck?"

"The hardest kind."

"Don't do it, major. I came in here two months ago with only $3 left. I had determined to take a desperate chance—that is, to invest my last shilling with you. You sold me some silver stock at 3 cents on the dollar. You said it would soon be worth $0."

"But I was deceived," replied the major, who expected a blowing up.

"You mean you lied to me—lied like a trooper. But don't get nervous over it. I have called to thank you."

"You—you have!"

"Yes, sir. I have sold that stock at par!"

"And—and as I put you on to a good thing you have come to divide?"

"Nixy on the divide, major; just my thanks."

"But you have made thousands!" was wailed.

"Had to or bust."

"You ought to give me $1,000."

"I have to take a trip around the world."

"Say $500, then."

"I go to see about a castle on the Rhine, major. Ta, ta!"

Major Crowfoot's legs gave under him, but he wabbled to the desk and brought out that old revolver.

It should be death this time.

The grim grimmest of deaths.

He had had a fortune in his hands and let it go to another.

Hang on? Of what use when the world had given him the boot? No, he would not hang on. He would be found lead in his chair, and his suicide should lay heavy on the conscience of those who had picked on him and driven him to a rash act.

The major had the muzzle to his ear again and was wondering if it made any difference which ear received the fatal bullet when a woman's voice cried out:

"Hold, rash man—hold!"

"I will not!"

"You must!"

"I am ruined and can no longer face the world."

"Mrs. Crowfoot, don't you recognize my voice? Put down that threatening weapon and turn your face this way."

"My landlady!" he gasped as he obeyed her.

"Believe me!"

"But you gave me the cold glare this morning."

"I did and was sorry for it five minutes later. You owe me about $90, but should a landlady worthy of a name glare about a trifle like that?"

"But I can't pay it!" despairingly announced the major.

"No one asks you to. Room and board with me right along for the next two years and nothing will be said about the bill."

"Mrs. Clawhammer, you can't mean it!"

"That's the sort of a woman I am. And there will be porterhouse steak for you at every dinner."

"Am I alive or dead?"

"As lively as a cricket, major, and please take this $90 and use it as your best judgment dictates."

"I certainly am dead and in paradise."

"And come to dinner early, major, and change your seat to the head of the table."

And when she had departed the major kicked over the rusty old stove, broke the backs off the two chairs and flew down to a lunch place he knew of and ordered three pork sausages well done.

The mountain would not go to him, so Mahomet had to go to the mountain.

Trade is a mountain full of gold and treasure, but it will not come to the merchant who sits and waits for it. He must go to the mountain and when he gets there, he must dig for the treasure and work both to obtain and to hold it.

Advertising, intelligently handled, is the best means to get to the mountain, to unearth the treasure and to hold it, and newspaper advertising is the best and by far the cheapest when results are considered.

Six Reasons For Leaving His Party

Mr. A. B. Cunningham in a Rousing Speech at Norwood Shows Why He Cannot No Longer Support Sir James Whitney

CLEAVING PARTY TIES

At a rousing meeting in the interests of Mr. W. A. Anderson, Liberal candidate in East Peterborough, on Saturday night, the feature of the gathering was the speech of Mr. A. B. Cunnigham of Peterborough, a Conservative, who gave six reasons why he has left the Conservative party. Mr. G. A. Brethren, also a Conservative, presided, and the speakers, in addition to Mr. Cunningham, included Rev. J. R. Webb, Rev. R. Pogue and Rev. Mr. Lewis of Peterborough.

Mr. Cunninghom's address was as follows:

In this great campaign in which the mere party issue is secondary and the greatest social and moral question of the day is pre-eminent, when party ties are being severed, when conscience is cleaving asunder the party chain from the moral claim, when the great appeal of home and heart is being heard as never before, it is well that we brush aside the cobwebs of political habit, and face the issue as God means that real men should face it, not asking where will my party come out, but where will my God, my home, my country's interest stand in the great outcome.

In politics, I am a Conservative, but I hold that the safety of my home, the welfare of my country, the diving responsibility of parent and citizen present claims that must take precedence over any party call to allegiance or service. As a father, I would rather have the future approval of my boy and my conscience for a right stand at this time than the plaudits of a province on a mere party issue.

I wish to state a few reasons why I cannot support my party in this campaign:

1. The Whitney Government does not adequately protect my home.

2. It has flagrantly violated the fundamental rights of British citizenship by creating an inequality of franchise.

3. It has repeatedly ignored the people's mandate for advanced temperance legislation.

4. It is endorsed by the liquor traffic.

5. It is sailing under false colours by making false claims for the success of and sympathy with, temperance reform.

6. No promise of advance but indications of retrogression.

1st—In reply to the charge that the Whitney Government does not adequately protect my home, they point to civil law, sanitary laws, educational provisions, etc. These are all well so far as they go, but I say to them there is a traffic protected by law that menaces my home. In this Province alone its ghastly toll is 2,000 boys every year and this is only the actual death list. We stand horrified at an Empress disaster and demand at once investigation and provision for non recurrence, but here we have an Empress load going down every six months, year after year. My boy must run the gauntlet of that ghastly toll. What are you going to do about it? And the Government replies if the people vote to retain that traffic in the community we cannot interfere. But I say you have interfered and interefered on the wrong side; you have placed an unjust advantage in the hands of those who would make my boy a toll for the traffic, you have given them a fifty per cent. advantage over me, and it is an outrage, an injustice, a political crime for which I will not stand, and your only reply is if your boy goes wrong we have provided a prison farm at Guelph. I contend, if the Government will remove the source of supply (the bar and club) a 100-acre farm will be ample instead of an 800-acre farm, as at present, for nearly all the crimes commited by the prisoners of the prison farm are the direct result of the liquor traffic.

As a sane man I must leave my party on such grossly unjust proceedings.

MYSTERY IS CLEARED UP

Body of Farmer Missing Since November 5 Found by Dog in Bush Not Far From Home

HAD TAKEN POISON

Special Wire to The Examiner:

LONDON, Ont., June 22—The body of Donald McDonald, a prominent Bentinck farmer, who has been missing since November 5th, was discovered under the most gruesome circumstances to-day.

The family dog came into the house dragging a shoe containing the dead man's fot. Mrs. McDonald recognized the shoe and, taking it away from the animal and following the dog into the bush, came upon the body of her husband. It had been horribly mutilated. It is believed that the body was torn to pieces by either dogs or wild animals. In a tree, close by, a tin cup was hanging and it is supposed that McDonald committed suicide by drinking poison. At the time he went away search parties scoured the district but didn't find him.

TULIP TREE IS A NOVELTY

Mr .G. G. Gladman brought to the Examiner Office on Saturday a bloom from a tulip tree, said to be the only one in the city. This is the first bloom from the tree and it was planted 25 years ago. It takes this length of time for the tree to mature. It may be seen at Mr. Gladman's residence, 510 Dickson street. The bloom is tulip-shaped and the colours are light green and yellow, and are rather hard to distinguish on the tree, which is quite a size.

LORD MERSEY HAS HIGH PRAISE FOR THE CHATEAU

Lord Mersey, Chairman of the Commission which is inquiring into the recent St. Lawrence disaster, in an interview states that he was delighted with his visit to the Capital City of the Dominion. He said he could see nothing beautiful about New York.

"Surely the people do not think those skyscrapers are beautiful," said the distinguished jurist. "Why Ottawa is a much more attractive and beautiful place. Mr. Hasen took me for a drive all over the city and I was charmed with everything I saw. The Chateau Laurier is the very best hotel I have been in. It is both a credit to the City and to the Grand Trunk Railway."

AN APPRECIATION

The Territorial Headquarters Staff, on behalf of the Salvation Army in Canada, desire to express, through the Press, their deep and sincere appreciation of the numerous messages of sympathy and condolence received from comrades, friends, churches, societies and others. Since the event of the sinking of the S. S. Empress of Ireland, such messages have been conveyed by cable, telegram and letter from all parts of the world, and especially the Dominion of Canada.

It is our desire to let it be known that, particularly the assurances of prayer, have strengthened our hearts, have encouraged our confidence, and have stimulated our faith and further more, as the realization of the extent of our loss through this appalling catastrophe becomes keener day by day, the kind words of cheer and counsel will help us in our endeavours to carry on the great work of The Salvation Army in extending the Kingdom of God upon earth.

Conservative Authority For Big Keep-The-Bar Bribery Fund

OTTAWA, June 20.—The Ottawa Citizen, Conservative, gives prominence to-day to the following story of campaign contributions from the liquor interests to help defeat Mr. Rowell: "It is common gossip in the public places here, where politics is the prevailing topic for discussion, that not only are the local liquor interests, such as the hotelkeepers in Ottawa, contributing to a fund to be spent in an effort to defeat the 'abolish-the-bar' policy, but the owners of large whiskey distilleries in Great Britain are contributing $200,000 to the Conservative campaign fund, and a big round sum has been subscribed by the whiskey makers and wholesale dealers in both Canada and the United States."

Men interested in the liquor business here deny any knowledge of subscriptions to a fund to be spent to defeat Mr. Rowell and his supporters. One hotelman, however, admitted that an appeal had been circulated from the executive officers of the liquor men in Toronto asking for a subscription of $10,000 from Ottawa.

Examiner Special:

OTTAWA, Ont., June 22.—The Morning Citizen (Conservative), in replying to an editorial in the Evening Journal (Conservative), dealing with the bilingual issue, asserts that Mr. Rowell, the Liberal Leader in Ontario, has not promised to give the French Canadians any more bilingual rights than they now enjoy.

CHORAL SOCIETY

The members of the Executive committee of the Peterborough Choral Society are asked to be on hand at Coleman's parlours to-morrow (Tuesday) night at 9 p.m. prompt, to arrange for the moonlight trip per Str. 57TH REGIMENT OFF TO CAMP

Early yesterday morning the 57th Regiment, about two hundred and seventy strong, entrained for their annual camp which is being held this year at Petawawa. Last week in the advance guard there were thirty men, so that in all there are over three hundred members of the 57th Regiment representing this City at the Petawawa Camp. The band was about twenty-five strong and the Regiment had practically a full complement of officers. The men were in the best of spirits and anticipated a good outing, as well as a good drilling in military manoeuvres, at the camp. They will return next Thursday morning. The Regiment is in charge of Col. Clegg, Majors Mills and Hastwood. Capts. W. H. Clinton, R. T. Hounsell, A. P. McLean, R. P. Watt, A. W. MacPherson, W. Langford, W. R. G. Higgins and A. G. Carruthers.

G. A. GILLESPIE
Liberal Candidate in West Peterborough.

On Saturday, June 6, I gave the Temperance Associations a signed statement that if elected I would vote with either political party on every possible occasion for the abolition of the 1,300 bars, 215 shop, and 56 club licenses in Ontario. I repeated this statement in my Opera House address June 10. Furthermore, if I ever get the opportunity I will vote to prevent the manufacture of liquor. I ask for your support and influence.

Young Railway Man Drops Dead on Sidewalk When Walking to His Engine

Trainmen from Belleville brought the news this morning of the sad death of Fireman Jones, working on the Belleville-Bowmanville route.

The young railwayman, who apparently enjoyed the best of health, was called out at an early hour this morning to work on the No.5 train. While walking from his boarding house in Belleville to his engine he fell on the sidewalk and expired almost immediately.

The fact that his wife was expected to arrive from England last week renders the occurrence the more lamentable.

Straight Fight In North Oxford

Independent Conservative Will Not Be a Candidate

Special Wire to The Examiner:

WOODSTOCK, Ont., June 22. — The contest in the North Oxford riding will be a straight fight between N. W. Rowell, leader of the Opposition, and R. E. Butler, a lumberman, the Conservative nominee. Mr. Robert Lockhart, a farmer, living near Innerkip, who had declared that he would be a candidate as an independent Conservative farmer, to-day decided not to run. It is admitted by both sides here that the contest between Mr. Rowell and Mr. Butler will be very close. Mr. Butler is the strongest man who could be brought out by the Conservatives.

BODY OF MISSING MAN FOUND IN WELL

Special Wire to The Examiner:

WAINWRIGHT, Alta., June 22.—The body of W. B. Crawford, well-known real estate man, who disappeared May 14th, was found in a well completely buried with earth and rubbish. He was undoubtedly murdered and thrown head first into the well which contained sixteen feet of water.

INQUEST INTO DEATH OF DIVER

Special Wire to The Examiner:

RIMOUSKI, Que., June 22.—The inquest into the death of Edward Sossaboom, the diver employed by the Yankee Company, of New York, to recover bodies from the Empress of Ireland, opened this morning, and after the evidence of several witnesses had been obtained, was adjourned until Thursday night. The principal point brought out was that Sossaboom, confused by the fall, must have turned his air valve the wrong way, and in his efforts to obtain relief, must have twisted the handle completely off, thus cutting off his air beyond relief. Asphyxiation followed.

Just what effect this accident will have on the work has not yet been decided. First Lieutenant Forbes, of the Essex, will arrive this afternoon and will probably advise as to the wisdom of men from the cruiser continuing the dangerous work. Ships will not go out to-day, however.

THE BAR ROOM IS THE SCHOOL OF VICE SAID PASTOR

Rev. J. J. O'Brien in Announcing Formation of T.A.S. Cadets Uses Strong Terms Against the Liquor Traffic

SCHOOL BOYS ORGANIZED

The Total Abstinence Society in connection with the Church of the Sacred Heart extended its membership yesterday to the boys of the Lake Street School by the formation of the T.A.S. Cadets. A few of the senior boys were old enough to join the adult society, but the rest have been deemed too young, and in order to implant in them the spirit of total abstinence as early as possible, the new society was established on Sunday afternoon. The little chaps met at the school and marched to the church, where the adult members awaited them on the steps, forming a lane, through which the boys passed. Rev. J. J. O'Brien addressed the boys, who promised to abstain from intoxicating beverages for life, and to receive holy communion four times a year for the intention of their own faithfulness and that of the senior members to their pledges. Father O'Brien pointed out that the prayers of the boys were needed for themselves and for the men that they might have divine assistance to aid them against the temptations of the traffic. Each boy was presented with a badge to be worn by him approaching holy communion.

In announcing the establishment of the Cadets, Rev. J. J. O'Brien, pastor of the Sacred Heart Church, spoke in the strongest condemnatory terms of the liquor traffic and what it stands for. The bar-room, he said, was the schoolroom of foul language and vice. The drink was at the root of immorality, domestic infelicity and other grimes. It transformed man into a brute; in fact it reduced him to a lower standard than that of the brute. The drunken man had no heart for his wife, his children and his home. His better nature was dragged with the stuff he had drunk, leaving his animal appetites in full control and craving satiation. The formation of the Cadets was to instill, the boys of tender years with a deep aversion and abhorrence for the bar. Thus, by teaching them early, they are carried on into the senior society, and are strengthened when they go out against the temptations that are bound to be presented to them. Some people say that men will drink anyway. They may drink after they have formed the habit and acquired the habit, Rev. Father O'Brien stated, but if they grow up free from the habit and taste, if they have no desire for the stuff, but an aversion against it they will not want to drink.

The time will come in the near future when the drinking man will be regarded as a monstrosity. He is a monster in the sight of God, and he is becoming an oddity in the eyes of man. But in order to take no chances with the liquor traffic, and especially the barroom, the T.A.S. Cadets would be organized to prepare the boys to become sober men, that the parish of the Sacred Heart may soon become marked for sobriety.

LADIES' DAY TO-MORROW

Tuesday will be ladies' day at Riverside Park for the game with Brantford. The ladies are reminded of the change in the opening hour. The game begins at 4.15.

STREET MUSICIANS ARE HERE AGAIN

The Neapolitan orchestra of New York City, is in town, dispensing sweet music in the street. This musical organization, under the direction of Ernest Sabatelli, has been coming to Peterborough every summer for the past three or four years, and their concerts are much enjoyed by the citizens who assemble in little crowds wherever the musicians are playing. Their repertoire is an extensive one and includes all the latest popular airs. This evening the quartette is playing at the dance at the pavilion at the end of the street railway line.

Nomination Day All Over Province

One of the Warmest Elections ever Held in Canada's Largest English Speaking Provinces.

A FIGHT EVERYWHERE

TORONTO, June 22—This is nomination day in one hundred and eleven constituencies throughout the Province of Ontario—nomination day in the midst of one of the warmest elections ever held in Canada's largest English speaking Province.

From the social reform standpoint the issues of this election are more pronounced than those of any previous Provincial election. The Liberal-Temperance coalition party are out with their "abolish the bar" slogan, and the Conservative "Government" forces point to their record of legislation curtailing the liquor traffic, and ask why abolish the bars and have the licensed liquor shops and clubs."

This issue has naturally brought the churches and moral reformers strongly into the fight.

At least half a dozen pastors in active Church work will be nominated in various Ontario constituencies to-day to oppose the straight Conservative government members at the polls.

Much interest is taken in Tory Toronto, which will have ten seats in the new Legislature, but where the temperance and Church forces are unusually strong. Toronto's members in the last Legislature were all Conservatives.

The nominations took place in all the constituencies between noon and 2 o'clock all over the Province. There will likely be a fight in every constituency.

Havelock Man Claims Rent of Farm From Chas. Dewey—Case is Now Proceeding

COUNTER CLAIMS ENTERED

In County Court this afternoon and this morning the case was argued of Munro vs. Dewey. In this action Daniel Munro of Havelock, the plaintiff, is suing for $225 alleged to be due him as rent of his farm, which has been occupied since his removal from it, by the defendant, Chas. Dewey. The defendant counter-claims for impoverished soil, and failure on the part of the plaintiff to give over cattle and other live stock in accordance with the agreement made between the parties when the plaintiff left the farm.

Much evidence was heard by His Honour Judge Ruycke, to-day, and the case was still proceeding when the Examiner went to press this afternoon. Mr. G. N. Gordon is acting for the plaintiff and Mr. E. L. Goodwill for the defendant.

PEACE DELEGATES TRY ONCE MORE

Special Wire to The Examiner:

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., June 22. —In the hope that there may yet be a chance to continue negotiations for a peaceful settlement of difficulties between United States and Mexico, A.B.C. mediators met this afternoon and had further conferences with United States and Mexican delegates. The crux of the situation still hinges on determination of the United States Government to practically dictate who shall be the provisional President of Mexico.

AD CLUB DELEGATES DOWN TO BUSINESS

Special Wire to The Examiner:

TORONTO, June 22.—After being officially welcomed by Sir John Gibson, Lieutenant-Governor of the Province, and Mayor Hocken, of Toronto, the delegates to the Great Advertising Clubs Convention to-day settled down to business. There was a good deal of technical business discussed and various prizes awarded for essays on salesmanship and advertising. One great feature of this convention is the number of ladies among the delegates and the tremendous part they take in the proceedings.

Choice butcher cattle, $8.25 to $8.40; good, medium, $8 to $8.15; choice fat cows, $6.50 to $7; good veal calves, $8.50 to $10; hogs, fat, $7.85, $7.50 f.o.b., $8.10 to $8.20 off cars. COURT ADJOURNS TO RECEIVE DUKE

Special Wire to The Examiner:

COURT HOUSE, QUEBEC, June 22.—When the inquiry was resumed this morning, Lord Mersey announced that the Court would adjourn at 11 o'clock to-day for an official reception to the Duke of Connaught.

Elmer Reinerts, the Second Officer of the Storstad, was called into the box and said he was awakened by the jar and rushed out. He noticed that the Empress was going fast. Lord Mersey—"Am I to understand that that was after the impact?"

Witness—"Yes."

CRITICIZES LIST OF BIRTH DAY HONOURS

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, June 22.—The Daily Express comes out strongly against the list of names on the King's birthday honours. The list is only redeemed, says the Express "by the Earldom conferred upon Lord Kitchener, and that of "Grand Commander of the Order of St. Michael and St. George,' granted the Right Hon. R. L. Borden." The Express thinks that the latter honour is a very proper recognition of the worth of true statesmanship.

Mr. Soden's Queer Temperance Views

There are in Ontario:
Hotel Licenses	1300
Club Licenses	56
Total	1356
Shop Licenses	215
Grand Total	1573

Mr. N. W. Rowell says: "My policy means:

"Hotel Liquor Licenses: Every One Wiped Out.

"Club Liquor Licenses: Every One Wiped Out.

"Treating System: Abolished.

"Shops—

"1st—Will come under further restrictions.

"2nd—Can be wiped out by Local Option on a majority vote where the electors so decide.

"3rd—Shop licenses cannot be issued in the place of bar licenses abolished."

Thus Mr. Rowell's policy will wipe out 1356 licenses at one crack. It will also make it easy to wipe out the remaining 215 licenses. A campaign to wipe out the three shop licenses in Peterborough will be launched within a year.

WHAT MR. SODEN SAYS.

Mr. Soden says:—"I am for the abolition of the shops as well as bars and clubs and regard Rowell's policy as even more dangerous to true temperance than the present arrangement."—Telegram to Toronto Daily Star, June 13, 1914.

In other words, Mr. Soden claims that there will be more drinking in 215 shops under Mr. Rowell's policy, supposing they were not wiped out by a majority vote, than there is now in the same 215 shops, 56 clubs, and 1,300 bars. Total 1,573.

Furthermore: Mr. Soden does not believe in making it easy for the people to wipe out only the these 1,573 licenses because he believes in the three-fifths handicap. In his speech at Young's Point, June 13, 1914, he said: "I say the three-fifths clause is the best thing that ever happened to the country."

Mr. Gillespie favours reducing licenses, until we have only 215 shops, these to be wiped out on a straight majority vote. He will vote in the legislature to have these wiped out.

Mr. Soden prefers existing conditions with the same 215 shops, plus 56 clubs, plus 1,300 hotel licenses. Total 1,573. These to be wiped out only by a three-fifths handicap which has blocked us twice in Peterborough.

VOTE FOR GILLESPIE.

CONGRATULATIONS.

The Examiner congratulates Hon. Adam Beck on being selected for the honour of knighthood, and Rt. Hon. Sir Robert Borden to to be congratulated as well, on his own decoration, as having recommended a worthy Ontarian for distinction, which he has earned by faithful and persistent and energetic work in the interests of the people. There is much more merit in knighting a "live wire," who has tydro-electrified a considerable portion of the Province to its advantage than in honouring men who have done nothing particular outside of party service to deserve it. Congratulations Sir Robert and Sir Adam. While a handle to your names won't make you any better men either in a private or public capacity, or raise you any higher in the esteem of "our member," a pat on the back, represented by the royal accolade, is a well-deserved mark of approval, and an encouragement to continue good service to the Dominion and Province.

THE QUESTION OF THE 29TH.

The question, involving the answer to be given at the ballot box on June 29th, is involved in this question: Which of the two present candidates in West Peterborough is backed by the liquor interests. Should the man who has the support of the liquor trade in West Peterborough have the votes of temperance men? Ask an answer this question of your own soul-conscience, not of your party conscience. The elector and his accountability to his fellow men and to moral interests should be influenced by a far higher consideration than the interest of any party, which is comparatively only a thing of a day, whose triumph is only justified when that triumph represents the promotion of the highest interest of the state—the moral and social welfare of the people. High or low money taxation is as nothing to the form of taxation that takes its toll in the shape of debauching the head of the home, cursing the home and its happiness, and lowering the level of life in the community.

PROTESTING TOO MUCH.

Mr. Soden is claiming the support of the temperance element on the ground that he is a better temperance man than Mr. Gillespie. He may be a better horse in his own opinion, but he is entered for the wrong race. He is not the temperance nag, but the licensed victualers entry. He is the candidate of a keep-the-bar government, and Mr. Gillespie is the candidate for an abolish-the-bar leader.

If Mr. Rowell is returned, and Mr. Gillespie is elected he will get a chance to vote for abolition of the bar and he will vote for it. He is pledged to vote for it, and Mr. Gillespit's bitterest opponent will not say that he will not keep his word to the letter.

More: Mr. Gillespie pledges himself to support the utter extinction of all liquor traffic—bar, club and shop licenses. He will vote as he publicly declared in the Opera House on Thursday night last, for any government that introduces legislation to carry any feature of the measures necessary to abolish the traffic as far as provincial authority extends.

Here Mr. Gillespie is ahead of Mr. Soden in regard to his temperance position. Mr. Soden says he MAY vote for any or all forms of license extinction. His stand on the question may be judged from the report of his Opera House utterance, on June 11th, printed in the Review, his newspaper organ, on June 12th, as follows:

> "To the extent of my own vote and my own influence I MAY work towards the end we have in view."

And more. Mr. Soden "MAY work"—he could have been more positive and said I WON'T "work for the end we have in view"; for he won't get any chance to vote for any advanced temperance measure, if the Government is returned. The Hanna-Foy Government is seeking renewal of public confidence on the policy of keep-the-bar, and keep-the-club and shop licenses too. Mr. Soden has approved of the three-fifths local option clause, which has operated to keep open 1,200 bars that would have been closed under the Rowell local option provision of a simple majority vote.

And more still. There is proof positive that Mr. Soden, WILL NOT vote for the abolition of the bar or shop or club licenses. He is supporting a government that is pledged to the policy of keeping them all, in the interests of the liquor traffic.

If Mr. Soden is such a staunch advocate of advanced temperance measures; if the government he supports has done so much for temperance, why is it that the full strength of the liquor traffic, the liquor vote and liquor money, are solidly behind Mr. Soden, and other candidates of the Government?

Weak-kneed temperance people, who may want an excuse to throttle their conscience and vote party, may profess to believe that Mr. Soden is sincere in his temperance professions, but they are more credulous than the liquor traffic. The liquor traffic doesn't believe him; for it will range itself solidly behind him as it ranges itself solidly behind the Government.

The liquor interests, will not only poll a solid vote for Soden and the Government, but it will pour out money like it pours out strong drink, to influence others to vote for it.

The money paid over the licensed bar and belonging to the children and wives of its victims, or the orphans and widows it has made, will be used to pauperize more children and wives, and make more widows and orphans. Will any temperance voter help it—help in the good work?

We have not the authority of any biassed "Grit" sheet, but the authority of one of the oldest, most influential Conservative journals in Ontario, the Ottawa Citizen, that a big bribery fund is being collected by the liquor interests to be used to defeat the Rowell abolish-the-bar policy. An extract from the Citizen appears in another column. Please read it.

It should be read by every temperance elector. It may help him to decide on which side he stands; whether on the side of temperance and wipe out the bar, or on the side of the traffic he has so long hoped to see abolished.

Mr. Soden is working hard to get the votes of temperance people as well as the votes of the liquor traffic, which is solidly standing behind him in his heroic attempts to destroy its business.

Mr. Soden has a signed statement in this issue. He again makes more temperance profession. The most he can promise is that if elected he will > "move in the Legislature for the abolition of the liquor traffic in every form, and I willi nvite and compel all those of BOTH political parties to show their hand."

This declaration amply justifies a charge of "quibbling." It is the most miserable quibbling. Mr. Soden will "move for the abolition of the liquor traffic in every form." Two forms included in "every form" are manufacture and importation, something over which the Legislature has no control and his omnibus motion he so bravely promises, will be treated as buncombe and be ruled out of order by Mr. Speaker. Mr. Soden protests and promises too much.

The place and time for both parties to "show their hands" is now—in this election contest.

Those of both parties who want the bar abolished and temperance legislation enacted to the limit of provincial jurisdiction, must "show their hand now" and vote either against, or with and for, the liquor traffic. There is no riddle way. The issue is either strong drink, or the abolition of strong drink. Mr. Soden has the support of the strong drink party, and Mr. Gillespie the support of those desiring the abolition of strong drink. The choice is not hard to make. The wayfaring elector though a fool need not err.

Ontario Elections, 1914

The Name and Address of the Official Agent appointed by George A. Gillespie, a candidate at the Election for the West Riding of the County of Peterborough, are E. L. Goodwill, Barrister, of 309 Boswell Avenue, Peterborough.

Peterboro', 22nd June, 1914.

ground of permanent suppression of the liquor traffic, and the traffic shouts, Amen. Who ever heard of temperance legislation and the liquor trade uniting on a plan to exterminate the traffic. Thi sendorsation in itself proves the falsity and hypocrisy of the claim.

But, apart from this it ands the fact that the Government violates the first principles of British freedom and British rights when it confers greater voting power on one class of the community with the consequent resultof special rights and special privileges secured by minority rule.

In addition to this it imposes an unjust hindrance to license abolition by the people. Whitney, in his manifesto, declares the people must say banish the bar and then endorses Pharsoh legislation to prevent them doing so. The record of this clause is our own condemnation in our own City—two defeats in spite of 500 majority; over 100 municipalities in the Province wronged. The fruits of victory desired them. Over 400 bars retained against the people's will and vote. How can a temperance man stay with a party guilty of such procedure and responsible for such results.

3rd—The Government ignores the people's mandate for advanced legislation; lauds its forty amendments to the license law and with "Little Jack Horner" complacently calls its regime good. The temperance voters of this Province did not elect that Government merely to tinker up an old machine, but to create a new one adequate for present needs.

The Government stands to-day as the Ross Government stood nine years ago, guilty of criminal tardiness, guilty of deceptive handicap, unworthy the confidence of a pro gressive people. It has forfeited its right to rule and as we dealt with the Rosse Government so must we deal with the Whitney administration.

4.—Time will not permit me to dwell at length on the Government sailing under false colours, claiming credit for progress that has been made in spite of its three-fifths obstruction, claiming credit for temperance victories when not a member of the Government ever appeared on the public platform in their favour. Mr. Rowell has repeatedly done so and challenged their cooperation.

5th.—Their alliance with liquor interests is reaffirmed by such evidence as the Doughty and Snider incidents, campaign literature furnished by liquor interests, etc.

6.—As final evidence of its unfitness to legislate further, is its absolute silence in regard to future legislation, and even the ludicrous anti-treating law is referred to Hon. J. Duff's belittlement of the temperance issue at the Conservative meeting in the Opera House, may be taken as the real Government view of the present situation.

"On the foregoing counts and many others (false maps, etc.) there is only one course for temperance Conservatives to pursue; that is, place party in the back ground until some drastic house-cleaning is done and vote to protect the boy, the home, and the country by abolishing the bar. We can say, like the brave Captain of the Empress, "we did not leave the ship, the ship left us"; she was rammed by the deadly liquor interests.

APPLE CROP

Prospects are good for a bumper crop of apples in Canada. Reports from all the provinces indicate that the bloom will be heavy. Conditions in the United States are similar. B. J. Case, Sodus, N.Y., a recognized authority on all subjects that pertain to fruit in Western New York, in a recent interview, said:

"If present signs don't fail there will be the biggest apple crop this season since 1906, and first class apples will sell at $2 a barrel. That is about all growers ought to get for apples anyway. Apples ought to sell for a price that make them a staple article of trade, not a luxury. The way to develop the apple business is to produce them at a price within the reach of everyone. That's the way they develop any big business."

As to the likelihood of overdoing the apple market, when young orchards come into bearing, Mr. Case said: "It surprises me to learn that statistics compiled in connection with the census of 1910, relating to apple orchards, gave a falling off of many millions of bearing trees since 1900. I suppose it is to be accounted for by the fact that thousands of acres of old orchards have failed within 10 years. Just because some man gets enthusiastic and sets out fifteen or twenty acres to orchard, it doesn't follow that the trees will come into bearing. The apple has too many enemies and there are a lot of fellows who start strong and finish weak."

THE TEMPERANCE ISSUE

HOW THE TWO CANDIDATES STAND

MR. GILLESPIE'S STAND.

"I am in favour of the abolition of the three-fifths clause. I will vote with either political party for its abolition and favour a straight majority vote on very possible occasion in the Legislature. I will vote with either political party on every possible occasion for the abolition of the open bar, club licenses, shop licenses, and all other legislation looking for the restriction and abolition of the Liquor Traffic."—From statement of policy printed and issued to the public.

The following questions were asked Mr. Gillespie by the Temperance Associations on June 6, 1914. His replies, which were furnished in a signed statement, are here given:

Q. Are you in favour of the abolition of the three-fifths handicap?
A. "Yes."

Will you vote with either political party for its abolition and favour a straight majority vote on ever possible occasion in the Legislature?
A. "Yes."

Q. Will you vote with either political party on every possible occasion for,
(a) The abolition of the open bar.
A. "Yes."
(b) Club Licenses.—"Yes."
(c) Shop Licenses.—"Yes."
(d) And all other legislation looking for the restriction and abolition of the liquor traffic.
A. "Yes."

MR. SODEN'S STAND.

"I believe in the abolition of the bar and the shop and the club licenses, and will allow no person to dictate to me as to how I shall vote on these matters." — From signed statement given to the Temperance Association June 6, 1914.

"I am for the abolition of the shops as well as bars, and clubs, and regard Rowell's policy as even more dangerous to true temperance than the present arrangement."—From telegram to Toronto Daily Star, June 13, 1914.

"I will never cast another vote for the Whitney Government as long as it ret the three-fifths handicap on the statute books."—From speech to Temperance workers after the defeat of local option, Jan. 3rd, 1913.

"I say the three-fifths clause is the best thing that ever happened to the country." — From speech at Young's Point, June 16, 1914.

"To the extent of my own vote and my own influence, if returned I MAY work towards the end that we desire."—From report in Daily Review, June 12, of Mr. Soden's Opera House speech.

Mr. Gillespie says how he will vote. Mr. Soden does in private. In public he says he may. Why? Vote for Gillespie. He will do what he promises.

MR. SODEN AND THE SCHOOL BOOK MONOPOLY MATTER

Editor, Examiner:

Dear Sir,—I see in the Review, under Mr. Soden's picture, a statement that the Whitney government broke up the School Book Trust and saved a lot of money for the people of the province. It is true the School Book Trust was broken, but was it the Whitney government, or was it dissatisfaction in their own ranks? If it was the former, it is the only trust that has been broken up during the Whitney regime. But let us look into this school book question a little closer and see what is the reason that school books are being produced at less money than any publisher in the Dominion of Canada could publish them. There certainly must be some reason for that, as no publisher is likely to be fool enough to manufacture books at less than cost. Well, here are some of the reasons:

The school text book contract was given to a big retail mail order store in Toronto, who has the privilege of putting their advertisement on each book twice in the from of the name of their company and address.

What is such monopolised advertising worth in our school books for ten years?

How many thousands of dollars would such companies as the Gilbert Safety Razor Co., or our own Quaker Oats Co. pay for such a high privilege as the T. Eaton Co. got?

Then we must not forget that the government spent thousands of dollars purchasing the plates to give to the Eaton Co., so that they had nothing to do but start the machinery and see that their advertisement appeared twice on each book.

Then again this same retail store was given the privilege of supplying these books at 20 p.c. less than any other dealer. What an inducement for people to send to Eaton's for their books and at the same time purchase all their other supplies, thereby killing the trade of our villages, towns and cities throughout Ontario and building up big Toronto. What a thing to boast about, and a funny thing about it is that when that contract was given the present Conservative candidate, Mr. Soden, remarked that he would never vote Conservative again as long as he lived.

"Oh politics, how long shall we remember?" This one subject alone brought forth scathing remarks from Mr. Soden for any government to do such a thing. Yet he says, "If you approve of this, vote for Soden."

No wonder the temperance people asked him to sign a document. But he was too cute to be caught that way, so that he is now out in this community like a ship without a rudder, blown by every wind.

President Wilson of the United States said, "Nothing worth while ever happened till a large number of men kicked." How many will there be in that large crowd that are going to kick the iniquitous bar room right out of Ontario on June 29th?

Fighting for Christian principles is the greatest sport the world ever knew. If that be true, forget party politics, be the right kind of a sport and vote for that principle.

Yours truy,
NON-PARTISAN.

LEASING FARMS

H. Percy Blanchard, Hants Co., N.S.

The late discussion of different methods of leasing farms reminded me of an old English law book in which is given a form of lease as used in the Old Country. The exactness with which each item required or forbidden is detailed should almost compel the tenant to farm properly. I wont attempt to copy it, for the form covers pages; but a brief abstract might be interesting.

After the formal setting out of the parties to the contract, the lands demised, the rent reserved, and the term of tenancy, are requirements that tenants must pay all rates and taxes, must reside in the farm house and not sub-let it. He must keep buildings in repair, paint exteriors every five years and interiors every seven years. He must also at proper times lay out and keep repaired hedges and fences, scour and keep clean all ditches and keep buildings insured. If the landlord expends money on permanent improvements, tenant must pay five per cent per annum on outlay as extra rent. Then comes a very detailed five-year rotation, which specifies each crop and its proportion.

All the produce must be "eaten off on the land," and should tenant sell any straw he must put on land in its place three tons of manure to every ton of straw. He is forbidden to grow two "white" crops in succession on same land, or to "mow any of the meadow or pasture land more than once in the year, or two years in succession." He is also forbidden to plow up any of the meadow.

Then comes a clause as to crops grown during the last year of tenancy which must be left on the premises and be paid for by the landlord on a basis of valuation. Detailed items of the crops and proportions for each of the last four years of tenancy are set out; in order no doubt that a new tenant may enter and take hold of the farm as a "running concern."

In England they are very particular about their meadows; and some are pointed out that have not been plowed for the past 500 years. The mild climate doubtless accounts for the fact that the sod survives the winter. As many as 20 varieties of grasses and clovers have been found growing together. A year now and again without being mowed, and a liberal use of fine rotted top dressing, preserve indefinitely these beautiful meadows luxuriantly green. I am afraid it would be hard for us to keep the mowing machine off of them when the odd year of rest comes round.

THE CHINCH BUG

During the last 60 years the ravages of the chinch bug in the United States have cost that country $360,000,000. No very serious outbreaks have as yet occurred in Canada but the insect has established itself in Middlesex Co., Ont., and has also been reported from Nova Scotia. "The Chinch Bug in Ontario," a circular recently gotten out by the Experimental Farms Branch, is therefore a timely one in that it discusses methods to be adopted to stop the ravages of his bug. This circular may be had on application to the Publications Branch at Ottawa.

STAY ON THE FARM

Albert Hensall, New Westminster Dist., B.C.

Prices of farm produce are high. The cost of living is higher. In this condition of affairs we have the birth of the "back-to-the-farm" movement. The movement is being vigorously pushed by city editors, college professors, and journalistic writers. I am none of these. I am a farmer, and I have a suggestion to make to some of these "back-to-the-farm" boosters.

Isn't it strange that it has not occurred to some of these philanthropists that a "stay-on-the-farm" movement would accomplish the same purpose as a "back-to-the-farm" movement. It would tend to stop the growing congestion of cities and to increase the production of foodstuffs. We are told that every province in Eastern Canada is losing in rural population except Quebec; that in Ontario the rural population has declined 100,000 in the last 10 years. In my own province of British Columbia agriculture is not making the development that it should. If all of these people who have left the farm in the last 10 years were still on the farm as producers, wouldn't it be much more to the point than to have their places taken by city people who are not "to the manner born," and who would only in exceptional cases make as good farmers as the boys and girls who are leaving?

I wish to state myself an advocate of a "stay-on-the-farm" movement. Shorter hours of labor, greater opportunities for social intercourse, and adequate returns for their labor will be the factors that will keep our boys on the farm. The last factor I record as the important one. We farmers for the most part have not conveniences in the house and an eight-hour day for our sons and hired men, because both of these are luxuries we cannot afford. Give us the adequate returns and we will soon get the other requisites to a well-rounded and pleasurable country life. If we cannot do this then both "stay-on-the-farm" and "back-to-the-farm" movements are foredoomed to failure.

THE EARLY FLY

"The early fly's the one to swat. It comes before the weather's hot, and eats around and flies its legs, and lays at least ten million eggs, and every egg will bring a fly to drive us crazy by and by. Oh, every fly that skips our swatters will have five million sons and daughters, and countless first and second cousins, and aunts and uncles, scores of dozens, and fifty-seven billion nieces, so knock the blamed thing all to pieces. And every niece and every aunt—unless we swat them so they can't—will lay enough dodgasted eggs to fill up ten five-gallon kegs, and all these eggs, ere summer dies, will bring forth twenty billion flies. And thus it goes on endless chain, so all our swatting is in vain, unless we do that swatting soon in Maytime and in early June. So, men and brothers, let us rise, gird up our loins and swat the flies! And sister, leave your cosy bowers, where you have wasted golden hours; with ardor in your souls and eyes, roll up your sleeves and swat the flies!—Walt Mason.

The most important development noted in Fruit Crop Report No. 1, from the Dominion Department of Agriculture, is a severe frost which occurred in the Maritime provinces June 3 and 4. This frost will seriously reduce the apple crop in the Annapolis Valley. In Ontario tent caterpillar has reduced the crop in some sections, but on the whole the yield will be a very satisfactory one. In British Columbia a crop well above average will be harvested. Pears will be a light crop everywhere but in British Columbia. Plums too have a light setting, British Columbia alone reporting favorable conditions.

The peach crop in Ontario is a total failure. In British Columbia reports are not so favorable as those received earlier, and in the Kootenay Valley the crop is a failure. Cherries will be a bumper crop in the Niagara district, and in the southern and western counties of Ontario. Winter injury has seriously reduced the crop in Eastern Ontario. Prospects are for a practically full crop from Nova Scotia and a fair crop in British Columbia.

HOW TO THINK.

(By Dr. Frank Crane.)

The one thing everybody thinks he can do and the one thing extremely few in fact can do is to think.

Most of our thinking is nothing but crude fancy. It is not the result of reason, but of imagination.

Hence a few rules for real thinking may not come amiss.

The commonest bar to correct thought is egotism. One who is not anxious and willing to learn, from anybody at any time, is hopeless. Genuine humility of mind is absolutely essential.

You can have an honest opinion of but few things. Upon most matters you must be content to suspend judgment. The opinions of a man who has a positive notion on every subject mentioned are of no value. The wiser you become the more you realize that the sum of your ignorance will always infinitely outweigh the sum of your knowledge.

The honest mind is the one which sees clearly what it does not and cannot know and declines to declare judgment.

Beware of believing a thing simply because it cannot be disproved. The fakers of the world thrive on people who say, "There may be something in it. You can't disprove it."

Your moods unconsciously influence your thoughts. No one can say that his judgment is wholly unmoved by his feeling. The thing to do, then, is not to attempt the impossible accuracy of thought unswayed by passion, but it is carefully to select those moods and emotions which your intelligence says are best. Allow these to affect you. Banish others.

Feelings are the invisible masters of thought; choose your masters!

If you do this you will not need to allow yourself to be hypnotized by some system of statements without probable facts.

Real religion, which is a trust in goodness, a reverence for greatness and a recognition of the binding nature of the higher emotions, is not only not inconsistent with clear thought but is necessary.

Allow no authority to coerce your opinion. Honest opinion is as automatic as a machine. It is determined by the weight of evidence. If you allow any man, party or institution to tip the scales for you, your opinion is of no value.

Never allow your judgment to be forced by expediency; that is, never adopt an opinion because it is safe, because it is useful or because it may "help" others. You may perform acts because they are expedient; but not form opinions. It is like being a judge. Consider only one point—what is the truth?

The minute anything except truth influences the mind, that minute you become intellectually dishonest. And there are hordes of people, intensely moral in other ways, who are frankly unethical in thought. They even boast of thinking and believing statements and of not understanding them in the least.

There are many things in the realm of beauty and sentiment you can entertain, and they will do you good, provided you are careful to say you fancy so and so, and not that you know it or believe it.

A good way to clear up a subject that is confused in your thought is to write down succinctly the various things that occur to you about it; then go over your written sentences and see how much is true and how much is fancy.

Respect other people's opinions, but do not adopt them unless they make good in your own mind.

Keep your judgment clean. Train it by relying on it and following it. Remember that you are only responsible for that which convinces you that it is thet ruth. Learn from all, listen to all, but be your own judge and master; only so can you attain to that highest of virtues, and scarcest, intellectual beauty.

Aunt Sally's Advice to Beauty Seekers

A. O. F. asks: "What should I do for my sallow complexion, and how can I get rid of my wrinkles?"

Sallowness is best removed by removing the skin itself. This is effectually accomplished by the use of ordinary mercolized wax, which causes the offensive outer skin gradually to peel off, in fine particles scarcely noticeable to the naked eye. Within a week or so you will have an enviable complexion, the new skin exhibiting a healthful, youthful tint incomparable with artificial colourings. Get an ounce of this wax at your druggists, apply at night like cold cream, only don't rub it in. Wash it off in the morning with warm water.

For your wrinkles try a solution of powdered saxolite, 1 oz., dissolved in ½ pint witch hazel. Bathe your face in this every morning for a while. The result will surprise you.—Beauty's Mirror.

DECORATION DAY WAS FITTINGLY OBSERVED

Oddfellows Carry Out Their Beautiful Custom of Decorating the Graves of Their Departed Brethren---Addresses Given at the Cemetery.

Yesterday afternoon the Independent Order of Oddfellows observed their annual Decoration Day at 2.30. The members of the Peterborough Lodge, No. 111 and the Otonabee Lodge, No. 13, assembled at the Oddfellows Hall and, marshalled by Col. Miller, and headed by the Maple Leaf Band, marched in procession to the Little Lake Cemetery. If the number was not so large as the Order is capable of assembling, it was only because some of them were with their Regiments at camp. Nevertheless the attendance was good and the procession was considerably augmented by automobiles and carriages. Among those present were Mayor Buller, Rev. Robt. Pogue, Rev. H. J. Keith, and Rev. E. A. Grobb, Aldermen G. A. Gillespie and W. J. Johnston and City Solicitor G. N. Gordon.

Arriving at the cemetery the Band played the hymn "Nearer My God to Thee," after which Mr. G. A. McDonald addressed the gathering in the following terms:

My Brethren,—I need scarcely say that I consider myself greatly honoured by the brother Oddfellows of Peterborough, in being asked to address you on the day when annually we assemble for the purpose of decorating the graves of our departed brethren. On this peaceful Sabbath day, amid these surroundings, which Nature and the care of man have made beautiful, and yet, "Where heaves the turf in many a mouldering heap" and where on all sides we behold as emblems of mortality, these monuments which tell us of those who once lived but who have passed away, I am sure it needs no words of mine to make this scene impressive. Nor will you wonder when I say that looking back over twentyfive years of Oddfellowship, calling to mind many of the brethren with whom I once associated, but who have now passed into "the silent halls of death," I find myself to-day burdened with memory, rather than gifted with speech, and in the words of Tennyson, I say:

"Would that my tongue could utter
The thoughts that arise in me."

But even were the gift of eloquence here to-day, bearing these flowers in "the chilling hand of Death," nor in my words make "mournful measure" for those who have gone, preferring rather to take the view of Longfellow—

"This life of mortal breath
Is but the suburb of the life Elysian
Whose portal we call Death."

In the work of our Order we have many beautiful ceremonies, all serving to teach us how priceless is Friendship, how deep is Love, how lasting is Truth. These are the links which unite us heart to heart in our great fraternity; and to-day, my brothers, we join with these the golden link of remembrance. Remembrance. Something akin to talismanic power is in the word, but more than that. I take up the Sacred Book that is one of our many symbols, and turning its pages over I find these words, "Everlasting remembrance." What majesty of expression is in the phrase. And so inwrought is it in passages of Holy writ, that to breathe the word remembrance brings peace to our souls like the breathing of a prayer. In this book we find the hope of life beyond the grave that makes bright our vision as we unitedly engage in this service to-day, for how vain it all would be, and how dread the prospect, had we not the assurance that after the night-time of sorrow and regret and tears, there would come a glad morning of rejoicing:

"And with the morn those angel faces smile,
Which we have loved long since and lost awhile."

The sweetest songs of our tongue are songs of remembrance, and of all the gifts we possess this is one of the most precious, the power to write remembrance on the heart of a friend.

It is in evidence of the existence of this power, my brothers, that we are here to-day, bering these flowers in our hands. One by one the links that bind us may be severed, but though time may dim its lustre, all unbroken still remains the link that was forged in the flame on the altar of Love, the golden link of remembrance.

We shall not speak to-day of our departed ones. We bring these bright flowers as garlands for their graves, and by all the significance that has been given them in their fragrance and beauty, they shall speak for us, all that our words have failed to say.

To some among us, this day will bring many tender recollections. May sorrow touch these hearts. "Gently as falls the dew drop on the rose." May this ceremony give us renewed strength and zeal in the work we, as Oddfellows are privileged to do, bearing one another's burdens, giving help and encouragement and cheer, caring for those who may need our care, that after death's ministry has been fulfilled, there may be no regrets.

Now is the time; Brothers no longer wait
To scatter deeds of sunshine and good cheer,
Wait not till loved ones pass beyond Death's gate—
They may not need us in another year,
Now is the time!

The members then dispersed and placed bouquets upon the graves of their departed brethren, assembling again upon the green where they were addressed by Rev. Robert Pogue, Rev. H. J. Keith and Rev. E. A. Grobb.

Mr. Pogue, who was the first speaker, said:

The ceremony conducted here today would be unmeaning were it not for the faith we have in theresurrection of the dead. Our departed ones want to be remembered and we want to remember them. We want to make them nearer to us possibly than when we think of them in the quiet of the home. We are here for one thing; that is to be reminded of two motives—friendship and love.

What is it that makes us above the blasts? It is that we are made after the image of God; that we are capable of love and friendship; that we have the capacity of memory.

Therefore we wish to remember our lost ones; we wish to forget their faults and to emulate their virtues. We show our love for our departed ones by ministering to the wants of the living. Can they see us from their home above? That is a question which must remain unanswered, but there is one thing we do know: if they were here to-day they would lead a much different life than they have lived and would wish us also to live a better life, and that is the message I wish to leave with you: "Live as they would have you live."

Mr. Keith followed and said: "The thing that is uppermost in our minds to-day is the nearness of our beloved ones and the suggestiveness of their taking note of our actions and feelings. The emphasis you lay on sympathy has found a voice; it breaks down, as it were, the dwindling line between us and our departed ones.

The speaker here referred to the war between the northern and southern States, showing how, after bitter feelings and struggles, their hands are joined to-day in decorating the tombs of their departed ones.

By a continuance of memory, she concluded, we shall ever be joined in heart with the loved ones we have lost.

Memory is one of the greatest things with which God has endowed us, said Mr. Grobb. Life is continually passing away and to-day is continually passing into yesterday. But those who are gone are not dead; they are alive in the great eternity of God, and they are alive in the memory of those who have assembled here to-day. Memory of the past is one of the great assurances of the future.

By assembling here to-day and paying tribute to the memory of the departed friends, we not only honour them, but we honour ourselves, for what is it that makes us better than the blast, if not that we are possessed of many faculties, the gifts of God—that we remember.

After a selection by the Band, the ceremony closed with Benediction by the Rev. E. B. Grobb.

THE W.C.T.U. AND MRS. KENDREY'S LETTER

The following letter as below, was refused publication in the Review:

Peterborough, June 20, 1014.

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—Kindly grant me space in your paper to reply to the letter signed Elizabeth Kendry. If Mrs. Kendry had been at the Opera House Thursday evening along with the W.C.T.U. women together with other temperance women, she would have known hat it is true that Mr. Rowell promises the franchise to women,—not as a bribe, but because the W.C.T.U. and all the other organizations of women throughout the Province have asked for it. (Rowell and his party, with the Labour members always voting for it).

If Mrs. Kendry had attended the temperance meeting held in the Y.M.C.A. addressed by Mrs. Stevens of Toronto, a Conservative, she would have found out that the W. C. T. U. is not a partizan organization, even though it has had Mrs. Gordon Wright as one of its honoured members for many years. By the way Mrs. Gordon Wright is very prominent in Women's Missionary work too.

The W.C.T.U. resolution to support the Rowell platform was drawn up by a committee of women half of whom were Conservative, and half Liberal. The W.C.T.U. women are behind Rowell because he has adopted to a large extent their platform and given them their first opportunity to strike out, at one blow, all the bars of Ontario, and the shops by a majority vote, and also to grant them the franchise.

"We are standing where our sisters never stood
In the place of great decision by the altar of our God.
And a million souls in bondage send to us high freedom's call.
As one woman we lift the call—
By our homes, and lands, and altars (Rum delenda-est!) shall fall."

It is difficult to characterize Mrs. Kendry's attempt to discredit the motives of the faithful White Ribbon women, whose watchword has always been "For God, and Home and Every Land"—and who have always arrayed themselves behind forward temperance legislation.

It seems to belong to the methods of petty politicians, and is unworthy of true woman, much less one so active in missionary work, as the writer of her letter.

Yours respectively,
(Mrs.) Margaret Lewis,
Ex-Pres. W. C. T. U.
(Mrs.) Margaret Goodfellow,
Corresponding Secretary.

Stoney Lake Breezes

STONEY LAKE, June 22.—At last Juniper Island is to have a new system of wharves. These are now receiving the finishing touches at McCracken's Landing. There will be three in number; one of 150 feet., to be anchored out into the lake, south of the pavilion, at right angles to the shore, for the use of motor boats exclusively. By placing it in this position both sides can be utilized, which will virtually give 300 ft. of wharf space.

A second of 150 ft. wil be placed north of the store for the use of canoes and skiffs. ff ff ff

A third will be anchored nearer the boat house, which with the other two should provide ample accommodation for some time to come.

The wharves will have a uniform width of 16 ft. and are constructed of cedar. They will be towed into position early next week.

A new rope will be provided for the large flag pole as it is physically impossible to hoist the flag with the wire rope on it at present.

The dead trees which disfigure the front of the store will be cut down.

The Bessie Butler should get busy and repair the government wharf, which is in bad condition, with planks off the front and large spikes sticking out to tear a hole in any yacht that chances to tie up.

Mr. Hooper of Toronto will again have charge of Mr. Stock's store, while Mr. Douglas Carlisle will assist Mr. Herbert Stock will run a supply boat in connection with the store, carrying such lines as milk, butter, eggs, vegetables, fresh meats, etc proposes covering the entire lake in two days.

At Kawartha Park Mr. Stock has an ice house with a capacity of about six hundred blocks which will be retailed to the cottagers in that vicinity.

A Brand New Grit

Rev. R. G. Peever Answers Insinuation Contained in Letter—A Splendid Sermon to George Street Congregation

"The question is larger than that. The question is, 'Shall the organized forces of the liquor traffic in this Province triumph over the organized forces of Christianity, as represented in the most advanced temperance sentiment of the churches to-day?

This was the forceful manner in which the Rev. R. G. Peever brought the real issue of the coming Provincial election before a large congregation in the George Street Church last night. In urging upon all present the duty that was theirs, and exhorting them not to fail under the guise of allegiance to a political party, in administering a crushing bow to the liquor traffic, Mr. Peever also brought out the fact that at this election he is working against his own party. He told how a few days ago he received a letter enclosing a newspaper clipping and on the back of the clipping was written in large letters, "You Old Grit.'

"I wish to say" was his answer last night, "that in this issue I am a brand new Grit. My last vote was cast for the present Dominion Government, but I am going to vote this time against the party I supported then."

For his sermon last night Mr. Peever took his tet from the 1st Corinthians, 14th chapter and 8th verse, which reads as follows: "For if the trumpet give an uncertain sound who shall prepare himself to the battle." The passage in the 19th chapter of Acts, was also the basis for much that was contained in his sermon. It reads as follows: "Sirs, ye know that by this craft we have our wealth."

"Moreover ye see and hear that not alone at Ephesus, but almost through out all Asia, this Paul has persauded and turned away much people, saying they be no gods which are made with the hands.

"So that not only this our craft is in danger to be set at nought; but also that the temple of the great goddess Diana shoud be despised, and her magnificence would be destroyed, whom all Asia and the world worshipeth.

"And when they heard these sayings they were full of wrath and cried out saying, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians.

In the Book of Acts, said the speaker, there was a great conflict going on between the systems of religions of the times and the Christian faith. The narrow views of Judaism were trying to thwart the efforts of Jesus Christ and his disciples. And in the quoted passage there was Demetrius the silversmith, as leader of those who made their money by the manufacture of idols, organising to fight the Christian faith. So there was a suggestion of the situation in Ontario at the present time. A great conflict was on between the organized forces of evil for the liquor traffic and the Christian churches. On one side a political traffic and on the other the liquor interests were exerting power, money, influence and intrigue. That was the challenge of the people of this Province. A great moral issue had been thrust between the two parties in this Province, and the Christian electors must line up on one side or the other. As the liquor traffic had helped to make a party it was now breaking the party ties of thousands of men.

It was a good thing that in the last ten years one thousand bars had been wiped out of this province, but it was better by far to have the rest of them abolished now than to wait another ten years for the abolition of another thousand licenses.

Mr. Peever told how the present policy was not a political one, but a policy which was agreed on by all the Christian churches; both Protestant and Roman Catholic, had agreed upon and submitted it to both political parties.

The social and commercial entan elements were very numerous and manifold in this issue. The pressure of the liquor traffic is being exerted to prevent the realization of the advanced desire of thousands of Christian people.

In conclusion the speaker dilated with eloquence on the sacredness of the franchise. It was a hard choice to make, but ask the question. "How are the liquor forces working in this issue?" Then vote on the opposite side and you will not be far wrong." And in this issue the expert opinion of the Christian churches was also on the side opposed to the liquor traffic. He would like to see the young voters regard their first ballot as a sacred trust from God to be used for or against either political party according to the judgment of his enlightened intelligence. That would be real responsible government.

SUCKING THE BRITISH NAVY.

O, Canada, stand to a man,
Against Sir Wilfrid's navy plan;
Canadian comerce would wan
Throughout our British Empire.
Our Senate is like a dead beet;
They kill the Navy Bill complete,
And eat the cake that is so sweet,
The good old British Navy.

O Canada, don't sponge too long;
War preparations go on strong;
Our very life depends upon
The good old British Navy.
Men like Reverend Robert Pogue
May tell us to lie like a log,
And drink the dewdrops like a frog,
Sucking the British Navy.

New Log Cabin Camp Completed

Mr. H. R. Charlton, General Advertising Agent, Grand Trunk Railway System, has just made a tour of inspection in Algonquin Provincial Park of Ontario, journeying from Algonquin Park Station to the different log cabin camps that the Grand Trunk have constructed for the accommodation of tourists in that wonderful and attractive reserve. "Camp Minnesing" on Island Lake, nine miles distant from Algonquin Park Station and situated on one of the most beautiful sites in the Park, is practically completed and the furnishings are now being installed, the camp to open on July 1st. This camp is built entirely of cedar logs with the bark on, and is comprised of the main lodge with twenty bedrooms, four bathrooms, public recreation room and general dining-room. On each side of the main lodge, at a distance of fifty feet apart are three log cabin camps containing four bedrooms each, bathroom and living-room, with spacious covered gallery on three sides of the cabin. Hot and cold water in the main lodge and each cabin; the entire camp to accommodate seventy-five people.

"Nominigan Camp," situated at Smoke Lake, 7 miles south of Algonquin Park Station, was opened last year and is one of the most attractive places in the "Highlands of Ontario," everyone who visited the camp being delighted with it. These camps were built somewhat after the style of the camps that are found in the Rangeley Lakes in Maine, but are far superior to them both in construction and furnishings.

The Highland Inn at Algonquin Park Station, which accommodates 150 people, has been renovated, redecorated and refurnished this year. From the present outlook, the number of inquiries that are being made and reservations secured, the indications point to a very successful summer in Algonquin Park District. The attractions of this extensive territory are numerous, the principal one, however, is the splendid fishing, which comprises such well known game fish as the Small Mouth Black Bass, Speckled Trout and Black Salmon Trout.

Hunting is not allowed in the Park, but visitors are allowed to shoot with the camera all the wild game they can see, and it is not necessary to go many feet from the hotels to find the deer in their native haunts, and mink, marten and beaver, in fact all the wild animals that are found in our Canadian Woods have their home in Algonquin Park.

EXCURSION WAS A SUCCESS

Commercial Travellers Association's Outing to Harwood on Saturday Well Patronized and Enjoyed

BENEDICTS WON GAME

The outing held to Harwood on Saturday, under the auspices of the Commercial Travellers' Association was a very enjoyable and successful one. When the steamer Stoney Lake set sail from the George Street wharf there were about two hundred people on board, and their number was slightly augmented by those who embarked at the Street Railway Wharf.

The boat left the latter wharf a little after two o'clock, and arived at Harwood shortly after 5 o'clock. The sail down the river was greatly enjoyed, the weather being ideal, and all the excursionists co-operating for the pleasure of all on board. A portion of the 57th Regimental Band was on board, under the leadership of Bandmaster R. Gliddon, and dispensed splendid music on the trips, both going down and coming up the river. Popuar hits and selections from Grand and Comic Opera and Musical Comedy were recognised, and greatly appreciated by everyone on board.

At Harwood, where the excursionists spent a couple of hours, all had supper. But before the evening meal, for which all were ready before the time came round, a baseball match was played which was worthy of and received the most intense interest of the spectators. The battle was one between the married men and the single men, in which the Benedicts were snowed under by the Bachelor nine.

The return journey was an exceedingly pleasant one, although the cool breeze that was blowing sent most of the passengers on to the lower deck. Here an impromptu concert was given, with splendid success. Mr. Lynch entertained the crowd with a solo and several humorous readings, and Mr. Joe Minicola rendered a fine vocal solo and a cornet solo. Later the bandsmen assembled on the upper deck, where they again resumed their entertainment of the crowd. Part of th deck was cleared and the younger element wound up the evening with a stirring dance.

Altogther the excursion was an exceedingly successful one. Owing to the arrangements of the Committee in charge, the courtesy of the crew, and the prevailing good fellowship, everyone on board had a very pleasant outing.

The ball game, as stated above, was the sporting event of the day, and when the opposing clubs took the field the batting was about even. But before long the bachelors had piled up a lead on their opponents that made the chances of the married men look very slim indeed. And things looked worse when Bill O'Brien, out in the right garden, tried to pull off a grand-stand stunt, and catch the bal in his mouth. He misjudged the fly, however, and received a crack on the head that put him out of the game. Mr. S. A. Oke stepped into the breach, however, and succeeded at least in keeping his head out of the way of the ball. Woodrow Wilson, with his tax reform, and tariff schedule curves, showed signs of lack of training, but even at that had his supporters played air-tight ball, he might have come out all right. The bachelors did not star in any particular department, but had all the breaks in the luck and captured the cigars. The teams were:

Married Men—McKim, Wall, Fitzpatrick, McClelland, Coon, Wilson, O'Brien, Graham, Stapleton and Oke.

Bachelors — Rosenburgh, George Lynch, S. Gibbs, F. Denniston, Fat Giroux, O'Brien and others.

Since the above account of the picnic was written the Examiner has been informed that the Executive of the Association greatly appreciatd the programme of music given by the 57th Band, and wish to have a note made in this paper to that effect.

most enjoyable and well planned picnic was held last Thursday by the Anti-Sniff Club at the south end of the street car line. The Club is an entirely new organization. Few games were played, most of the time being devoted to conversation and demolishing the contents of all baskets.

After the big feed was partaken of, the girls proceeded to entertain their guests by demonstrating some new and original dances at the Pavilion, departing at 8 p.m. Among the mem-members and guests present were Miss M. Rehill, Miss R. Johnson, Miss G. Le Bar, Miss C. Peters, Miss J. Rundle, Miss M. Evans, and Miss E. Thompson (President). The party was exclusive of gentlemen.—Com.

Flower Service At St. Luke's

Annual Event of Sunday School Held Last Evening—An Appropriate Sermon

The annual flower service of the Sunday School scholars of St. Luke's was held last evening. The boys and girls, with their teachers, marched through the church, bearing flowers which were afterwards sent to the hospitals, and to the sick of the congregation. The rector, Rev. F. J. Sawers, preached an appropriate sermon, setting forth, in a manner that could easily be understood by he the youngest child present, the lessons to be learned from the flowers. The speaker referred to the fact that just as it was necessary, in order to cultivate a beautiful garden, to keep the weeds out of it, so it was with a beautiful life, the weeds of unkindness, selfishness and impurity must never be found in it.

During the service the flower hymn, "Here, Lord, We Offer Thee," was sung, and while the offertory was being taken the choir rendered an anthem very effectively.

Mr. Soden has roasted the members of the Council and ex-Mayor Bradburn for their connection with the Hydro-Electric in Peterborough, and has criticised adversely Alderman Johnston and the Hydro-Electric sytem. If Mr. Soden will deny this over his name I will bring forward the persons who have heard him unmercifully abuse the Hydro-Electric policy.

TAXPAYER ON MARKET QUESTION

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—When our stupid Council of some years ago built our market house on the second storey many of us pointed out its unsuitability for many reasons which it now recognizes. It now proposes to build another on the ground floor upon the present market square, which is already too small for an outdoor market. For that reason it was decided, years ago, to remove the market to a larger square where all the accommodation could be afforded, and that spot was the large tract of land along the river bank, as it was the only available one near the centre of the City, but alas, for the wisdom of our last year's Council, they gave that away to the C. P. R., and hence our present dilemma. We positively have no suitable place for a market, and the present insufficient one is needed for other purposes as demanded by th growth of the City.

Another foolish thing our Council is doing, or proposes doing, is to let the dealers and large buyers go on the market at 9 a.m. instead of 11 a.m.as heretofore, which will enable them to corral all the market stuff and put it into cold storage and thus interecept direct buying from the producer to the disadvantage of the consumer who pays the taxes for the purchase of the ground, the construction of the building and their maintenance. It is time the people awoke if the whole City is to suffer for the sake of a handful of shippers and middlemen.

Yours, etc.,
Taxpayer.

MANY SPECIAL TRAINS FOR THE CONVENTION

Two hundred members of the Edmonton Industrial Association, travelling in a special Grand Trunk Pacific train, left Chicago yesterday, (Thursday) and are due in Toronto on Saturday afternoon, having arranged to make visits of inspection at South Bend, Lansing, Detroit, Battle Creek, Mt. Clemens, Port Huron, Stratford and Guelph. Their special train, which has been run solid from Edmonton, includes nine sleepers, two diners and observation car. After attending the convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of America in Toronto, the western visitors will return to Edmonton by regular train service.

The Grand Trunk is running several of these special trains carrying delegates from parious points on the continent to the convention. The Company is carrying over its lines the Chicago Advertising Club Special with most of the best known publicity men from the middle western states. They leave Chicago on Saturday evening and arrive in Toronto early Sunday morning. With the Chicago Advertising delegation there will travel a special party from Shreveport, Louisiana. Another Grand Trunk Special will leave Chicago to-morrow night (Friday) carrying the members of the Advertising Clubs from the State of Texas.

Yet another Special from Chicago will bring the advertising clubs of Waterloo (Iowa) and Des Moines. The "Town Criers," as the advertising men of Waterloo call themselves, will at the conclusion of the Convention in Toronto, proceed by the Grand Trunk route to Portland, Me., and will return home via Old Orchard and Boston.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC IS ALLIED TO PRESENT GOV'T STATED REV. R. G. PEEVER

At Lakefield on Saturday Night in One of the Clearest Presentations of the Great Issue Now Before the Electors—

GAVE HIS PROOFS

"That which is morally wrong cannot be politically right."

Quoting the above words of O'Connell, the great Irish statesman, whose memory is linked with the names of Grattan and Emmett, Rev. R. G. Peever said at the Anderson meeting at Lakefield on Saturday night. "If my party is standing by a wrong cause, I cannot follow it and be true. You can't do it either."

It would require the conscience of a cork-screw to wind a way out through the array of facts which Rev. Mr. Peever presented. Even the conditional evasion constructed upon the doubt some profess to hold as to whether or not Mr. Rowell will carry out his promises, if given the opportunity, was left without a support. The speaker showed that the day had passed when the people would countenance duplicity in a great question like that of the abolition of the bar. Such a step in the present day would be immediately fatal to the political and public life of the leader and of the men who were associated with him.

Mr. Peever's plea was simple, logical, dispassionate and convincing. "It may seem quite strange to you that I am here on this platform to-night, and I am sure you are wondering whether it is right or wrong. I settled that question some days ago. I am not speaking to-night because of preference, but because of strong conviction, because of the present great opportunity and because of the obligation resting upon the electorate.

One of the most needed things in this election is information. The situation must be fairly presented, and the facts brought to the minds of the people. But you do not get the facts in the party press, especially when influenced by the liquor traffic. Having obtained the facts do what you ought to do in the fear of God.

The Temperance Aim.

The goal of the temperance people in Canada is the total abolition of the liquor traffic. Mr. Peever stated that the temperance people would not be satisfied until the manufacture and sale of intoxicants for beverage purposes were discontinued. The advance of temperance has been gradual. Little gains have been made step by step.

One of the reasons for this advance being gradual was that the temperance people had to wait until the opinions of the different churches had become sufficiently strong to warrant action upon common ground. Some of the churches were farther advanced than others. The only way any great reformation was ever attained was by different churches or communities getting upon common ground. The strength of their unity presented a leverage that could wrest legislation from a government.

Again, the temperance people had to wait for the expressions of the people outside the church. They had to wait for the will of scientists for instance. They state to-day that alcohol even in small quantities cannot be taken into the being without harm. Alcohol has a place as a medicine or a drug, and as such should be protected and only dispensed by skilled druggists and physicians. Rev. Mr. Peever gave details of the physical effect of alcohol on the human ocnstitution.

There was also a delay until the industrial world stood out on the common ground. To-day the drinking man is declared inefficient. Even the periodic drinker cannot produce as much as the sober man. The railways have no use for the drinkers. Industry in all its branches has made a stand in this respect. The same applies to the professions. Hence, there has had to be an awaiting until the churches reached a common ground, until there was a pronouncement from science, until the industrial world had spoken. There was a delay until public opinion had ripened and matured.

Public Opinion Changed.

Who have we to-day to advocate drinking? Where can you find a sponsor for the liquor trade? During the past 10 years there has been a wonderful ripening of public opinion in regard to temperance. Again, there has been a wonderful universal condemnation of the liquor traffic. There has been a marked advance in this regard during the past five years. We must not compare the present sentiment with that of 25 years ago. The moral, economic, social, political demands show a vast difference. Mr. Peever made a strong point of this, emphasizing the futility of comparisons in the face of the rapid and great changes which have taken place within five years.

What Roosevelt Did.

Men do not wish to be associated in name as drinkers to-day. The speaker referred to the slander which had been circulated about Colonel Roosevelt, alleging that he was becoming an habitual drunkard. He pursued that rumour throughout the United States to its very source. At a subsequent trial of his slanderer he was vindicated. Here was an example of the fact that men recognize that their names cannot be associated with the drinking traffic. Why is it that the present Government is trying in a desperate way to make the Province believe that it is not associated with the drink traffic? The Government realizes that it cannot afford to have its name associated with the liquor party. The drink traffic stands behind one party in this Province, and the effort of the Government to dissociate itself from the liquor interests is an evidence of the recognized unpopularity of the traffic in the land.

Reason for Opinion.

Why is this ripening of public opinion in Germany, United States, Canada and other countries? Because of the awful trail the drink traffic has left in every land under God's heaven. Just as you can trace the old slave roads into the depths of Africa and find the bleached bones of slaves who dropped along the trail, so through the history of human affairs stretches the liquor path with its grim reminders in the form of wrecked homes, shattered lives and hopes, drunkards' graves, neglected children, the awful expense in the extra administration of justice, houses for the insane, penetentiaries for the criminally inclined. For this the traffice stands condemned by every body of intelligent citizens.

The Root of Evils.

Nearly all the great questions which are stirring the people are associated with the drink traffic. Consider poverty, hard times, poor homes, neglected children, etc. Why are there neglected children? It is generally because of drink in the home. I was a member of the Children's Aid Society of Ottawa for four years and I know whereof I speak. If the men had saved the $24,000,000 which they spent on liquor last year, think of what it would have meant for this province, in better homes, more comforts, peace and fewer unhappy wives and children. We have been trying to solve the problem at the wrong end. The trade is now before the people. The press, the Church, the railways, industrial workers, professional men, scientists, they are all opposed to it.

Will Break Parties.

The question is in politics. That is why I am here to-night. I would not be on this platform if it were not in politics. It is there to stay until it is settled right. It has broken parties before and it will break them again until the question is finally settled. It is breaking life-long party ties. I can name old Conservatives in Peterborough who state that they have never voted against their party and that means a great deal, but they are going to break with them on this election.

Mr. Peever urged the electors to get all the facts in connection with the history and affiliations of the two parties in connection with this question. They need not get the facts from him, but from any source they should be correct.

What Governments Did.

How did the Governments treat the liquor party? At first they ignored us. I am speaking now as a man who has kept his franchise free. I have voted for both sides. I helped put Sir James Whitney into power, and to keep him there. Fifty years ago the Government ignored us.

Down in the Ottawa Valley our fathers could not put up a barn without a big supply of grog. But there were men of such strong opinions that they declared they would never build a barn under such conditions, and they waited until they could do without having grog on their premises, even for that occasion. I can take you to Dunham, P.Q., where the present fathers, men of fifty years, have never known a licensed saloon in their midst. But that was won at a great cost. My father was a total abstainer and with a few others they stood out against the traffic in those days. Their names were put up in the saloons for the derision of the drinking men. But these abstainers taught their children by word and example. They turned out the bars and have kept them out from that day to this. The present generation does not know the evils of the traffic.

The Present Government.

Mr. Peever traced the various measures the delays and the changes down to the Whitney government which, he said, had given a strong degree of license enforcement and a fair measure of advancement in temperance. But Sir James was not serious in his attitude toward the advanced temperance sentiment, and the rapidly changing public opinion. He gave an amendment which compelled a community to submit a local option by-law to the people on a twenty-five per cent. vote. But he handed the temperance cause a left-hander when he brought out the three-fifths' measure. It has kept hundreds and thousands of bars open in the Province. Let us give credit where credit is

Must Take The Side Of Christ Or The Side That Is Opposite Him

Rev. Robert Pogue in Forcible Sermon Points Out the Duty of Christians in the Present Political Campaign

A LOGICAL EXPOSITION

The minister of St. Paul's church, Church, Rev. R. Pogue, preached a sermon yesterday morning, which ought to make clear to every Christian voter his duty in the present political campaign. He chose as his text the words: "He that is not with Me is against Me."

He said in part: There is only one of two positions that the Christian man can take in relation to a great moral issue. He must either take the side of Christ or the side that is opposed to Him. And it is possible for him to know which is the side of Christ and which is not. Christ has not made our duty so hazy, so cloudy, so dark, that it is impossible for us to know what our duty is. If you are willing to pay the price of knowing it He will make it clear and plain. If you would know His will and hear His voice you must hush every other voice into silence. You must not allow the voice of selfishness, covetousness, love of friends of position or power to speak. If you do you will fail to catch the still small voice of the Master. The very first thing that is needed is that you should smite into silence all other voices save the voice of Christ; that you should shut yourself up in the secret place where God makes His voice to be heard, and His will to be known, and when all other voices have been silenced you should say, "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth." Christ does not place His children in a place where it is impossible to know His will. He has made known His will in His word and the final tribunal before which all questions must be brought is not the tribunal of public opinion or personal expediency, or even the light of one's own conscience but the light of God's word. There is no more dangerous guide than that which is referred to in the expression which is so often on men's lips, "The light of my own conscience." The word of God, not conscience, is your guide. There will be many during the coming days who will tell you in justification of their conduct in voting for the open bar, that they are voting according to their conscience. But "the law and the testimony" is the only sure rule for the child of God to follow. Take this principle furnished us by the word of God to guide us in the perplexities of the present time. It is impossible but that occasions of stumbling should come, but woe unto him through whom they come; it were well for him if a millstone were hanged about his neck and he were thrown into the sea, rather than that he should cause one of these little ones to stumble." When you cast your vote for the open bar you put a stumbling block in the pathway of little children, and you come under the awful woe of the Master.

But, you may ask, how am I to know the right side just now? How am I to know whether I am for or against Christ? I take it you ask that question in all sincerity. Let me answer it in this way: Where are the ministers of Christ in this campaign? Now I will readily admit that they are divided, that there are some in favor of things as they are now. But this is true, the number is exceedingly small. I know of only a single minister in the Presbytery of Peterborough. At the great Congress which was held in Toronto a year ago composed of 4000 members, ministers and laymen, there was not a dissenting voice when a resolution was submitted looking toward nation-wide prohibition. At our recent assembly composed of ministers and laymen in equal numbers, I did not read of a single person opposing a resolution in favour of the "Abolish the bar policy." Similar resolutions were passed by all the Methodist Conferences with only a few voices here and there raised in defence of the present way of regulating the traffic. The Baptist Church, the Evangelical Church, the Congregational Church, all passed similar resolutions.

Now there are two things I would have you remember here. The first is this: The men who introduced these resolutions in all our church gatherings are specialists in their departments. They are men who study the situation all over the country, who gather facts all over the land, who study these facts in scientific fashion, and the conclusions they come to are the conclusions of men who know conditions and how to deal with them as no party politician can.

The next thing I would have you remember is that these men are specialists in what is right. That is their business. They give themselves to the study of the word of God and to prayer, and to fasting, that they may know God's will, and then they come forth to tell us what God has said to them in the secret place of prayer. Now I ask you this question: Are these men likely to be mistaken? I do not doubt the possibilities of their being so, but I do not think it at all probable. Christ is somewhere in this campaign. He is not on both sides. 'A house' He told us, 'divided against itself cannot stand.' Christ is not divided, however much His Church is. The great question for me to decide is, "Am I on His side? Am I for Him? Am I really helping the coming of His Kingdom in this contest or am I retarding it?"

Then to guide me further in coming to a decision there is this fact, namely, that the liquor interests are lined up on the other side. They have been fighting us every move we have made for years. When a deputation of ministers waited upon the Government a few years ago to protest against the iniquity of the 3-5 clause, a few days after on the other side a deputation of liquor men waited on the Government requesting them to retain the 3-5 clause. I have facts in my possession now that show the liquor men are not on my side. And that fact confirms me still further in the conviction that I am on the Lord's side, that I am not against him, but really for Him in this controversy. What, in a word, is the issue before us just now? What is that issue as it relates itself to our City? The present policy of those in power for this City is the existence of 12 bar-rooms, 3 shop and one club license. Twice, we, the temperance people of this City, by an overwhelming majority have tried to have it otherwise. But we have been politely told—indeed not always politely told, that, this is the best that can be done for us. Now what would the new policy do for the people of Peterborough? It would wipe out every bar-room, every shop license and every club license. What would it do for Ontario? It would wipe out 1300 bars, 57 club licenses and it would reduce the shops at least by 75.

You have heard a lot about the evil of shops. We have that evil now. We have 215 shops now belching out evil. But then we have 215 shops plus 1,300 bars plus 57 club licenses. Now if the Christian people of this country vote right the shops will be reduced about one-third, the 57 clubs will be wiped out and the 1,300 bars will be wiped out. I am a total prohibitionist. I stand for the abolition of the shops, club licenses, bar-rooms and the breweries and distilleries. That is the top round of the ladder of temperance reform. But this reform is been coming only a step at a time, round after round this reform has been ascending. And while as Christian people we believe in this ideal, in the top round of the ladder, we do not refuse any good thing that is offered us, and that is an advance on what we have now.

Here is a Christian principle just as true as the one with which I have been dealing, namely, it is the duty of a follower of the Master, immediately new light is revealed to him, to walk in it. It is his duty to grow in grace, to grow in his conceptions of what is right. The Christian man must take as his motto the word of the youth in Longfellow's poem—Excelsior—higher and still higher. Here is a policy away in advance of anything we have had yet. It is my duty to ascend another round of the ladder of reform and stand there; but only long enough to get enough strength to make the next round and so on and up until it come to the last round, when the manufacture, as well as the sale of liquor in all its forms, shall be completely prohibited.

Is This the End of a Short Reign?—The picture shows Prince William of Albania, who only arrived at Durr azzo in March last to govern the country with the acquiescence of the Great Powers, embarking his wife and children on an Italian pinnace, to go aboard Italian warships for safety. William, himself, remained behind to lead his troops against rebellious Musulmen who were besiging his capital. Latest cable despatches report William as saying that the rebels were approaching, but he would die sword in hand, in defence of his adopted Kingdom. International troops have lately been disembarked to protect his palace and Government buildings.

The Liquor Traffic Is

due. He promised a law against the treating system, but it has not been born yet.

Has Protected Trade.

Presenting the Rowell policy in its details, Rev. Mr. Peever stated that Peterborough had voted on the liquor question already and should now be dry if the will of the majority had been granted. As it is we have twelve licenses protected by the three-fifths' clause and the government in power. I challenge dispute.

The speaker then offered a few observations which he asked the electors to ponder upon. First, the liquor traffic is absolutely leagued to the present Government by the unfair threefifths'clause. It would be unfair on my part if I could not prove that statement. It is unfair and unnecessary. We were told that the three-fifths was necessary for stability. Mr. Hanna then promised to remove it. He has been appealed to time and again, even by nine thousand Conservatives in Toronto, and has refused to move a jot or tittle. We had local option before Whitney came into power. There were one hundred or more places that carried it on a straight majority vote. They had the right to vote on a repeal on a straight majority. There were eight repeal ballots held, and of these four were defeated. Of the other four several were exceptional cases such as separating a village or town from a rural section and taking a vote only in the Village.

What Quebec Has Done.

Go to Quebec and you will find over 600 municipalities under local option on a simple majority vote, and they have been unable to repeal them. Is my statement correct that the liquor traffic is [illegible] Whitney Government by the unnecessary and unfair three-fifths clause? (Applause).

Local option in any community gains strength by the very excellence of the Act. There is peace by night, better and sounder business, increased land values, the banks do better business. But the law must be well administered. Mr. Peever went deeply into this consideration and held up as an example the work accomplished by the Mounted Police in the North West. He declared that a law must come from a sympathetic government and through a sympathetic agency to be successfully carried out.

Another observation was that the present Government has failed to keep pace with the temperance sentimnt of th Province. He proved his statement by enumerating the churches and societies which had appealed for more advanced legislation. The advance in sentiment during the last five years has been remarkable but the Government has not been in pace with it. The present Government must break the alliance with the liquor party or it is going to get hurt. One hundred and thirty-eight bars have been kept open in one year by the three-fifths' clause.

No Double Dealing.

We have passed the time when a party can deal lightly with the expressed will of the people. It is only by this that we can purify politics, when a certain number of men keep their franchise free to break a party if it has been untrue. Premier Borden began as a Liberal. Mr. White, the Minister of Finance, was a Liberal. They changed and they had a right to change. The Hon. Clifford Sifton changed from the Liberal party at the last elections.

The Candidate.

Mr. John Hall was the chairman of the meeting. The candidate gave an [illegible] temperance men. Mr. Daniel O'Connell gave an eloquent address, and the meeting as a whole teemed with convincing arguments. There was quite a sprinkling of ladies present.

GETTING A START

By NATHANIEL C. FOWLER JR.

(Copyright, 1914, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

INDIFFERENCE.

Lack of a feeling of responsibility, and general indifference in regard to trivial as well as important matters, are, I believe, the causes of a large proportion of ineffectiveness.

The indifferent man never succeeds, never amounts to anything, and always remains on the lower level. He shirks responsibility and does not appreciate the importance of little as well as big things. His motto seems to be, "Let others take care of themselves." They won't do it."

Constant attention to everything, including details, is absolutely essential to any grade of accomplishment.

No one is ever allowed to assume responsibility until he has proved his willingness and ability to weigh and measure values. The dissatisfied employee, who thinks that luck is against him, and that the world is opposed to him inmost cases, is indifferen to his duty and indierent to results. He sleeps or dreams while others work. He refuses to recognize the responsibility and allows others to think and act for him. He does not look upon anything as his particular concern, nor does he feel that he is going to be held responsible for it. He may be prompt, and arrive at the office on time, and he may work faithfuly during business hours; but these essentials, important as they are, are not sufficient.

Automatic labour, unthinking work, keep a man down; and, although he may not lose his subordinate position, he is not marked for promotion.

Doing what you have to do, or what you are told to do, and nothing else, stands for stagnation.

Mere faithfulness in itself has little commercial or other value.

Indifference is the thief who is always present, and who will rob the man that refuses to recognise his responsibility.

Do not imagine that, because your work is menial, because you occupy a very low position, you are justified in being indifferent.

Whatever you have to do, so long as it is your duty, is as important to you as is the management of a great industry to the one who controls it. If your work, and you will not rise forently, it will always continue to be your work, and you wil not rise above it; but, if you add brains and ambition to your labour and look upon everything, no matter how small it may be, as of prime importance, you will sooner or later be given opportunity to assume greater responsibility.

Above all, do not be indifferent to little things. The moment of accomplishment is ot built of one stone, but is the result of many little stones intelligently placed together.

The smallest detail, which seems of indifferent importance to you, may be the corner stone of the house you hope to build.

Every great man has attained his fame and his fortune by not discriminating against small things, and by perfecting each action, that the ultimate result may be complete in every detail.

You recall the old adage, "The strength of the chain is dependent upon its weakest link."

Little indifferenece may spoil the whole Jump of success.

HENS NEED LOTS OF WATER

E. F. Eaton, Colchester Co., N.S.

If there is any one phase of poultry husbandry that needs to be emphasized and re-emphasized, it is that hens need water, lots of it. Perhaps the fact that our biddies can get along without water for a considerable length of time and still live and apparently keep healthy, has made us careless in this regard. In a dry season of the year when horses, cattle, sheep and hogs would die of thirst if we did not attend to their needs, a hen can get sufficient moisture from the green things it will eat around the yard and garden to keep it alive. But this does not keep it laying.

Eggs are over 80 per cent. water; hence a heavy laying hen needs lots of water. The body of the hen is closely feathered and warm; hence the evaporation from a hen's body in warm weather is something tremendous; and this evaporation has to be attended to before there is any water to spare for the production of eggs. Water, therefore, is the most important part of the hen's diet, and we cannot afford to leave our biddies without good clean water, with emphasis on the clean.

$100,000 BREACH OF PROMISE CASE

CINCINNATI, O., June 22.—Excitement was caused here recently by the publication of despatches from New York stating that Eugene Zimmerman, father of the Duchess of Manchester, har been sued for $100,000 for alleged breach of promise to marry Miss Ivy Wareham.

Friends of Mr. Zimmerman, who is in his 65th year, declared that the millionaire would fight the case. None would reveal the present whereabouts of Zimmerman, who was reported to be in hiding to escape the newspaper men on his trail.

One rumour had him at Frankfort, Mich., and another said he was in Kentucky.

To Use Ardent Love Leters.

NEW YORK., June 18.—Ardent love letters will be used by Miss Ivy Wareham, the dog fancier, to prove that Eugene Zimmerman, the Cincinnati millionaire, promised to marry her. She declared to-day that the letters would be read in her suit for $100,000 against the father of the Duchess of Manchester.

Miss Wareham returned to her home at Elmhurst to-day from New Haven and declared her confidence that she would win her breach of promise suit.

"I have brought this action against Mr. Zimmerman, and I expect to see it through," she said.

"Have you any letters?" she was asked.

"Mr. Zimmerman wrote a number of letters," she replied. "They are in the hands of my attorney."

"Are they love letters?"

"You can say that you asked me if they were love letters and I answered that they were ardent to say the least," she replied.

It was sugested that her acquaintance with the millionaire was brief.

"I have known Mr. Zimerman for some time," she responded, "although it is true that I have not seen him since last June. I have turned the entire matter over to my lawyer."

The most extraordinary care appears to have been exercised to keep the facts alleged in the suit, as well as the action itself, from public knowledge. Although the complaint does not appear to be on file in the supreme or county courts of Queens or in the office of the county clerk, other papers, dated March 18, 1914, and filed on April 25, have just come to light.

Lawyer William H. Blymer, the defendant's attorney, answered the complaint in an affidavit filed with Supreme Court Justice James C. Van Siclen, and it was the objections which Lawyer Samuels, attorney for the plaintiff, interposed to the defendant answering through a lawyer instead of personally that caused to be added to the record sufficient facts relating to the case to show its character.

Why the Baby Was Scared.

The new baby had proved itself the possessor of extraordinary lung power. One day baby's brother, little Johnny, said to his mother:

"Ma, little brother came from heaven, didn't he?"

"Yes, dear," answered the mother.

Johnny was silent for a moment and then he went on, "I say, ma."

"What is it, Johnny?"

"I don't blame the angels for kicking him out, do you?"—London Tit-Bits.

The Institute of Arts and Sciences of Columbia University, which has just completed its first year, has enrolled 1,265 members among business men and women, people of leisure, college graduates and non-college folk alike. The large majority live within a few minutes' walk of the university. The total attendance at 344 lectures, concerts, readings, recitals, scientific demonstrations, and so on, has been 69,294; the average weekly attendance was 2,511, and at each meeting 173.

An Interrupted Wooing

ADVERTISING is like a lover courting a maid: it seeks to establish between two parties a bond of complete and permanent relationship.

Just as a lover would imperil his suit were he to suspend his wooing for three months, so does the manufacturer lose — perhaps forever — much of what he has gained at great cost when he interupts his wooing of the favour of the public.

The manufacturer who suspends his advertising for the hot weather months is extravagant in the extreme.

A suspension of summer advertising is much the same as giving a sales staff a three months' vacation, and leaving their customers to write in for what they may need, or to give their orders to competitors who have not relaxed their selling efforts.

Advertising is a sales agent whose work is real, positive, and perceivable though its influence and results in any given month may not be immediately calculable. Its worth is seen when sales are summarized and compared.

Double Defeat for the Bloomtmen on Saturday Dropping the First Game 7 to 3 and Second 5 to 3

BRANTFORD, Ont., June 21. — The Red Sox took both ends of a double-header from Peterborough here on Saturday, hitting the ball opportunely in both contests. Sterling received poor support in the first game and the Red Sox ran bases at will.

In the second, Brantford presented the Petes with three runs at the start, but steadied down and with splendid pitching by Chase came from behind in the sixth. The hitting of Deneau and Ivers featured bom contests. Umpire Bedford was banished in the first game for unseemly language. The score:

BRANTS OPEN SERIES HERE THIS AFTERNOON

The Petes returned early Sunday morning after a most successful road trip, winning four out of six battles, and they will clash with the Brantford club in a three-game series have the first game at 4.15 this afternoon. The team played good ball on the road with the exception of the double header, Saturday, and with any kind of luck in the present home series, should improve their position. Schettler will likely pitch this afternoon, with Gero on the slab for Brantford.

The Petes have been reinforced by a new first-baseman. Rooney is the handle of the initial sacker, and he hails from the Indianapolis Feds. The new addition to the Petes is said to be a hard hitter, as well as a good fielder. He will break in to-day. Several other players will likely join the homesters before the week is out.

Rube Deneau's band of Brants blew into town this morning.

BASEBALL

A meeting of the Mercantile League executive is called for to-morrow evening at 8.15 o'clock, at the Y.M.C.A. Representatives of the Bankers, Typos and Machine Shop teams are requested to be present.

A snappy game of ball was played on the King Edward school grounds during Saturday afternoon, between "Frank" Crawford's Occidentals and "Lefty" Field's Maple Leafs, the latter winning by 6 to 5. Anderson pitched good ball for the Leafs, but received poor support. On the other hand Hearne was hit hard but good fielding saved him a defeat.

Following were the line-ups:

Occidentals — Hearne, p.; Soden, c.; Smith 1st; Williamson, 2nd; Cherrit, s.s.; Sheehy, 3rd; Thompson, c.f.; McCracken, r.f.; Crawford, l.f.

Maple Leafs—Anderson, p.; Ross c.; Kenneally, 1st; Field, 2nd; Guerin, s.s.; Taylor, 3rd; J. Downer, l.f.; W. Downer, c.f.; Rehill, r.f.

Bill Jackson was satisfactory as referee.

On interesting game of baseball was played on the corner of King and Aylmer streets, between the Station nine and the Goheen and Matchett nine, ending in a victory for the latter by a score of 25 to 0. The batteries for the winners were Dobbin and Fuller; for the losers Labarr and Lee. There was some classy play on the part of Fuller, and Dobbin pitched all kinds of speed and curves.

GOLF

Judge Parry writes in the Cornhill on "The Law of the Lost Golf Ball," and it appears that this is not a discussion as to the equity of "stroke and distance"—for what may be a slight offence or none at all, but an examination of the knotty questions as to the ownership of lost—or rather found—balls. As the judge says, some tremendous legal problems are involved and a simple formula like "finding's keeping" will not do. Sir Matthew Hale has pointed out that there is an exception to this old rule of law: Where a man's goods are in such a place where ordinarily they are or may be placed, and a person takes them animo furandi, it is felony and the pretence of finding must not excuse."

The judge refers to a golfer, disguised under the title of "a certain undersheriff," who constantly slices his ball into a particular "sariba" of gorse and trees, and though this is out of bounds and quite a queer place for golf balls, it may be maintained that they "ordinarily are or may be placed there" by him. It is dangerous to touch them, and yet this is a comparatively simple case; another fairly simple one is that of the caddy who goes back in the evening to find his employer's ball. If he takes it "with intent to exercise entire dominion over it," that is felony, but if he begins to play a round with it himself, intending to return it next day, and lose it again, the only remedy is an action for damages.

With the seashore come various complications, and even the question of ejectum maris; the judge commonly tees the wreck of a ball at the tenth hole at Llandudno and trusts that nobody will trouble about salvage. His main conclusion, reached by steps which we cannot trace here, is that if you find a golf ball the safest thing is to take it at once to the county coroner. Fortunately we are not a litigious nation, and golf continues to be played without appeals to the courts. The truth is that a lost golf ball rapidly deteriorates, and even an old golfer can pretty well number the good ones he has found; there is a peculiar joy in them and a peculiar resentment if they be claimed. And yet we cannot recall a case brought for the recovery of a ball.

TRAINS COLLIDE.

Two Employes Are Killed In Wreck on G. T. R. Near Kinburn.

KINBURN, Ont., June 22.—As a result of a head-one collission between two freight trains on the Parry Sound line of the G. T. R. one mile west of here, about 9.30 last night, H. Jessop, of Ottawa, fireman on the eastbound train was killed, and it is believed that John O'Connor of Ottawa, fireman on the westbound train lies dead under the wreckage piled up in a ditch near the tracks. All the other members of the two crews escaped without injury. The accident, it is said, was due to a misunderstanding on the part of one or both of the engineers of the orders issued from the despatchers office in Ottawa.

George Smith, 189 Concord street, Ottawa, was engineer on the eastbound train and W. J. Logan, 61 Lee avenue, Ottawa, was engineer on the other. Both trains were going at a speed of 25 miles an hour when they met and the force of the impact hurled the trains into a ditch close by and dragged a string of box cars with them. That the engineers escaped with their lives is considered miraculous.

SURPRISE IN THE MERCANTILE LEAGUE

De Laval Team Defeated the Bankers, League Leaders by 6 to 4 on Saturday---Red Caps Had Easy Win Over the Typos, Beating Printers 14 to 3.

The Mercantile League games on Saturday furnished a surprise, when the De Laval team handed the Bankers their first defeat of the season. The score in a five-innings game was 6 to 4. Carson's good twirling held the Financiers in check, while Huycke pitched good ball for the Bankers, but was poorly supported, the Separator gang scoring three runs in one innings on three strike-outs, Long missing the third one on each occasion.

The Bankers scored one in the first when, with one gone Sheehy beat out a single, stole second, going to third on a bad throw, and scored on Long's single.

The De Laval evened up in their half. Spratt was walked, went to second on Callaghan's sacrifice, to third on a wild pitch, and scored on Huycke's balk.

In the second innings the Bankers scored on Panter's single and steal, a wild pitch, and Minorgan's safety.

Singles by Hawley and Spratt gave the De Laval the tying run in their half.

In the third with one gone Huycke tripled to left centre, and although Long was out, hit by a batted ball, Parsons rapped out at Callaghan, whose wide throw pulled Spratt off the bag. Huycke scoring.

The De Laval went ahead in their half. Kenneally singled and stole second, scoring on Carson's double. Pilling's single sent the pitcher over.

The Bankers failed to score in their half, but the Separators tacked two more unto their score. Grieves scratched an infield hit and Spratt beat out a bunt. They moved up on a passed ball. Callaghan fanned, but Long dropped the third strike and had to throw to first, Grieves scoring. Kenneally also struck out, but Long again muffed the third one. He tried to get Spratt, but the latter got back to third. The play was repeated on English, the next batter, Spratt scoring.

The best the Bankers could do was to get one over in the fifth on a pass to Long, a steal, and Spratt's wild throw to third.

The teams were:

De Laval—Spratt 1b, Callaghan ss, Kenneally m, English 2b, Carson p, Taylor c, Pilling lf, Hawley rf, Grieves 3b.

Bankers — Smyth 2b, Sheehy 3b, Huycke p, Long c, Parsons 1b, Paton lf, Panter m, Eakins rf, Minorgan ss. Umpire, Andrews.

The second game was easy for the Red Caps, who beat the Typos 14 to 3 in a five-innings game. The Red Caps scored five in the first innings and eight in the second. The Typos failed to give O'Connell the least semblance of support, and he was also hit hard. Rahmel pitched the first two innings for the Red Caps, merely lobbing the ball over, and Heenan finished in good style. The batting of Ross, who had two doubles in two trips to the plate, was the only feature for the Typos.

The teams were:

Red Caps—Primeau 3b, Swanston c, Rahmel p, m, O'Heron rf, McDougall lf, Breckenried 1b, Kendry ss, Flaherty 2b, Heenan m, p.

Typos—O'Connell p, Taylor m, Moore 2b, Henley ss, Henry 1b, Henderson lf, Butcher 3b, Ross c, Milloy lf.

Mr Clothing Buyer

Dear Sir:—

You would read every word of a letter from a friend, wouldn't you.

We don't believe even your best friend could write you a more important letter than this one.

Several of your hard earned Dollars will go for Clothes and Furnishings this season. Oftentimes there's a big difference in the value you get for the dollars you spend, and it's better to find out before you buy where your dollars will go farthest, than to wish that you had.

Drop in here, tell us what you would like to see, and we will consider it a privilege to show the goods to you. If it's a suit, you may try them on, stand before the glass and see for yourself how particular we are about every little feature that makes for perfect fitting garments.

You are going to discover that our determination to outdo other stores in point of extreme value-giving, this season is going to mean considerable money saved, or increased satisfaction to you. Take our $15.00 and $18.00 Suits for instance. If you buy one, you'll get more style-value, fit-value and wear-value for the price than you ever did before. And we are selling corresponding values at all Prices from

$5.90 to $25.00

But a personal visit to the Store is the only way for you to satisfactorily understand what this value-betterment means to you.

WEDDING BELLS

SAWERS—McCALLUM.

An event of interest to Peterborough people took place on Saturday, June 13th, at 29 Stewart Street, Amsterdam, N. Y., when the marriage was solemnized of Mr. J. Hague Sawers of Montreal, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. Sawers of Brock Street, Peterborough, to Miss Vera Sterling McCallum, daughter of Mrs. Edwin E. McCallum of Amsterdam, N. Y.

The bride wore a gown of white embroidered chiffon over taffeta, with quaint Dutch cap of lace and orange blossoms, and carried a shower bouquet of white sweet peas and Killarney roses. She was attended by Miss Isabel Lycett of Schenectady, gowned in pale blue and carrying a hoop of pink sweet peas. The bride's only ornament was a pearl necklace, the gift of the groom.

Rev. Geo. M. Gordon of Emmanuel Church performed the ceremony. The wedding march was played by Miss Irene Snyder.

Mr. and Mrs. Sawers left for a few days' stay in New York, after which they will spend some two weeks in Peterborough before leaving for Montreal.

The bride wore a grey travelling suit with hat to match.

On Saturday afternoon the finals in the Men's Golf Championship were played off at the Golf Links between R. M. Hamilton and A. H. Stratton for the Stratton Trophy. The game was close and exciting, Mr. Hamilton coming out victor, three up and two to go.

FUNERAL TO-DAY.

The funeral of the late Mrs. McRibbon, Dennistoun Avenue, took place this afternoon at three o'clock from the family residence to the Little Lake Cemetery. Service was conducted at the house by the Rev. R. G. Peever at half past two o'clock, and the large number who were present at the last rites, showed in what respect and esteem the deceased woman was held.

LACROSSE TEAM GOES TO NORWOOD FRIDAY

All the lacrosse players are reminded of to-morrow night's practice at 6.30 at Riverside Park. An executive meeting will be held at the grounds immediately after the practice. The next game will be on Friday, when the team goes to Norwood. If any of the automobile owners desire to help out the team they have a chance on this occasion by driving the team down and back. The railroad connections are not extra good from Peterborough. Three or four cars would be sufficient, as there are only ten players on the team and several extra men only would be required.

THE CHARMING SEX.

To many women life is nothing but going from one style to another.

When a young woman bestows her hand she sometimes puts her foot in it.

Courtship generally means suspense for the girl and expense for the man.

A woman sometimes calls her husband a miser when he is merely an economizer.

A man is not always struck with a girl who throws herself at his head.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL.

Mr. Austin Drohan of Guelph spent the week end in the City.

Mr. H. W. Glassco, of Winnipeg, is in the city on business.

The Brantford Baseball team is registered at the Oriental.

Mr. Harold Smith is home for the holidays from St. Alban's School, Brockville.

Mr. Norman A. Rae of Ottawa spent the week-end at his home, Sherbrooke Street.

Miss Muriel Sutcliffe and Miss Flavelle, of Lindsay, were in the city for the day on Saturday.

Mr. A. Jobe, of Bridgenorth, returned from Quebec, delegates to the Canadian Order of Foresters' Convention.

Miss Eva Desautel of St. John's Hospital, Long Island, New York, is spending her vacation at her home in Peterborough.

Dr. Cameron of this City, and surgeon of the 10th Brigade, returned home from camp at Petawawa and has resumed his practice.

Mr. and Mrs. Peter German, who motored here from Buffalo, were guests at the White House on their way to Ashburn's, Rice Lake.

Miss Nellie Godwin left by the early train on Saturday morning for St. Catharines on a visit to her sister, Mrs. Townsend, formerly a resident of this city.

Dorothy Watson (Mrs. J. W. Richards), who has been visiting her mother, Mrs. Hugh Darke, of 134 Rubidge street, left Saturday for New York and Boston, to resume theatrical engagements.

Mr. W. F. Skitch has returned after spending a delightful week's vacation with his parents at their cottage Thurstonia Park, Sturgeon Lake. Mrs. Skitch and baby Margaret, will remain another week.

Mrs. T. F. Mathews and Mr. Gordon Matthews, accompanied by Mrs. A. H. Stratton and Mrs. E. L. Goodwill left yesterday in their car to motor to Kingston for the closing exercises at the Royal Military College.

POPULARITY CONTEST HAS AROUSED INTEREST

Considerable interest is forming in the popularity contest between the Foresters and C.M.B.A. of the Sacred Heart congregation. The votes will be counted on the day of the annual social, July 14, and already the members of both societies are working hard to win the distinction of being accorded the more popular. Thus far the voting shows that the C.M.B.A. have a little better of the situation, but it is a little early to make a comparison yet. The friends of the Catholic Order of Foresters are determined to make a determined contest before the award is given.

AUTOMOBILE CASES IN THE POLICE COURT

This morning's police court opened with a fair crowd of rail-birds on hand to watch the proceedings.

Dennis Scully, who was found drunk in a public place said he had had some drinks, but was not drunk, but nevertheless was fined $8 or 10 days.

George Ruth was charged with driving his car without a rear light. He explained to Magistrate Dumble that his light had been lit and in some manner gone out. Mr. A. Kerneghan, who was in the car at the time corroborated Mr. Ruth's statement, so Mr. Ruth was dismissed with a warning.

F. Doucette, who is Mr. Warne's chauffeur, was also charged with driving a car with thel ight out. He said he had run out of oil on his way home when it happened and he was let off with a warning.

Edgar Burnham was fined $5 for not stopping when the traffic policeman at the corner of George and Hunter streets told him to on Saturday.

John Allen, of Lakefield, who, while driving his car in the city on Thursday last ran down Frank O'Connor, who was riding a bicycle at the corner of George and Hunter streets, appeared in court this morning for careless driving.

Frank O'Connor, the man who was hurt, gave evidence that he was riding his bicycle up George street and had just turned out Hunter when Allan ran him down demolishing his wheel, and he himself escaping with minor injuries.

Joseph Green, an eye-witness of the accident, testiled the car was going at a good rate.

Daniel Hopkins also gave evidence against Allan.

Detective Newhall took the stand and said that earlier in the afternoon Allan had shown signs of liquor.

John Allan went into the box and said it was an antiquated car of Cadillac design with one cylinder, and was not capable of any speed.

Mr. Widdifield appeared for Mr. Allan and had the case adjourned until Friday to get more witnesses for the defence.

Why waste time criticising your faults? Your friends will do it for you free of charge.

Whenever we see a man who wears big, flashy diamond ring, we expect to hear him say "them kind" and "has went."

A Statement From Mr. Soden

To the Examiner:—

Sir,—You publish the following letter to me from Mr. Gillespie:

"To the Electors of West Peterborough."

"Mr. Soden solicits the temperance vote on the ground that he is in favour of the abolition of the Bar, Club, and Shop Licences. Will Mr. Soden state on the public platform that he will vote with either political party for the abolition of the Bar, Club, and Shop License, or over his own signature in the public press.

"My promise to the electors is—I WILL."

"G. A. GILLESPIE."

My reply to Mr. Gillespie is that I will do far more than that. I am resolved if elected to myself move in the Legislature for the abolition of the liquor traffic in every form and I will invite and compel all those of BOTH political parties who are temperance men to show their hand. Mr. Gillespie said as reported in the Globe, and published in the local papers and not denied by him, that he will support either political party IF either political party "deems it wise" to abolish the shop as well as the bar and the club. I will do more. I will do it "whether either political party deems it wise or not."

I now and always "deem it wise." Why has Mr. Gillespie in this way tied his own hands? The man who wants abolition without the "IF" will vote for me. If not, then let him vote for my friend Gillespie, who will support the abolition of the shop only when political parties have so far got out of the clutches of whiskey as to "deem it wise" and to do what they are afraid to do NOW.

Do you believe they will "THEN" if afraid "NOW?" It would be a very strange temperance man who would reason in that way. Do I make myself clear, or is there still room for the politicians to charge me with quibbling?

R. J. SODEN.

TONE OUT THE WATER SPOUT

One of the engines pulled the water spout over at the C.P.R. last evening and those standing on the platform received an untimely shower. Apart from a little damage to the spout no great inconvenience was caused.

DEATH.

GAMBLE.—At 678 Ross Street, on Monday, June 22nd, 1914, Margaret J. Stillman, relict of the late [illegible] Gamble, aged 56 years.

The funeral will be held from her late residence, Ross Street, on Wednesday, June 24th, at 2.30 o'clock, to the Little Lake Cemetery.

Only Three Acclamations Were Recorded Yesterday

THREE-CORNERED CONTESTS

TORONTO, June 23.—Yesterday was nomination day throughout Ontario. The names of candidates for the Legislature now before the electors show many changes in prospect in the line-up of the parties. Last election there were 17 Conservatives elected by acclamation. The members of the new House elected by acclamation are: T. W. McGarry, Renfrew, Con.; Dr. Forbes Godfrey, W. York, Con., and Hugh Munro, Glengarry, Lib.

In addition to Liberal bar-abolitionists there are eleven candidates running on the Temperance plank alone, namely: In Addington, Brockville, Dufferin, E. Durham, Manitoulin, W. Simcoe, N. Waterloo, Welland, S. Wellington and in two Torontos. N. Norfolk has the only anti-abolition candidate.

Socialists have been nominated in Cochrane, North Norfolk, North Perth, Timiskaming, South Victoria and Brockville.

The Labor candidates are in E. Hamilton, Nipissing, S. Lanark, St. Catharines and S. Wellington.

Whether the animals will be destroyed will be decided after an enquiry into the tragedy.

Found a Friend In Dr. Chase

His Medicines Proven Effective, and Always Kept at Hand in This Home.

Mrs. Chas. Lovell, Agassiz, B. C. writes:—"I feel it my duty to tell you what a great friend Dr. Chase's medicines have been to myself and family. I cannot praise his medicines too highly, and Dr. Chase's name is a household word in our home. Well, quite a number of years ago I sent to you for a sample box of Dr. Chase's Ointment for protruding piles, and, having used the sample and found relief, I sent to a neighbouring town for four boxes, and I am completely cured.

"I have also used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills for constipation, and, after using them, I am completely cured of this dreadful disease. I am the mother of ten children, of whom nine are living, and when seven of my children were all very bad with whooping cough, caught in the middle of a severe winter, I used Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, and they were all cured before the winter was over, and now we are never without Dr. Chase's medicines in our home, and I recommend them to all."

BULK IS LOCATED

And Both Captains Are Away Out in Their Evidence

LOG PROBE IS HOPELESS

QUEBEC, June 23. — Maintaining its record for producing contradictory and statements that cannot be reconciled to one another the Empress of Ireland Wreck Inquiry yesterday unearthed a fact when it was given the exact location of the hull of the liner on the bottom of the St. Lawrence, which again drew attention to the different explanations of the positions of the ships at the time of the disaster. On the map it was found that the resting place of the Empress is one mile and a quarter south of the place where Captain Kendall, the commander, says he was hit, and one mile northwest of the point at which Chief Officer Taftenes of the collier Storstad contends the collision happened. The location of the wreck was explained by Captain Gagnon of the Dominion Marine Department, who buoyed it.

The taking of evidence was interrupted twice yesterday because the members of the committee and the lawyers for the Government, C. P. R., and Storstad had to attend a reception given to the Duke of Connaught in the courthouse and a luncheon given to the duke by Justice Lemieux and the Quebec district judges in the Chateau Frontenac.

In the morning an effort was made to get further details about the operation of the Storstad from Chief Officer Taftenes, who had filed his scrap and deck log books. The attempt was temporarily abandoned, because it was discovered that like the engineer's log, a number of important facts had been written up after an interval of some hours, and the officer was hurried off to Montreal for the memoranda he had made at the time the orders were issued. One important fact came out and that was that the first officer, who was in charge of the collier immediately before the collision, was not told by his third officer, Jacob Saxe, that he had put the helm hard aport when the ship failed to respond to the port helm ordered.

In the afternoon a quietus was given to the suggestions made in questions asked during the enquiry that the Storstad was speeding because the officers and crew got a bonus for a quick passage. G. P. McIsaac, general manager of the Dominion Coal Co., which chartered the ship, said that while gratuities were given, they went to ships carrying the most tonnage, speed not being considered.

The cause of the tremendous inrush of water into the punctured hull of the Empress was again obviously the motive for a number of questions asked by Lord Mersey of William Moir, a night-watchman on the Empress, who was examined as to how many portholes were left open. This witness could supply no definite information, the presumption was left that the night being fine and the river calm, many of them were not closed, and that when the list grew great the flow of water through the hole in the hull was augmented by the rush through the cabin portholes.

Steamer To Be Auctioned.

MONTREAL, June 23. — Justice Dunlop, in the Admiralty Court, here yesterday, with the consent of both parties, ordered the sale by auction of the collier Storstad, which rammed and sank the Empress of Ireland near Father Point, on May 29.

ATTEMPT ABANDONED.

Salvage of Bodies From Wreck Stopped By Death of Diver.

QUEBEC, June 23.—All attempts to get the 800 bodies entombed in the sunken hull of the Empress of Ireland were abandoned yesterday following the conference between Lieut. Commander Forbes of H. M. S. Essex and the divers of the men of war at the scene of the wreck as a result of the death of Edward Cuneon of New York, on Sunday from his fall off the slimy hull of the ship.

Lieut. Commander Forbes reached Father Point yesterday and his investigation showed that the accident happened while the water was at low level, that every precaution for deep sea diving operations was properly carried out and that no better conditions for carrying on the work could be expected.

Lieut. Commander Forbes notified Captain Walsh, marine superintendent of the C. P. R. of these facts and suggested that the divers from the Essex be sent back to their ship here.

Captain Walsh reluctantly decided that everything possible had been done to secure the bodies. The divers were accordingly ordered to return to their ship.

This decision of the C. P. R. does not affect the operations of the company attempting to salvage the ship, but it is thought here that it will also be compelled to give up diving operations.

Federal Government Heads Fund For Hillcrest Disaster.

OTTAWA, June 23. — Sir Robert Borden stated yesterday afternoon that he sent a message to Senator Lougheed in Calgary asking if a relief committee had been appointed in connection with the Hillcrest disaster, and intimating that the Government was prepared to contribute $50,000 to help the families of the unfortunate coal miners.

While the safety of mines is a matter for provincial jurisdiction, and the investigation into the calamity will be made by the Alberta authorities, the Department of Labor and the Department of Mines will both be represented at the inquiry.

The Mines Department has sent J. S. C. Hudson, an experienced official, to report on the facts as brought out at the inquiry and the cause of the accident. J. D. McNven will represent the Labor Department at the inquiry.

"THE TERMS OF SURRENDER"

By Louis Tracy

"Well, since you have actually returned from Mars, or whatever planet you have been visiting, I suppose you want to look into your account?"

"It seems a reasonable thing to do, especially as I a thinking of marrying," agreed Power.

The official gave some instruction to the general office, and a passbook was produced. There were, of course, hardly any entries on the debit side, and payments from mine and ranch had been made half-yearly; so one small book contained the whole of the seven years' statement. Power, unaccustomed as yet to the methods of financial bookkeeping, turned to the latest column, and saw a row of figures. He looked perplexed, whereat the manager smiled.

"Well," came the question, "I fancy you find yourself well able to maintain a wife?"

Power's eyes seemed to be fascinated by the item which had first attracted them.

"Yes-s," he said hesitatingly; "but I had a notion that I was very much better off."

Then it was the manager's turn to be puzzled. He rose, came round the table at which the two were seated, and adjusted his eyeglasses.

"Better off!" he exclaimed. "Why, you are a very rich man, Mr. Power. Don't you see——" He broke off into a loud laugh as he discovered the entry which this queer-mannered client was gazing at. "Man alive," he cried, "that is the last half year's interest on your capital! The current rate is rather low, two and one-half per cent. Here," and he pointed to the top of the page, "is a summary of your deposit—four million dollars, all in hard cash. If you mean to begin investing, I must ask you to go slow. Even in your own interests, that is advisable. Heavy purchases of stock tend to bull the market, and it is a little inclined to go that way at the moment. I'll give you a list of gilt-edged securities which will, of course, nearly double your annual revenue from invested capital alone. You had better show it to some other adviser, and, when you have selected your stocks, let me begin operating. I can carry the whole thing through in a couple of months without letting Wall Street know that a big buyer is in the market."

Power was rather stunned by the amount of his wealth, and an odd thought darted through his brain that if, in the world of to-day, no tempter could bribe another Doctor Faustus with the offer of renewed youth, the fiend might pour gold into his chosen victim's pockets. Almost could he feel the mocking phantom at his shoulder; though, indeed, there was none other in the room than the courteous banker.

"Great Scott!" the latter was saying. "What a bonanza that mine of yours is! And Bison is growing quite a town. I paid it a flying visit last summer. Have you been there recently. I imagine not, since your cablegram came from Buenos Aires."

Bison was a word to evoke shadows; but it sufficed to drive one away just then.

"Ah, Bison!" said Power, standing up. "I must go west at once. I have not even made known to MacGonigal my presence in America. He is well, I hope?"

"Fatter than ever. There is some talk of his running for governor."

"And Jake, the man in charge of the ranch? Did you hear of him when you were in Colorado?"

"Yes, indeed. He is married."

"Married! Jake!"

"More than that, his wife, a pretty little woman, told me she had to threaten a divorce in order to stop him from mounting the little Jakes on what he calls 'plugs' before the kiddies were well out of the perambulator."

A clerk announced through a speaking tube that someone wanted the banker. The conventional, "Ask him to wait one minute," warned Power that this was no hour for gossip.

"I can have some money now?" he inquired.

"As much as you like."

"May I ask—I am a child in these matters—if good diamonds are obtainable in New York, and what I ought to pay for a ring—an engagement ring?"

"Our diamonds are not cheap; but they are supposed to be the pick of the market. I think you ought to get a perfect ring for a thousand dollars. By the way, there is quite an accumulation of letters here. Leave your address, and they will be packed and sent to your rooms."

Power wrote a check at the counter, and was given a bundle of notes. He went to a well-known jewellery establishment recommended by the bank manager, and asked to be shown some engagement rings.

"What size, sir?" inquired an attendant.

"Oh, not anything remarkable, but of the best quality.

"I mean, sir, what size is the lady's finger?"

Power laughed. He realised that he must come down out of the clouds, and pay heed occasionally to the minor phases of life.

"I don't know. She has small hands, and, long, tapering fingers," he said, smiling down at his own fatuity; for the description might have been line taken bodily out of nineteen novels among every twenty.

'It really doesn't matter, sir," said the shopman, eager to please a new customer. "If you choose a suitable ring, the lady can send or bring it here, and it will be adjusted to the right size without any delay or extra charge."

"But she is in England."

"Exactly the same conditions apply in our London branch."

So Power bought a very beautiful ring, which happened to contain seven graduated stones in a single row. The number pleased him, and he was sure Meg would note its significance. He secured the guage thus early so that he might write and tell her about it; while its mere possession and safe guarding would supply an extra stimulus for a speedy crossing of the Atlantic.

Then he strolled up Fifth Avenue, and did not flinch from memories of the last time he had passed through that remarkable thoroughfare. He would be callous, indeed, if his thoughts did not dwell on Nancy, and go back to the sweet lawlessness of their brief companionship. Where was she now he wondered. A fine lady, no doubt, ruffling it with matronly self-possession among the high-born friends she had won in Paris and London. And that mean-spirited wretch, her father? Dead, in all probability, or eating his heart out in semi-insanity; for Power was beginning to see, with surer, wider vision, that Willard must have known he was a murderer, since no other hand but his had sent a dear and honoured woman to her grave.

Then his mind reverted to Marguerite Sinclair, and he was comforted by his knowledge of her frank, joyous make-the-best-of-everything temperament. He had not deluded himself into the belief that he was marrying her in the flood-tide of passion which had overwhelmed Nancy and himself. s Pretence was always hateful to him, and it would be rank hypocrisy to assume that the madness of that first love could ever again surge through heart and brain. Marguerite's own action in accepting him after she had looked into the pages of his earlier life gave ample assurance that she would be content with his faith and devotion. She was no lovesick maid, but a woman of strong, clear perceptions. He was troubled with no doubt as to the future nor qualm as to the past, and he thanked Providence humbly for having allotted him such a true and honest helpmate for his remaining years.

On returning to the hotel he found a bulky package in his room. It contained heaps of letters and other documents which had been sent to the bank or forwarded from Bison, and, of course, they were mostly seven years old, or thereabouts. Two, bearing recent postmarks, caught his eye, and he read them first.

One was from Dacre. "You see," it ran, "I remain on the map. "If this reaches you, cable me. My house is yours for so long as you care to stay."

The other brought a smile to his lips. It was in Spanish, and signed "Bartolomeo Malaspina":

"Honoured Senor (wrote the captain of the Carmen).—"You asked me to write after seven years. Well, praised be my saint, I am still alive, and I hope you are. I have often spoken to my wife of the wretchedness of soul you caused me by disappearing among those accursed Indians; but I must admit, nevertheless, that your short voyage in my ship brought me luck, for I fell in with a liner with a broken shaft caused by colliding with a derelict, and she was drifting into the reefs off Hanover Island when I got a tow-rope on board. It was a fine job to haul her as far as Punta Arenas; but, thanks to the Eleven Thousand Virgins, I managed it, and the salvage made me a rich man. The Carmen, too, ran ashore at Iquique on the homeward voyage, and she was well insured. Write, I pray you, if you have escaped from the cannibals. If not, a year from this date, I shall pay for two masses for the repose of your soul."

So, then, he was remembered by a few friends. The knowledge consoled him for the heedless rush and flurry of New York.

An impulse seized him to break the seals of an envelope marked, "To be burnt, unopened, by my executors," and take therefrom two letters which he knew it contained. The action was nothing more nor less than a trial of his new-born resolve; since the letters were Nancy's to himself and Willard's to his mother. He read them calmly and dispassionately. Willard malicious threat he dismissed quickly. It had served its vile purpose, and its victims paid the price demanded, the mother by death, the son by suffering. But Nancy's few disconnected sentences gripped his imagination with a new force. Had he misjudged her? He wondered. What argument had Willard used that she yielded so promptly and completely? The broken, pitiful words brought a mist before his eyes. Poor girl! Perhaps, in her woman's way, she had endured miseries from which life among the Indians had rescued him. Then he recalled the farewell message she had given to Dacre, and the momentary belief that he might have acted precipitately died away. Should he ever meet her in the years to come? He hoped not, with all his heart. He must so contrive Meg's life and his own that they would pass their days far from the haunts of society. The worship of the golden calf permits its votaries no escape. Thank Heaven, and he and his wife would never practice the cult!

Glancing casually through the rest of the heap, his attention was drawn to a couple of cablegrams. He opened one, and found that it was dated in the late autumn of that memorable year. It read:

"Leave everything, and forget all that has passed. Come at once.

"N."

One night, sleeping in the depths of a Patagonian forest, he had been aroused by the snarl of some wild animal close at hand. He had never known what beast it was that rustled away among the undergrowth; but he felt the same sense of impending evil now. Thinking the other message might be more explanatory, he tore at the envelope with nervous fingers; but the contents were an exact replica of its predecessor. Then he saw that one had been sent to Bison and the other to New York on the same day, the place of origin of each being London.

He could not doubt that "N" was "Nancy," and he asked himself, with quick foreboding, what strong motive had inspired this urgent command. He was to forget all that had passed! What strangely variable creatures women were, to be sure! Could she, or any woman, honestly imagine that such a request might be obeyed? Forget that struggle between love and duty; forget the delirium of that fortnight in the Adirondacks; forget the numb agony of the days following her flight? As soon might a man forget his own name!

Nerving himself to the task, he searcher for some written word which should make clear the baffling enigma. Soon he came across two letters in Nancy's handwriting, and and bearing the London postmark. The dates were three months apart, and the earlier one corresponded with that on the cablegrams; so he opened it first and read:

"My own dear Derry.—A few hours ago I cabled you, both to Bison and New York, that you are to come to me without delay, and I hope, I even pray on my knees, that you are already in the train or steamer. Still, I am in such a fever of dread lest any untoward event may have kept my message from you, or prevented you from starting instantly, that I write also. If, which Heaven forbid, any shred of doubt or misgiving has gripped you, and you have decided to await a more explicit reason for my action in bidding you come, I am writing by to-day's mail to tell you that circumstances beyond my control, or yours, render it imperative that I should leave Hugh Marten now and forever. Derry, don't ask me to explain myself more fully. There are things which a woman may whisper, but which she cannot write. Yet it is only just that I should, at least, make plain the dreadful conditions under which I left you five months since. My father meant to kill you before my eyes. No consideration would have stopped him. He was resolved to shoot you without warning if I refused to return right-away to Marten's house, and I yielded; for I could not bear the thought of seeing you stretched lifeless in front of the dear little hut in which we had been so happy. I may have been weak, but I loved you too much to let you give your life in exchange for my love, and he convinced me he was in deadly earnest. So I went away with him, and tried to make myself despicable in your eyes as the surest way of searing the bitter wound my action would cause. Remember, he left me no alternative. The break had to be final, or he would seek you out and slay you without mercy, and I know only too well that he not only meant what he said, but that our laws would support and public opinion acclaim his action. Well, I travelled with him to England, and have been so ill ever since—though not physically such a wreck as I have pretended to be—that Marten believes I am suffering from the effects of the heat wave, and has compelled me to endure the treatment and scrutiny of many doctors. And to-day, one of them—— But now I must be dumb, except to tel you that, whether or not it means death to both of us, you must come and take me away to some secret place where none can find us. Don't think that this little letter is written in a moment of impulse. It is not the product of a woman's hysteria. It is a cry from my very heart. And, in the midst of my desolation, I am glad—oh, so glad!! I am aflame with a delight that is almost superhuman; for I know that you will understand, and that nothing on earth can ever part us again. My tears are falling on this page, but my higher and truer self is singing a canticle of praise and wonderful joy. Hurry, Derry hurry!

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Catarrh.

Dozens of remedies are said to be cures for catarrh, and many do excellent work in that disease, but every household contains the best known remedy, and it is actually so simple that most persons disregard its merits.

Dissolve a pinch of ordinary table salt in one-fourth of a pint of warm water and pour a little in the palm of the hand and place the nostrils in it and snuff it up the nose, taking care that some touches the tissues of the tubes reaching to the mouth. Repeat several times and then wait for ten or twelve hours and repeat the treatment. Keep this up for a week or two and catarrh will disappear.

Strong salt water will cause pain in the head, but weak warm salt water is perfectly harmless and will cleanse the tissues more effectually than any other remedy. This treatment is a great breath purifier and will clear up the throat. A little stronger salt water used as a gargle will relieve sore throat and aid in preventing diphtheria.

Degrees of Finality.

When a girl says "No"
She may kinder grow,

But there's little hope
When a girl says "Nope."

And there's not a bit
When she murmurs "Nit."

A WEAK CHESTED BOY

"My boy Frank seemed weak chested and took a very severe cold," writes Mrs. D. Stevens, Ninga, Man. "The many medicines used did not seem to benefit him, until we tried Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine and found it to be exactly what was wanted to cure him." No treatment is so thorough and effective as a cure for croup and bronchitis.

THIN FOLKS WHO WOULD BE FAT

Increase in Weight Ten Pounds or More

A PHYSICIAN'S ADVICE.

"I will certainly give most anything to be able to fat up a few pounds and stay that way," designes every excessively thin man or woman. Such result is not impossible, despite past failures. Thin people are victims of mal-nutrition, a condition which prevents the fatty elements of food from being taken up by the blood as they are when the powers of nutrition are normal. Instead of getting into the blood, all the fat and flesh producing elements stay in the intestines and they pass from the body as waste.

To correct this condition and to produce a healthy, normal amount of flesh the nutritive processes must be artificially supplied with the power which nature has denied them. This can best be accomplished by eating a Sargol tablet with every meal. Sargol is a scientific combination of six of the best strength-giving, fat-producing elements known to the medical profession. Taken with meals, it mixes with the food and turns the sugars and starches into rich, ripe nourishment for the tissues and blood and its rapid effect is remarkable. Reported gains of from ten to twenty-five pounds in a single month are by no means infrequent. Yet its action is perfectly natural and absolutely harmless. Sargol is sold by good druggists everywhere and, every package contains a guarantee of weight increase or money back.

Caution:—While Sargol has produced remarkable results in the treatment of nervous indigestion and general stomach disorders, it should not, owing to its remarkable flesh-producing effect, be used by those who are not willing to increase their weight ten pounds or more.

A Chinese View of American Women.

"The intellect of the American woman is equal, if not superior, to that of the men," says Dr. Wu Ting Fang, late Chinese minister to the United States. In "America Through the Spectacles of an Oriental Diplomat." "American women are good conversationalists, and many of them are eloquent and endowed with 'the gift of gab.' One of the cleverest and wittiest speeches I have ever heard was from a woman who spoke at a public meeting on a public question. They are also good writers, and their work shows profound insight and wide culture. Naturally such women cannot be expected to play second fiddle. They exercise great influence, and when married they 'rule the roost.' It should be mentioned that their husbands submit willingly to their tactful rule and gladly obey their commands without feeling that they are servants. I would advise any married woman who complains of her husband being unruly and unpleasant to take a lesson from the ladies of America."

His Labor Saving Device.

The late Charles H. Britting, proprietor of the New York actors' restaurant known as the "Little Hall of Fame," took a keen interest in popular trends and moverments of all kinds. Mr. Britting thought little of scientific management and efficiency engineering. He said one day of an efficiency engineer:

"Blank is a fool, and I thought he'd go broke, but, by jingo, the fellow has deceived me. He has discovered a labor saving device, and his address will be Easy street from now on."

"Good boy, Blank!" said an actor. "And what labor saving device has he discovered?"

"An elderly widow." Mr. Britting answered—"an elderly widow with a million who has consented to marry him."—New York Tribune.

Strange Race of Ancient Britons.

Among the races of human kind which away back of history's records passed like clouds over various parts of the earth one of the most puzzling to ethnologists is that of the early bronze age men who dwelt in Aberdeenshire, Scotland, and are supposed to have constructed the special forms of stone circles whose remains are now found there. These men differed significantly from all the prehistoric racial types previously determined in Britain. They were remarkably broadheaded, and their average stature was only five feet three inches, as shown by skeletons. The British neolithic race was markedly long headed, and the bronze age race, which built the round tumuli, was also long headed and tall.

Albania's Flag.

The flag of the new kingdom of Albania will be a tricolor—red, black and white in horizontal stripes. On the black stripe, which is in the middle, is five pointed white star, the symbol of Scanderbeg, the Albanian national hero.

Baby Eczema Becomes Chronic

Causing Great Suffering and Anxiety —Prompt Relief and Cure by Dr. Chase's Ointment.

This is one reason why every mother should know about Dr. Chase's Ointment, since it is an unfailing cure for all itching skin diseases.

Mrs. F. Clarke, Belmont, Man., writes:—"My baby had eczema on her ear. The sore was very bad, and nothing seemed to do her much good. Hearing of the remarkable cures Dr. Chase's Ointment was making, we sent for some, and after the third application the sore began to heal. I am glad to say that it is quite well now, and we give the credit to Dr. Chase's Ointment. We cannot recommend this preparation too highly."

Here is another letter, which tells of the cure of a five-weeks-old baby: Mrs. Wallace Mingon, River John Road, Colchester County, N.S., writes: "My little girl took eczema when she was five weeks old. Though we doctored her until she was nearly a year old, she got no better. I was advised to use Dr. Chase's Ointment, and this treatment completely cured her."

The Man Who Was Laughed At

By SADIE OLCOTT

Muldrough was a ranchman. He was a typical westerner; but, having made money at raising sheep, he held his head pretty high. He had a daughter, Rosa, who was a rustic beauty. Muldrough didn't propose that Rosa should take up with a cowpuncher or anything like that. He intended her for a ranchman, like himself, who rode over his broad acres and bossed others.

A ranchman came courting his daughter, true enough, but not the kind of ranchman Muldrough was looking for. His name was Jabez Stubbs. He came out from Missouri to start ranching on fifty acres of land and with a dozen sheep. He was the homeliest man in the west, and so ignorant was he of western ways that he didn't even carry a revolver. He caught sight of Rosa Muldrough one day skimming along on horseback, for all the world like a swallow, only a hundred times as pretty, and he wanted her right off.

He was a very honorable fellow. Stubbs was, almost as honorable as he was homely. One morning Muldrough was standing on his porch, booted and spurred for a ride over his domain, when he saw Stubbs coming up to the house mounted on a horse as meanly looking as the rider was homely. When he reached the porch, without dismounting he said in a cracked voice:

"Mr. Muldrough, I've come to ask you for your daughter—that is, if she'll marry me. I've got fifty acres of land and a dozen sheep, but that isn't all the property I've got. There's $675 in the Dime Savings Bank of Independence, Mo., and $972 in"—

He got no further. Muldrough put his hand to his hip, drew his revolver and, pointing it at him, said:

"Git!"

Stubbs looked up, apparently more surprised than hurt, and, digging his heels into his horse, rode away, saying:

"Very well, Mr. Muldrough, I've taken the right course in asking your permission to win your daughter before speaking to her. Now, since your treatment of me I give you notice that I'll win her if I can without your permission."

A burst of laughter, in which was mingled a lot of scorn, was the only reply to this threat. Then Muldrough went into the house and told Rosa all about it. She didn't laugh as he did, for, down in the bottom of her heart, she sympathized with Stubbs on account of the treatment he had received from her father. But Muldrough did not notice this and never dreamed that he had anything to fear from Stubbs through Rosa.

Some time after this, when the girl was out on her horse, she met Stubbs. He rode right on, looking at her wistfully out of his eyes till he saw her draw rein; then he came to a stop.

"Mr. Stubbs," she said, "I wish to say to you that a man who pays a woman the highest compliment he can pay her—provided he wants her for herself—is entitled to a civil reply. My father was not warranted in his treatment of you the other day, especially since your cause was perfectly honorable. Nor was he authorized to speak for me. Though I highly appreciate the compliment you have paid me, I decline your proposition because I do not love you."

"I thank you for saying it to me instead of never giving me an answer at all. I'm sorry you don't love me. I love you and shall always love you. I'll never love any one else."

"Why do you especially want me, Mr. Stubbs?"

"Because I do."

"There are plenty of girls in the world far more attractive than I."

"Not to me."

"I wish you didn't feel as you do. It troubles me to give any one pain, and to be the cause of your spending your life alone distresses me very much."

"And I don't like the idea of distressing you. I'm not going to distress you any more than I can help. If you think my being about here will have that effect on you I'll go elsewhere."

"Oh, I wouldn't drive you away from here. That would be selfishness. I can't love you, but I can sympathize with you."

After a few more words they both rode on. When Rosa had gone some distance she drew rein, turned her horse's head and looked back. Stubbs was sitting on his horse, facing her, not far from where she had met him. She waved a hand to him, then turned again and rode on.

One day Muldrough went home after being out all day to find his daughter gone. She had left a note for him, bedewed with tears, saying that she had gone off to be married. She knew her father would not consent to the match, so she was obliged to go away and be married somewhere else. She did not give her lover's name.

Muldrough stormed until he learned that the man his daughter had married was the one he had laughed at when he had made an application for her hand. Then he was crushed.

Jabez Stubbs if he had been permitted to finish the list of his bank accounts might possibly have been accepted, for he could have bought out Muldrough two or three times over. He is now the richest man in his state.

But Rosa knew nothing of this when she married him. She certainly did not marry him for money or for looks. What she did marry him for has been a question among her friends ever since.

The best epitaph most of us could hope to accumulate would be the fact that some one outside of the immediate family cried when we died.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Slight Burns.

Put the part instantly in cold water or cover it with moistened baking powder and then with a wet cloth. When the skin is destroyed the point to be attained is to exclude the air. Do this by covering the burn with sweet oil, vaseline, linseed oil, carron oil, lard or with flour spread thickly on a linen cloth or on cotton batting.

An excellent covering for burnt surfaces is made by mixing common whiting (used in kitchens for polishing purposes) with sweet oil or cottonseed oil or even water to a thick paste. With this the burn is carefully covered by means of a feather, taking care not to break the blister; then the whole part is covered with cotton cloth and kept clean and moist.

AN AGITATED EAST INDIAN.

He Does Not Want the Englishwomen In His Country Spoiled.

The following quaint letter from Ramchandu Kashinath Datturya to the Times of India (Bombay) speaks out loud for itself:

"My purpos for writin on yee this is to enform your many English Brothers not to give honor and devotion to your ladys becaus they will in the end becum proud and then they will want vote. 2 or 3 thing happen at Victory Garden tomorrow (yesterday) and I all of a sudden made up my brain to write you immediate. There was many English womans and when mans are sitting on the bench, and womans come, man stand, and give their sit to woman. This happen 2 or 3 times tomorrow (yesterday) and I question you why? I again tell you why? Mans and womans are similar in this world and then why mens honore womans? If they honors old old women, one thing, but they honors young lady.

"My purpos to write this to enform the English Sahib Loks (Englishmen) that when they do this they spoil their feminine lady kind then this lady get proud and walk like peeck and then ask vote, and then spoil Kew Garden and throw bomb on Lold Gorg, put bursting powder in envelope and post, and create other mischief. Therefore I say to my Englis, please don't spoil Englis womans in India because by honoring them you people put in their brains the side (seeds) of Suffragtism and then they will get wild like Miesis Pancurs. Please please print this letter near the Ruter's Telegram with big big words."

A GHOST IN THE CLOUDS.

Curious Experience of an English Army Aviator.

The first air ghost has just been encountered on Salisbury plain by one of the most skillful of the army aviators, who went up in a monoplane on a cloudy day accompanied by his mechanic.

The aeroplane entered the clouds, and the pilot was continuing his flight in them when suddenly he discovered another monoplane, no more than fifty yards away, coming straight toward him out of the mist. He dived almost vertically, and, after a headlong descent, leveled out once more, but his relief was only momentary.

The other pilot must have performed exactly the same maneuver, for no sooner was he speeding along again on a level than he saw the monoplane once again looming out of the mist, heading straight toward him.

Terror struck, the pilot dived again; emerged below the clouds and forthwith landed. Not until then did the explanation strike him. He had fallen a victim to a hallucination of the clouds familiar to every Alpinist and had seen his living shadow projected upon the film of vapor.—Sheffield Telegraph.

Australia's Oil Prize.

The government of South Australia has offered a bonus of $34,000 to the first person or body corporate that obtains from a bore or well situated in South Australia 100,000 gallons of crude petroleum containing not less than 90 per cent of products obtainable by distillation. The oil must be stored at the bore or well from which it is obtained until the whole 100,000 gallons have accumulated, and the minister of mines will require samples of the strata passed through by the borer taken at every fifty feet sunk and a certificate from the government analyst showing the results of his analysis of samples of the oil.

Needless Killing.

Highway accidents have increased so rapidly in the United Kingdom since the very extensive introduction of mechanically propelled vehicles that in the twelve months ended Dec. 31, 1913, the number of those killed on the highways in town and country reached the large total of 2,099, while 42,544 were injured, which was an average of nearly six killed and of more than 122 cases of injury for each day of the year.

ECZEMA AND SORE EYES

"My daughter suffered from inflamed eyelids and eczema on her head," writes Mr. H. W. Lear, Port Plamford, Nfld. "The child was in a bad state and suffered greatly. The doctor failed to help her, and on recommendation of a friend, I used Dr. Chase's Ointment, which made a complete cure. With a grateful heart I write you this letter."

Queer Talismans in Malta.

There are still to be found in Malta a number of small stones shaped and colored like the eyes, tongues and other parts of serpents. The superstitious among the Maltese connect these with the tradition that St. Paul when shipwrecked was cast on their island, and it was there that while lighting a bundle of sticks for a fire a viper fastened on the apostle's hand. St. Paul calmly shook the reptile off into the flames, and no harm followed. The natives wear these stones as talismans, in which character they suppose them serviceable in warding off dangers from snake bites and poisons. They are found in St. Paul's cave, embedded in clay, and are set in rings and bracelets and when found to be in the shape of a tongue or liver or heart are hung around the neck.

Queer Old Book Titles.

These are some of the odd titles of old English books published in the time of Cromwell:

"A Most Delectable Sweet Perfumed Nosegay for God's Saints to Smell At."

"Biscuit Baked in the Oven of Charity, carefully conserved for the Chickens of the Church, the Sparrows of the Spirit and the Sweet Swallows of Salvation."

"A Sigh of Sorrow For the Sinners of Zion breathed out of a Hole in the Wall of an Earthly Vessel known Among Men by the name of Samuel Fish."

"Eggs of Charity Layed For the Chickens of the Covenant and Boiled with the Water of Divine Love. Take ye out and Eat."

"The Spiritual Mustard Pot to make the Soul Sneeze with Devotion."

Taking a Mean Advantage.

Once a thrifty Scotch physician was called to a case where a woman had dislocated her jaw. He very soon put her right. The woman asked how much was to pay. The doctor named his fee. The patient thought it too much. He, however, would not take less, and to the woman refused to give him the fee he began to yawn. Yawning, as every one knows, is infectious. The young woman in turn yawned. Her jaw again went out of joint, and the doctor triumphantly said, "Now, until you hand me over my fee your jaw can remain as it is." Needless to say, the money was promptly paid.

LIGHTNING AND TREES.

Forest Fires and the Way Many of Them Are Started.

Forest officers say that the increasing care with fire on the part of the railroads and the public generally tends to make lightning the largest single contributing cause of forest fires.

This statement represents a change of view from that held less than a decade ago in this country, when forest journals gravely argued whether lightning caused forest fires, though it was known that trees were the objects most often struck. Trees are said to be oftenest struck simply because they are so numerous and, extending upward, they shorten the distance between the ground and the clouds; further, their branches in the air and roots well into the earth invite electrical discharges.

While certain trees are said to invite lightning and others to be immune from stroke, it seems to be a fact that any kind of tree will be struck, and the most numerous tree species in any locality is the one most likely to suffer.

Other things being equal, lightning seeks the tallest tree or an isolated tree or one on high ground. A deep rooted tree is a better conductor than a shallow rooted one, and a tree full of sap or wet with rain is, of course, a better conductor than a dry one.

Lightning sets fires by igniting the tree itself, particularly when it is dead or partly decayed and punky, or by igniting the dry humus or duff at its base. The forest soil when dried out ignites readily because it is made of partly decayed twigs and leaves, and it can hold a smoldering fire for a considerable period. It is probable that most of the lightning set fires start in the duff.

A COMBINATION CURE.

Medical and Surgical Methods That Wrought Almost a Miracle.

Such a combination of the most modern surgical and medical methods and devices was used recently in London to save the life of a boy aviator who had been badly injured in the fall of his monoplane that the case is attracting the attention of medical men in all countries.

The aviator's left leg was badly broken and was treated by one of the new practices. The broken bones were spliced by metal plates called Lane's plates. It had been feared that lockjaw might develop from the tear in his leg caused by the broken bones at the time of the fall, and after the bones had been spliced the dreaded lockjaw appeared. Tetanus or lockjaw antitoxin was then injected into his back. This helped, but did not entirely stop the progress of the dreaded infection, so his leg had to be amputated.

For various reasons it was inadvisable and dangerous to give him ether in the ordinary way to produce unconsciousness during the operation, so he was anaesthetized by injections direct into the blood. From then on for many days it was a battle to save him from death as a result of the shock of the operation, his other injuries and his weakness.

Antispasmodics and other drugs were given by injection, and at times he was kept alive by having him breathe oxygen bubbling through alcohol. Altogether six of the most recent medical and surgical methods were used in addition to many ordinary ones, and in two months he was discharged from the hospital cured.—Saturday Evening Post.

Spying on Students.

The manager of a detective agency recently established in the Belgian university town of Louvain sent a circular letter to the parents of a number of students offering to send them monthly reports of the behavior of their sons for a small fixed fee. The students heard of this, and several hundred of them marched to the offices of the detective agency and broke all the windows. They then made a demonstration at the house of the vice rector of the university, who had approved of the scheme of monthly reports. The students stated that they would not cease their protests until the vice rector had resigned.

Jean Jaures No Dandy.

M. Jaures, the famous French Socialist and orator, is no dandy. His arrival at a fashionable garden party given by Mme. Waldeck-Rousseau to her husband's political supporters, in his office coat, with ink stained shirt sleeves, a waistcoat and trousers belonging to two different suits and an old and weather beaten straw hat, is still remembered. It may see strange in the circumstances that he should have made his first reputation as a lecturer at a girls' school, but that is nevertheless the fact. He is an excellent classical scholar.—Westminster Gazette.

Uncle Sam's Chief Justices.

The chief justices of the United States supreme court have been, from 1789 to 1795, John Jay of New York; 1795 to 1796, John Rutledge of South Carolina (presided only one term, appointment not confirmed by the senate); Oliver Ellsworth of Connecticut, 1796 to 1799; John Marshall of Virginia, 1801 to 1835; Roger B. Taney of Maryland, 1836 to 1864; Salmon P. Chase of Ohio, 1864 to 1873; Morrison R. Waite of Ohio, 1874 to 1888; Melville W. Fuller of Illinois, 1888 to 1910; Edward Douglas White of Louisiana, since 1910.

A Story About Rodin.

The Cri de Paris tells a most amusing story, if true, about Rodin and some unnamed rich American woman who had selected him to make a statue of herself, full length and so far as possible a portrait. She had posed ten times in antique costume when Rodin told her that he did not need her any more and that he would finish the work at his leisure. When the American came again she found to her amazement that the head of the statue bore no resemblance whatever to her. She complained bitterly that no one would even recognise her. "It is true," said the great sculptor dreamily. "Your head did not inspire me at all. At first I thought I would not put any head on the statue, but after I had thought it over carefully, in order not to offend you I put in place of your face that of Mme. de R. She had ordered hers of me, but never paid for it. At any rate, you will gain much by this change!"

The Superior Subordinate.

"There is no more valuable subordinate than the man to whom you can give a piece of work and then forget about it, in the confident expectation that the next time it is brought to your attention it will come in the form of a report that the thing has been done," says Gifford Pinchot. "When this master quality is joined to executive power, loyalty and common sense, the result is a man whom you can trust. On the other hand, there is no greater nuisance to a man heavily burdened with the direction of affairs than the weak backed assistant who is continually trying to get his chief to do his work for him, on the feeble plea that he thought the chief would like to decide this or that himself. The man to whom an executive is most grateful, the man whom he will work hardest and value most, is the man who accepts responsibility willingly."—Engineering News.

His Successor.

Shortly after the death of one of England's greatest poets a devoted admirer of his visited the little Westmoreland village where the poet had lived and died to gaze reverently at his house, the little church and at some of his favorite haunts where some of his immortal poems were composed.

Seeing an old man (a native of the village), the stranger entered into conversation with him, remarking sadly on the death of the poet, to which the old man answered kindly and encouragingly:

"Aye, aye. Still I mak' no doobt but t' wife'll carry the blaness on."—London Mail.

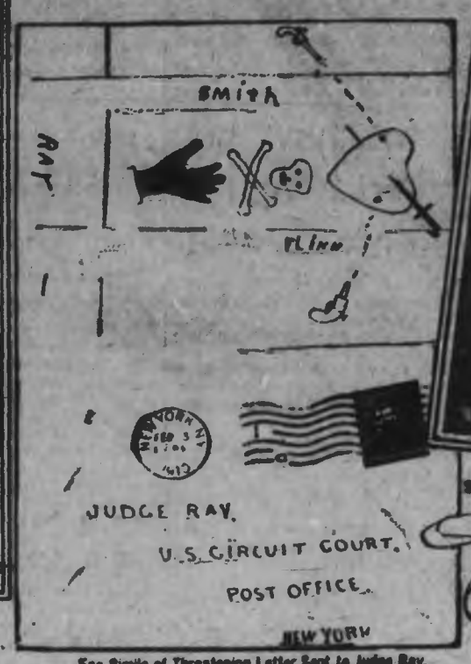
BLACK HAND SECRETS REVEALED BY CHIEF OF SECRET SERVICE

The Black Hand Seeks to Throttle the Law

By WILLIAM J. FLYNN
Chief of the United States Secret Service

Justice George W. Ray, Who Presided at the Black Hand Trial



Fac-Simile of Threatening Letter Sent to Judge Ray.

Salvatore Saitta, Who Was Kidnapped

The First Man to Pass the Doorway Staggered Back, Pale and Trembling.

THE grip of the Black Hand was not broken by the arrest of Lupo, Morello and six of their aids. The vicious fingers of the society which were striving ferociously to throttle the law were loosed in their hold, but they did not let go. Perhaps the most difficult phase of the long battle against the lawless Sicilians was to convict them. Morello and Lupo had kept themselves so well guarded in the background throughout the operations of the counterfeiters that it was difficult to connect them with the making or passing of the spurious money. Morello was the hardest to reach. He was the brains of the organization and Lupo was his personal representative.

Morello was imaginative. Lupo was practical and carried out Morello's ideas. Between them and the men who printed the bogus notes and "pushers of the queer," or those who put the money into circulation, were a dozen different agents. How the Black Hand grappled with justice gives a clear idea of the power and organization of the society and the length to which its members will go to defeat the ends of justice.

January, 26, 1910, the trial of the Black Handers opened in the United States Court for the Southern District of New York, before Judge George W. Ray, in the Federal Building, New York city.

I have already told of the great fund which the Black Hand raised for the defence of the counterfeiters. It amounted to at least $50,000, but the amount of money actually spent in efforts to bring about the acquittal of the Black Hand members is a matter for guesswork. The sum was enormous.

One of the best lawyers in the city, a man once Governor of one of the largest States in the Union, was approached by Black Hand agents. He was offered $10,000 to defend the counterfeiters, but refused on the grounds that he believed them to be guilty.

The agents made every effort to convince him that the Black Handers were victims of a plot laid by the Secret Service to bring to the bar men who could be made the scapegoats for the failure of the government to apprehend the real counterfeiters. When the lawyer refused again to take the case he was offered $20,000, but feeling that he would be defending men he was certain were criminals and not serving the best interests of the government he steadfastly declined to have anything to do with the case.

Agents of the Black Hand society offered a member of the New York police force a generous sum of money to allow Morello to escape while he was being transferred from the Tombs Prison to the court house, but the policeman was honest and would not listen to his tempters. The bribe was doubled, but still it was not accepted, and Morello went to trial. The man who was offered this bribe will be very much surprised to read that I knew of it.

Letters threatening death and worse were sent to many of those connected with the trial. One sent to Judge Ray read:—

"If Lupo, Morello and their companions are not liberated you will die like a dog. We have killed better men than you or Smith or Flynn."

Abel I. Smith was the Assistant District Attorney who prosecuted the counterfeiters.

Another letter mailed to Judge Ray was even more typical of the Black Hand methods of attack. The address was printed in ink:—"Judge Ray, U. S. Circuit Court, Post Office, New York." Inside the envelope was a sheet of paper on which was drawn in ink a large heart pierced by a stiletto. At each side of the sheet was a revolver. Dotted lines from the muzzles of these weapons indicated the course of the bullets which struck the heart at either side.

Beneath the heart was a skull and crossbones and between them a black hand. At one side was a strip of writing calling Abel I. Smith many things which would not look well in print and promising him that if the prisoners were convicted he would be killed before they had been transferred to the federal prison. At the bottom was a similar attack on Judge Ray and at the other side threats and curses against me. A facsimile of the letter is reproduced on this page, but the attacks against us have been obliterated because it would not be decent to reproduce them.

In view of the threats which were made against the witnesses and officials of the government, the court room during the trial of the Black Handers was well guarded by armed Secret Service men and policemen in plain clothes. Every known Black Hander in the court room was under surveillance. Violence was forestalled, but even the large force of armed officers in the room could not effectively stamp out the dreaded "omerta," or Sicilian death sign. This is one of the forces for evil most dreaded by the police and the Secret Service, for it will induce an eye witness while on the stand to swear that he knows nothing whatever about a crime.

When a witness takes the stand he may see this sign from a score of different points in the court room, and there is no effective way to battle against it. Even though a Secret Service man sees a person in the court room make the sign and evicts him, the damage has already been done. Witnesses have been known to falter, stammer in their speech, reel and faint from apparently no cause whatever. When revived they have appeared dazed and, no matter what their testimony before, have sworn that they were ignorant of the facts surrounding the case.

The Eight Prisoners Gazed Tranquilly but Grimly at "Comito the Sheep."

The Dreaded Sicilian Death Sign Which Frightened Comito.

"By the Merciful God in Heaven," Rosina Shrieked, "I Swear I Do Not Know About This Man."
Drawn by Freeman, Illustrating the Trial

Comito, the man who worked the presses for the counterfeiters in the stone house at Highland, was the star witness for the government in the trial of Lupo, Morello and the other Black Handers. He it was who confessed to me the entire plot of the counterfeiters, gave me all their names and supplied facts which enabled me to arrest the leaders, with a fair certainty of convicting them. I have told in a previous article how the Black Hand tried to wreak vengeance on Comito when they learned that he had confessed to me and how I had him carefully guarded every hour of the day and night.

As the date set for the opening of the trial approached, Comito showed signs of worriment. I found him lapsing into fits of dreaming from which he would arouse himself with a start. His face became haggard and peaked. He ate but little and I knew what was on his mind.

The shadow of the Black Hand was menacing him. The vengeance of the men with whom he had lived in the little stone house was very real to him and very terrible. He knew of stronger men than himself who had been struck down. He knew the authors of a dozen murders which were riddles to the police of New York or of Italy and he quivered with fear under the menace of the Black Hand.

Every ounce of force and energy I had at my command I threw into the effort to make Comito feel that with Uncle Sam as his protector he had nothing to fear. The Sheep assured me that he would testify at the trial, but I knew the anguish it cost him and the fright he was having to overcome his natural fears. It is to his credit that his courage won out.

He was escorted to and from the court room by a squad of men and he knew that before the hand of an assassin could reach him a dozen pairs of hands would be raised in his defence.

When Comito was called as a witness I sat near him, never more than a couple of feet away.

It was not that he thought my person any protection, but to him I represented a force for law and order stronger than the Black Hand, a force before which the powerful society quailed and ran to cover.

When Comito was called there were eight counterfeiters in the prisoners' box—Lupo the Wolf, Giuseppe Morello, Giuseppe Callichio, Giuseppe Palermo, Antonio Cecala, Salvatore Cina, Nicola Sylvestre and Vincenzo Giglio.

As the Sheep took the witness chair eight pairs of eyes glared at him from the prisoners' box. Calm were the prisoners, but their eyes burned into his and never wandered from his face. At first Comito did not seem to mind, but as counsel asked him question after question and, no matter what the answer, eight pairs of eyes continued to stare fiercely into his face, he seemed to become fascinated. He could not let his own eyes wander from those of the men who gazed so ceaselessly at him. Each face was tranquil but grim, and Comito knew what it meant.

A man in the middle of the room, seated among the spectators, leaned forward, his right elbow on his right knee. Long and hard he stared at Comito. It may be he was trying to attract the witness' attention by staring at him, it may be he was only waiting until Comito should turn his way. At any rate the eyes of the Sheep wandered from the prisoners and rested on the dark visage of the man among the spectators. Quick as a flash his hand flew to his face. He doubled his fist, bending the index finger outward and gripping it in his teeth. A look of indescribable ferocity came into his eyes, accentuated by the almost grotesque lines about the mouth caused by inserting the crooked index finger.

"IT IS THE SIGN OF DEATH!"

Then she became hysterical and was carried out.

The witness paled, tottered to his feet and sank to the floor, a huddled mass of senseless humanity. When he was revived he swore that he knew nothing of the crime and that he could tell absolutely nothing which would throw light on the kidnapping of the boy or the movements of the two other accused men.

The trial was purposely allowed to drag for a few days until the excitement subsided and the other witnesses became reassured and recovered from the fright produced by the dramatic episode.

Rosina Martinese, the woman who had really caused Leonardo's proposed confession, was escorted to the court by a number of policemen. Every effort was made to give her a feeling of safety and security. The last statement she made before taking the stand was that she did not fear the Black Hand and that she would tell her story from start to finish.

The first part of the testimony involved only minor details and referred to unimportant members of the band who were not guilty of the actual kidnapping. At first in answering questions she told of a man, whom she did not name, who had actually stolen the child. Salvatore Saitta.

"Who was this man?" asked Assistant District Attorney O'Connor.

A name was on the lips of Rosina Martinese. Suddenly her eyes bulged. Giuseppe Filipo had leaned forward and drawn his fingers across his throat. Rosina Martinese faltered. Her voice died away in a feeble quaver.

With an effort she collected herself. One hand wildly clutched her throat. Her breath came in shaken sobs, but it was too late to recede, she thought. Her one hope now was to send to prison the men who sought to take her life.

As she was about to proceed with her testimony there was a loud hissing sound from the middle of the court room. All eyes turned for an instant toward the point from which the sound seemed to come. In that moment Secret Service men saw a Sicilian among the spectators make the dreaded sign which spelled death to those who knew it.

Rosina's knees smote together. She staggered backward and would have fallen but court attendants supported her and led her away.

"By the merciful God in heaven!" she shrieked, "I swear I do not know about this man. By the sacred grave of my mother I vow I know nothing of the matter. I know nothing and can tell nothing. I swear it! I swear it!"

Women in the court room became hysterical. Men turned pale, and there was a dramatic silence, which seemed the more deathlike after the violent scene which had just been enacted.

As for Rosina Martinese, she was in a stupor of terror. At the slightest sound she cowered and started about wildly. To all questions, entreaties, threats, she replied, dazedly:—

"I do not know. I do not know. By the sacred grave of my mother I swear it! I do not know."

Her valuable testimony was lost to the State because of the dreaded omerta, one of the most powerful weapons of the Black Hand.

Many letters had been received threatening the lives not only of the judge, the prosecuting attorney and myself, but of many of the witnesses. Of course, these letters were regarded for the most part as mere threats which would never be carried out and which were sent with the intent of scaring in fright the lips of the emotional Italians, but my men—again those invaluable men of mystery who are enrolled in the highest councils of the Black Hand—brought me news of serious attempts to murder witnesses.

Officials of the government and of the police were offered large sums of money to contrive matters so that Comito would be for only a few minutes accessible to the agents of the society. I myself could have made a comfortable sum by letting the case be won by the defence.

One night when the court room was cleared of principals and spectators a score or more of ball cartridges were found scattered over the floor under the seats occupied by spectators and witnesses. This was, of course, a warning that death awaited those who testified against the prisoners. It frightened many of them, but it did not seriously affect the case.

On certain days the witnesses went to the Marshal's office for their fee when court was adjourned. In this office was a large divan for the comfort of witnesses fatigued from a trying ordeal on the stand. This room was closely guarded as all the others were that were used in any capacity in connection with the trial.

One evening a witness, a man whose name I do not recall, stepped into the room ahead of the others. Instantly he uttered an exclamation of fright in Italian. Involuntarily throwing up his hands he started back against those behind him. Several pushed by him to enter the room, muttering against his strange action. The next man to pass through the doorway staggered back, pale and trembling. Those who could not see into the room pressed forward for a time, but as the terror of those in front took hold of them they fell into a panic and rushed into the corridor.

Secret Service men pushed their way into the marshal's office. On the divan lay a glittering stiletto. Its keen, highly polished blade, double edged, was seven inches long. The handle was ivory, inlaid with gold.

There it lay, an inanimate object, placed on the divan by the hand of man, yet the most terrible of supernatural phenomena could not have struck more terror to the hearts of our Italian witnesses.

When all the testimony was in the jury brought in a verdict of guilty on two of the six charges made against the counterfeiters. The case was appealed, but the Circuit Court of Appeals upheld the verdict of Judge Ray's court. The nature of the case is very briefly summarized in a brief sent to the Circuit Court of Appeals. It reads in part:—

"The record presents a counterfeiting scheme of very large magnitude. It is a fact, of which this Court will take judicial note, that in this case we have the most extensive criminal enterprise that has been before the Court for years. The pursuit of such an enterprise involves stealth and the utmost discretion; it also necessarily involves the participation of a number of co-workers. Of course the different participants perform different functions. Some must do the mechanical labor of engraving and printing, others must market the illicit money, and behind these are the guiding leaders in the enterprise. By the very fact of their leadership they are more [illegible] than the mere physical [illegible] and thus safeguard [illegible] immediate contact therewith."

Giuseppe Morello was sentenced to twenty-five years' imprisonment and fined $2000; Ignazio Lupo, [illegible] sentenced [illegible] and fined $[illegible]; Giuseppe Callichio must serve seventeen years in prison and he was fined $600; Giuseppe Palermo's sentence was eighteen years and his fine $1,000; Antonio Cecala was fined $1,000 and sent to prison for fifteen years; Salvatore Cina was sent to prison for fifteen years and fined $1,000; Vincenzo Giglio was sentenced to fifteen years imprisonment and fined $1,000.

By GEORGE HAMPDON.

She waited until the house had grown still, and then, slipping from the bed where, wakeful and restless, she had been tossing for an hour, she proceeded cautiously to the stairs and down to the library floor.

Her acquaintance with the house dated back only as far as the day before, when she received the telegram announcing the death of her uncle, Grover Pelham.

Dreading a stumble over an uncharted piece of furniture, she exercised the utmost care. As she parted the portieres of the library door she became conscious of another presence.

Waiting until her eyes accustomed themselves to the darkness, she made out the faintest suggestion of a figure kneeling at the other side of the room, and a key turning in an inner lock of the safe explained the situation well enough.

Miss Morley remembered that the electric light button was close to where she stood. As one hand straightened out horizontally toward the intruder she flashed on the light with the other.

The burglar turned with a whirl and wilted before the eloquence of the outstretched revolver and Miss Morley's dominating pose.

"Who are you?" the burglar demanded sullenly, peering intently in his effort to recognize the figure almost wholly enveloped by the curtains.

"A guest here," Miss Morley returned, with a curious interest in so much—or so little—of the burglar's face as the mask permitted her to see. "Who are you, and what are you doing in Mr. Pelham's safe?"

"Just taking the dimensions to fill it up with stocks and bonds as a surprise party for his heirs," was the sarcastic response.

"Ah! You know the old gentleman is dead, then?" Miss Morley asked.

"Yes, praise be! And if you had minded your own business I would have managed a nice little squaring of accounts with him."

"What did he ever do to you?" Miss Morley demanded, a little resentment in her voice as she let the curtains fall away and stood forward in all her gracious charm before the disguised intruder.

Instead of answering, the burglar as the light fell full upon her, dropped back a pace in manifest surprise. She waited, and in his turn he startled her.

"Helen Morley!" was all he said, in the quiet tones of one who is too greatly astonished to give way to emotion.

Seeming then to understand the folly of a mask, he removed it and crumpled it into his pocket. The two faced each other in silence.

The man and the girl had looked forward once to a life together. He was cashier of a bank until some funds went wrong and the law sent him to prison for five years. After that he never came back to her, though she heard of him drifting about the country.

"John Gorham! And this is the way you come back!" the girl just whispered. "What—what did he ever do to you?" she demanded again mechanically and as though she were gaining time.

"I—I never took that money," Gorham declared. "Grover Pelham hated me because my mother did not care for him as he had wished. It was he who managed my undoing—to punish my dead father, he said. You didn't know that?"

The girl shook her head. The revolver hand dropped down upon the table, and she (unif averted her face and feverish eyes.

"I was not embittered at first," Gorham went on, "even though I spent so long a time in prison. I began life over again until Pelham found it out. Then it seemed as if every Tom, Dick and Harry had learned my story and was being paid to tell it over and over again.

"I simply had to give up trying to earn a living that way. Besides, I had been circumstantially taught to believe that you had lost all faith in me. That was easy to believe," he added in a hard tone, "since I never received a letter from you."

"The letters were written," she told him quickly, "many a one."

"More of Pelham's work, then," Gorham ventured. "But I had given up. When I heard of the old gentleman's death I decided to come around and clean out his safe. I thought I would keep on at that business until I had a competence. Then I could retire and live the independent life possible to a man of means."

The girl comprehended from his manner that he would make no advances, that he would not even presume upon their one time friendship.

"It is strange to find you here," she said. "It is strange to be here myself. I learned yesterday that my uncle had made little or no provision for myself and my mother in his will. It distressed me so that I could not sleep.

"I came down here to see for myself, and if it were true that we had been left to the same old miserable struggle with poverty I—oh, I don't know what I might have done. I am sure I meant to steal if I found anything to steal. I wouldn't much care for myself, but mother"—

The girl had almost reached the point of tears when, with a sudden effort, she roused herself and turned toward the burglar, who stood impassively waiting for developments.

"Like yourself," the girl boldly admitted, "I meant to fall back on this safe for help. You got there first. Now I can send you back to jail, but I don't know," she mused, as if in doubt. "My conscience would never be clear if I sent you to prison for getting up earlier than I did myself."

The burglar looked up with a light of grim sympathy in his eyes as the girl fingered the revolver. He did not seem to be dismayed by the heartlessness she evinced.

"Yet it seems to me," Miss Morley suddenly announced, facing the burglar squarely and with a little color, "that you and I are a pair of weak-kneed cry-babies. We have experienced a few of the world's bitterly disappointing experiences, and we both whine. Don't you suppose that—that we could help each other to stand and stick it out—pool our courage, so to speak?"

Wonderingly the burglar looked at her for a moment as though he were fearful of some unfathomed and cruel humor. He had let himself drop down in a huddled heap beside the safe.

Now he lifted himself upright and was about to advance a step when she stayed him with uplifted hand.

"Helen," he implored, "will you, after all I have been through—will you literally cast your fortunes with me? I promise that you shall never have occasion again to be ashamed of me."

"No, no!" the girl besought with a haste almost hysterical. "We'll draw up a compact to go into partnership of friends. We have saved each other from a crime, and we will stand by each other, and we'll strike this off the minutes before we adjourn. How say you?"

"And if the fight be a good one?" Gorham asked softly. "Will you have confidence then in me? Oh, heaven!"

With a resolute movement he stepped forward to touch her. Hitherto her manner had been half playful, half ironical, but it was altogether to hide her deeper feelings. With an effort that brought her figure splendidly erect she warded him off.

"No, no, no!" she commanded. "Not here and now. No; but promise me, John, promise me here and now, that you and I part tonight members of a compact to fight the fight of righteousness, no matter how hard it may be. If—if—if you care to see me," she faltered, "you will know how to find me. But now—nothing but your promise, and then—go!"

He turned to the open library door. At the moment of passing out he turned and looked at her once again. Neither spoke, and she hardly seemed to know the exact instant of his leaving. She thought he was surely gone, however, when he stepped back into the room.

"Helen," he began, and she knew that he would have his question answered, "when I can come back to you able honestly to take care of you may I—come?"

He heard her softly speak her answer, and with a gesture of gladness he was gone certainly this time.

The safe was still open, and some of the papers lay as the burglar had dropped them. Helen turned to these and began restoring them to their former order.

"I pray he will come back again to me," she breathed. "It may be a long while to wait until he can, but poverty and disgrace—nothing matters if only we may have some happiness at last, even the happiness that is nearly all hardship."

She had the will in her hands, and in spite of herself she opened and read it. Before she finished she stood erect in her excitement. Folding the paper, she placed it in the safe and closed the iron door. Then she turned back toward her room.

"He is coming back when he can honestly take care of me," she told herself joyfully, "and all of Uncle Grover's money is willed to him in compensation for all he has suffered. He will soon be back for me."

She could not sleep any better even now, but the restlessness had given place to a peace of mind and a perfect happiness that were very good.

HER LAST WORD.

And It Was Up to Harold to Get Whatever Consolation He Could Out of It.

"Lucy," he said, with all the earnestness at his command, "you have driven me to desperation. I have waited and hoped that you might learn to care for me, but my waiting has been unavailing. Now I am going away, to risk my life, to face whatever dangers may lie in my way."

"Have you made up your mind to join the army?" she asked.

"Yes. I shall go where glory and perhaps fame await me. I shall insist on being in the thick of the fray at all times. There is nothing for me to live for, so why should I fear to die?"

"Please don't say such things, Harold. Surely there is much for you to live for."

"No; if I ever return it will be with the scars of battle upon me. I shall stop at nothing. Wherever dangers are to be faced I shall bear our glorious colors. I shall come back as a hero or I shall not come back at all."

"That should always be a soldier's sentiment. I am glad to hear you speak so nobly."

"Thank you. By saying one word you could keep me from the dangers that must be faced in that desolate country."

"But it is a girl's duty to urge men to be heroic, not to try to persuade them to be deaf to the call to do the splendid thing."

"I suppose you're right. Well, I shall not be deaf to the call."

"I am glad to hear you say that, Harold."

"Goodby, Lucy."

"Goodby, Harold."

"Have you no last word to say to me before I leave you?"

"Yes, there is something."

"What is it, Lucy?"

"Don't get shot, Harold—don't even get half shot."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Pride.

"What's the matter here?" asked the policeman, who had been banging on the front door.

"Nothing serious," answered the man with a dusty face and no collar.

"It sounds like a drunk smashing up furniture."

"I have been doing a little furniture smashing. You see, we're going to move, and there's some of our stuff that my wife would rather burn up or send out with the trash than let the neighbors see it standing on the sidewalk."—Washington Star.

Her Future Blasted.

"I hear your daughter is going to retire from the stage."

"Yes, she is."

"What's the trouble? I thought she was possessed of talent."

"She is. She has a splendid voice and much dramatic ability, but she sprained a tendon in her ankle and won't be able to dance for a year or more, so she thought she might as well settle down and get married."—Detroit Free Press.

Heart and Nerves Were Bad.

Could Not Sleep.

To the thousands of people who toss on a sleepless pillow night after night, or who pace the bedroom floor with nerves on the jump, the heart action all wrong, and to whose eyes sleep will not come, Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills offer the blessing of sound refreshing slumber, as they restore the equilibrium of the deranged nerve centres and correct the wrong action of the heart.

Mrs. Charles Teel, Horncastle, Ont., writes:—"Just a few lines to let you know what Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills did for me. My heart and nerves were so bad I could not sleep, and the least noise or excitement would make me feel so that I used to think I was going to die, and I would tremble until I could hardly stand. I took doctor's medicine, but it did not do me much good. At last I tried Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, and can certainly say they did me a great amount of good. I can recommend them to anyone who is suffering as I was."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills have been on the market for the past twenty years, and have done more to steady shaky nerves and strengthen weak hearts, than any other known preparation.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Typhoid and Tuberculosis.

Statistics seem to show that in any given number of consumptives the number of those who have had typhoid fever is much greater than it is among the same number of healthy people. The inference is plain that tuberculosis is often an after effect of the fever. "The explanation of this phenomenon," writes Dr. Charles B. Woodruff in Science, "is evident. If an adult develops active tuberculosis it is generally not a new infection, but an activation of latent lesions that he has been carrying since childhood. Something has happened that has caused a temporary lessening of his antibodies and allowed the latent tuberculosis to spread, and nothing is more potent in doing this than infections like measles, whooping cough and typhoid fever." Dr. Woodruff draws from these facts a potent argument for a pure water supply. He shows that tuberculosis invariably decreases wherever the water supply has been purified.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

Halifax yesterday celebrated the 165th anniversary of the founding of the city.

Sir Robert Borden will leave for Halifax soon, and will remain there about a fortnight.

E. W. Chambers, for years one of the best known stock men in the Province, is dead at his home on Park Row, Woodstock.

Albert Thompson, charged in the Toronto police court yesterday with shopbreaking and shooting with intent to kill, was sent to Kingston Penitentiary for two years.

Mrs. John Noble of London, Ont., who was severely burned when an oil lamp she was carrying exploded on her being seized with an epileptic fit, died in Victoria Hospital.

There is a strike on at the Government elevator at Port Colborne. The men want more pay for working overtime. This will tie up the grain trade until a settlement is reached.

To save the life of one-year-old Vera Jones, of Youngstown, Ohio, the child was taken to Pittsburg for an operation to remove a piece of eggshell from her windpipe. The child was choking to death.

Finding the name of H. McLaughlin, 27 Wilton avenue, Toronto, in a book in his vest pocket the police are communicating with the Toronto authorities to identify a stranger found dead in a brick yard in Hamilton yesterday.

To End Vancouver Island Strike.

VANCOUVER, B.C., June 23.—There is little doubt that the strike of miners on Vancouver Island will be called off this week. Saturday a ballot of the miners of the district was taken on the question. Sir Richard McBride has been interesting himself in plans for a strike settlement. Following the riots last August many men returned to work.

A Study in Rings.

Customer—Are these five or six wedding rings all you have in stock? Why, you've got a whole trayful of engagement rings. Jeweler—Yes, sir, and it will take that whole trayful of engagement rings to work off those five or six wedding rings.—Chicago News.

HOW TO BANISH WRINKLES QUICKLY

If your face is disfigured with wrinkles, no matter what the cause, you can quickly dispel every line, even the most obstinate, by using a simple, home-made wash lotion. Merely dissolve an ounce of powdered saxolite in a half pint witch hazel—inexpensive ingredients found in any druggists. Bathe the face in rain, and—presto!—you scarcely believe your own eyes when you look into your mirror and behold the marvellous transformation!

The remarkable astringent action of the saxolite so tightens the skin, wrinkles are literally pressed out. Best of all, this result is not purely temporary, for the lotion also has a healthful tonic action, which tends to strengthen and tone up the weakened tissue, and added benefit may be expected with continued use. Use this once a day for awhile, it cannot injure the most delicate skin, the treatment itself leaves no trace—no one suspects the secret of your increasing youthful appearance.

Dr. Macklin Makes Statement at Seaforth Meeting

LAWYERS ARE IN DOUBT

SEAFORTH, June 23.—The nomination of candidates for the riding of Centre Huron, held here yesterday, was largely attended.

Dr. Macklin (Con.) spoke first and was followed by W. H. Proudfoot (Lib.). Dr. Macklin dealt first with the charge of bribery preferred against him and Rev. Joseph Elliott. Dr. Macklin said he had given J. B. Hunter $10. He had tried to canvass Hunter a fortnight before and had then sent Mr. Elliott to see him. Mr. Elliott returned and reported, according to Dr. Macklin, that Hunter could get some votes at $5 and $4. Hunter came by appointment the following day and Dr. Macklin gave him $10, with the statement that he was not buying votes but employing Hunter to canvass and work for him. The remainder of the candidate's address was taken up with the provincial issues.

Mr. Proudfoot in following said Dr. Macklin's statement that he was hiring Hunter as an agent was absurd in view of the interview in which Elliott spoke of the price of votes. Mr. Proudfoot also declared that Dr. Macklin had endeavored to have the matter suppressed, but when it was intimated that he should drop out of the contest, he refused.

Mr. Proudfoot was emphatic in his remarks that he considered pressure was being brought to bear from outside to defeat him, that the Conservative party were out to see that he was not elected.

Dr. Macklin, in his reply, said while he paid the ten dollars, and may have acted in contravention of the election act, yet lawyers differed as to whether he had or had not.

Excitement at Sarnia.

SARNIA, June 23. — The nominations for M.P.P. for West Lambton proved one of the most exciting meetings held in this city in the last decade, as a result of the charge made against Hon. W. J. Hanna that as counsel for the Mueller company he had secured for that concern a fixed assessment which cost the town $400 a year for twenty years.

Mr. Hanna, in his nomination speech, declared that the prospects of the company had been maligned, and, that the town stood to gain where it would have lost. His position had not been official in the private bills committee as his opponents maintained.

Mr. Cowan, the Liberal candidate, claimed that the town solicitor did not know of the legislative arrangement until a year after it was passed, and that the town in his opinion would lose steadily for twenty years.

Both speakers dealt with other issues and were subjected to a great deal of heckling.

Lively In East Durham.

MILLBUSH, June 23. — A lively meeting followed the nomination yesterday of J. J. Preston (Con.) and Francis W. Galbraith (Ind. Con.) in East Durham yesterday.

J. Thornton, M.P., accused Sam Clarke, Liberal candidate in West Northumberland, who seconded Mr. N. W. Rowell's abolish the bar resolution, of not being a temperance man in practice.

Like Old Times In N. York.

NEWMARKET, June 23.—Two frantic encounters, with an audience almost delirious with anger, yelling and shouting, concluded the meeting after the nomination in North York yesterday. During the row a hundred people climbed on to the platform, and Hon. Mackenzie King, who was on the platform, was jostled about and struck in the back. Mr. Lennox, standing on a chair, managed after some minutes to step the row and the hall was cleared.

The riot was the result of an effort on the part of Hon. Mr. King to ask Mr. Lennox a question or in lieu of that to make an explanation to the meeting.

Close Call.

"Hold on!" cried the proud young father as the minister was about to proceed. "Before the baby is christened I want to change his name."

"What is the trouble?" the good man asked. "Ebenezer is a good name."

"No matter. We'll call him Harold. I've just heard that Uncle Ebenezer, the old fool! has married a woman who is young enough to be his daughter."—Judge.

"AS SEEN" IN MONTREAL

Four Thousand at International Convention in Toronto.

TORONTO, June 23. — Efficiency, Truth and Service were the words that struck the keynote in the addresses at the opening of the tenth annual convention of the Associated Ad. Clubs of America at Exhibition Park yesterday morning. Before a gathering of 4,000 men, which signalized at once the latest advance in the art of publicity and a demand for advertising integrity, President William Woodhead of San Francisco called the great meeting to order at ten o'clock.

The formal proceedings were of a specially felicitous character, and expression of international amity, cordial co-operation and a striving for even higher ideals were given by each speaker. Great Britain, France, Germany, Switzerland, far-off Japan and China have their direct representatives here.

The Wig.

Now, why did I buy it, I wonder?
I must have been crazy, I know.
But the papers are full of the fashion,
And the saleswoman flattered me so!
I dread for my husband to see it.
He's certain to grumble and scold.
He used, in the days of our courtship,
To liken my tresses to gold.

How Madge and Louise and Gladys
And the rest of the women would stare
If I should appear in the tango,
Oh, caramels, out of my hair!
But I'll bet they would go in convulsions
Of jealousy over my wig.
And I guess, after all, that I'll wear it
To spite them, my new purple wig.
—Minna Irving in Judge.

A Drink of Water.

A glass of cold water slowly sipped will produce a greater acceleration of the pulse for a time than will a glass of wine or spirits taken at a draft. In this connection it may not be out of place to mention that sipping cold water will often allay the craving for alcohol in those who have been in the habit of taking too much of it and may be endeavoring to reform, the effect being probably due to the stimulant action of the sipping.

A special street car conveyed the dancers home shortly after midnight.

Former Resident On The Issue

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—When a man who has been nominated to act as a representative of the people states that a question, such as the temperance question, which is touching the very chords of the public's life "is not a political question" he is not capable of acting to the full benefit of them. We need to send men who are going to try to build up our social life as well as our commercial, and who are in full sympathy with the betterment of such conditions.

R. J. Soden states that personally he believes in the abolition of the bar, the shop and the club licenses, but will make no pledges. Why?

When an electorate have two candidates and one has pledged himself to the full support of the temperance question, the only alternative for those in opposition to this question is, to vote for the one who has not, and yet R. J. Sod n's statement is so formed that Conservative Temperance workers will find ample excuse to vote for him unless every endeavour of the leaders of the Temperance party is put forth.

Thanking you for this space, I remain,

Yours truly,

A Former Resident.

EVEN HARVEY HAS ROWELL CONVERTS

Mr. Gillespie Pleased by Reception Yesterday—Old Conservatives Announce Revolt

LAKEHURST TO-NIGHT

At the Gillespie meeting, in Ventriss' school house, in Harvey, last night, one of the prominent farmers approached the Rowell candidate and stated that he had never cast a Liberal vote in his life but he and his sons had to do it this time, "not because you're a Liberal, or that I have known you, but it is because of Rowell and his promise of reform."

At Rockcroft, in the afternoon, a farmer made the same assertion, except that he had no boys to help Rowell. Both meetings were well attended, and Mr. Gillespie returned this morning pleased with the reception. He was accompanied by Mr. R. B. Hall. The main plank of the Rowell platform, the attack on the liquor traffic, was the main subject of the addresses.

The instances of Conservative aid at these outlying points are mentioned because of the fact that Harvey is more remote from the City than other points recently visited. Nothing has been mentioned of the numerous and striking promises of the above nature from the City of Peterborough, from Smith and other communities. The Harvey Rowell converts are mentioned as an evidence of how widespread is the revolt against the entrenched liquor traffic.

CARS DEPOSIT THEIR FREIGHT IN THE CREEK

Run-off on G.T.R. Yesterday Near Campbellford and Grain and Leather Are Soaked

CARS DAMAGED

A run-off occurred on the G.T.R. yesterday afternoon one and a half miles this side of Campbellford, four cars sustaining considerable damage, and much grain being deposited in the creek.

The freighter was proceeding at a moderate speed, when four of the cars left the track. The brakes were applied, but before the train could be brought to a standstill, two others left the rails. The auxiliary arrived at about 5 o'clock and proceeded to clear the track.

The train leaving at 1.30 a.m. had to return, as also did the train leaving for Belleville this morning, while those coming up from Belleville were obliged to transfer their passengers. Latest word was to the effect that men were engaged shovelling grain from the creek, and that four of the cars were damaged to a considerable extent. The bridge at that spot is also said to be damaged somewhat, while a car of leather is badly soaked.

Mr. McNab, the station agent, when spoken to by the Examiner this morning, had not sufficiently reliable information to estimate the extent of the damage.

They had been ballasting the road for some time, he said, and thought the cause of the mishap must have been a spread rail.

24TH BATTERY TAKING PART IN BIG SHAM BATTLE AT PETAWAWA

Local Artillery Men Hard at Work---Unfavourable Weather During the First Week Was Not Appreciated---News From the Front.

(Special Correspondence to the Examiner)

CAMP PETAWAWA, June 21.—The past week has not been a very active one for the 24th Battery, the headquarters for which unit is the local Armouries. The weather has not been altogether favourable. Sunday and Monday were hot days with extremely cool evenings. Wednesday was a very cold day, with excessively high winds, and Thursday was no warmer, and rain fell heavily all day, not abating until late in the evening. Friday was another cold day, and Saturday and to-day (Sunday) were an improvement. The men, generally, have suffered much discomfort from the cold nights. Several men have colds as a result of the climatic conditions, which, if no improvement seems evident, will spoil a three-day's manoeuvres, which commence to-morrow. Otherwise the men are all enjoying themselves exceedingly.

Owing to the increased number of troops which are assembling at the Army Reserve for training this year, there was of necessity an extensive alteration in the way the various brigades and regiments are located. As has been customary or years past, the Artillery Camp is situated southeast of the station. There are at present fourteen brigades, comprising some thirty-four batteries encamped in this part of the Reserve.

The sanitary arrangements are good, the food is of a like quality, and the water is pure.

Almost daily a brigade leaves for home, and another takes its place.

Petawawa is noted, and well known by many men who have visited its acres as a place almost resembling a desert, because of the sand. This, on a hot day is a very harassing obstacle. The men become hot and perspire, and the sand becomes positively black when moistened in any way. Therefore the men coming in from parade are almost a resemblance of a piece of pitch.

Up to date nothing but gun practice has been the order, and no more than a dozen shells have been exploded.

The manoeuvres, as before stated, will commence to-morrow, and will extend over the 22nd, 23rd and 24th instants.

The director and Chief Umpire will be Colonel Lord Brooke, M.V.O., who, it will be remembered by some of the readers, was in command of the manoeuvres, which were not on such an extensive scale, last year.

The Umpire Staff will consist of selected officers, to be detailed by O. C. Troops.

The troops will be engaged as follows, Monday, 22nd inst.:

Whiteland.

3rd Division—Colonel J. Hughes, commanding.

Divisional Mounted Troops. 17th Huzzars, and No. 3 Mtd. Co., Corps of Guides.

Divisional Artillery—8th Brigade, C.D.A.

Divisional Engineers—3rd Fd. Co., C.E.; 3rd Sec. Co., C.E.

The two last named units, however, will not join the Division until p.m. in bivouac.

Infantry—7th Infantry Brigade; 8th Infantry Brigade; 9th Infantry Brigade.

Signal Service—No. 2 Section, No. 3 Signal Co.

Divisional Train—C. A. S. C.

Divisional Medical Unit No. 11 Field—Ambulance.

Brownland.

Col. G. A. Smart.

2nd Mounted Brigade (less C.A.S.C. and A.M.C.), 4th Mounted Brigade.

Tuesday, 23rd Inst.:

Whiteland.

In these operations the local battery takes part, but together with the other artillery brigades, will not join the Division until p.m. in bivouac at Thistle.

D.M.T.—17th Huzzars; No. 3 Mtd. Co. Corps of Guides.

D.A.—8th Brigade C.F.A.; 9th Brigade C.F.A.; 11th Brigade C.F.A.

D.E.—3rd Field Co. C.E.; 3rd Tel. Detachment C. E.

Infantry—7th Infantry Brigade; 8th Infantry Brigade; 9th Infantry Brigade.

Signal Service—Nos. 2 and 3 Sections, No. 3 Sig. Co.

Div. Train—C.A.M.C. Div. Med. Unit. No. 2 Field Ambulance.

Brownland.

Col. G. A. Smart, commanding.

2nd Mounted Brigade, 4th Mounted Brigade (less A.S.C. and A.M.C.), to which are attached 9th Brigade C.F.A., 10th Brigade C.F.A., until the close of the operations when they join the Whiteland forces in Thistle.

Infantry—1st Provisional Infantry Brigade; 2nd Provisional Infantry Brigade.

The above forces are detailed for Monday'sc and Tuesday's manoeuvres, and those for Wednesday will appear in tomorrow's Camp D.O. The engagement is the largest which has ever been attempted in Canada. The objects of the various units is, however, kept strictly secret, but will be obtainable as soon as operations commence.

The Whiteland forces will wear white cap bands, but will not wear them until they join the remainder of the Third Div. at Thistle on Tuesday after operations.

For troops carrying rifles, 10 rounds per rifle on Monday, 40 rounds on Tuesday, and 60 rounds per rifle on Wednesday, will be drawn. This fact will seem to indicate, that Monday will be given practically over to reconnaissance over the 21-mile area of the Reserve, with a few minor engagements on Tuesday, and a pitched battle on Wednesday.

For the Artillery (18 pr. guns) 10, 18, and 20 rounds will bed rawn on the three days, respectively.

The ammunition for the two last days will be issued at a point known as Curry Lake, which is situate about 9 miles' distance from the camp.

Certain restrictions are placed on each opposing force regarding available roads, but the whole Reserve is well covered.

The camps during the sham fight will be away from canvas for two nights and will be brought to face with active service conditions, which if the weather does not improve, will be very severe.

The noted "bully beef and dog biscuits" will constitute the men's rations.

The men are looking forward to the engagement.

Very little news concerning the 3rd Dragoons is available as the regiment is encamped at Thistles Landing, 8 miles to the north of the Artillery Camp. There is a shortage of water at Thistle which proves a source of great inconvenience.

The advance party of the 57th Regiment arrived in camp at 12 Saturday midnight, after a journey of 24 hours on four different trains. They slept in the Y.M.C.A. tent last night and to-day were busily engaged in raising tents. Major Eastwood and Captain Carruthers are the officers in charge.

The regiment is expected here at 4 o'clock Monday morning.

The following is the staff attached to the 10th Brigade:

Brigade Sergt., Major R. F. Beatty.
Brigade G.M.S., R. Handley.
Brigade O.R.C., R. A. W. Hay.
Brigade Medical Sergt., F. C. Roberts.
Brigade Pay Sergt., W. Batley.
Col. T. W. H. Young, Capt. V. H. Hall, adjutant.
Capt. Rogers, Col. Fisher, veterinary officers.
Major G. R. Hall, O.C.—24th Battery.
Capt. C. D. Fee—24th Battery.
Lt. H. S. Matthews—24th Battery.
Lt. A. L. Morphy—24th Battery.
Lt. G. Bishop—24th Battery.

Mr. Harry Donovan Captures a 22 Pound Lunge

Mr. H. Donovan, who lives in the south end of the city, had real fisherman's luck last night, when he landed a 22 lb. lunge while fishing in Little Lake at the Vermont Marble Co's. property. The fish measured 43 inches, and is the largest caught this season.

PETERBOROUGH REPRESENTED AT THE CONVENTION

Booth at Toronto Promises to be Most Successful Advertising Venture and is Exciting Interest

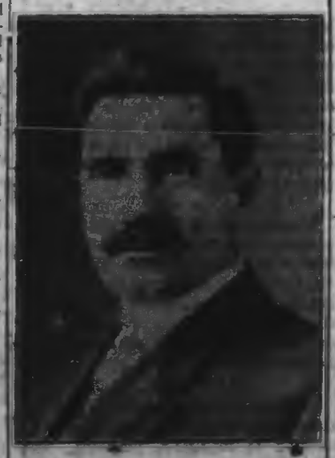
LOCAL MAN IN CHARGE

The Ad. Club Convention is now in full swing in Toronto and six thousand delegates from the various Associated Ad. Clubs of America are attending the annual event in the Queen City. One of the best booths of the whole convention is devoted to advertising Peterborough. This booth has been equipped through the joint effort of the Board of Trade and the City Council, and those in charge find that the delegates and other visitors are paying an unexpected attention to the Peterborough booth. It was feared that it would be necessary to unload the literature and pamphlets upon the visitors to the Exhibition Grounds, but that is not the case and a very large number are interesting themselves in the exhibit to such an extent that those in charge are kept busy answering numerous questions, and divulging information about this City. For this reason it is thought that the booth is going to prove a success beyond the utmost anticipations of the officers of the Board of Trade, who devoted considerable time to its preparation.

Saturday and yesterday Mr. A. N. Allison, Secretary of the Board of Trade, was in charge of the booth, and to-day Mr. Basil Hall, President of the Board of Trade, and Mr. aJck McNabb are attending to it.

The chief attraction has proved to be a large picture of the Lift Lock, which is hanging in the centre of the booth. A large number of the delegates become interested at the sight of the picture, having heard so much about the Lift Lock and at once proceed to amass literature concerning it and, incidentally, concerning many other interesting things of Peterborough. So that the officers find that instead of having to force the pictures and samples and literature upon those in attendance their office is, after all, an agreeable one, and promises also to be a valuable one for the City. There can be no doubt that the Ad. Club members are the very best persons to get interested in this City.

Those in charge of the booth have at their disposal a number of the splendid booklets gotten out by the Salvation Army before their departure for England, as well as an especially prepared one containing new pictures of the local factories and different views of the City, taken a few days ago. The booth promises to be a splendid advertising venture and those concerned are to be congratulated on grasping the opportunity presented in such an effective manner.



G. A. GILLESPIE
Liberal Candidate in West Peterborough.

On Saturday, June 6, I gave the Temperance Associations a signed statement that if elected I would vote with either political party on every possible occasion for the abolition of the 1,200 bars, 215 shop, and 68 club licenses in Ontario. I repeated this statement in my Opera House address June 10. Furthermore, if I ever get the opportunity I will vote to prevent the manufacture of liquor. I ask for your support and influence.

THE COURSE WAS CHANGED

Which Ship Empress or Storstad Was to Blame is Still Subject of Inquiry at Quebec

TO-DAY'S EVIDENCE

Special Wire to The Examiner:

QUEBEC, June 23.—Which of the two ships, the Empress of Ireland or the Storstad, changed her course? In the early morning hours with a bit of fog lying heavily over the river, it is evident that either the Empress of Ireland or the Storstad changed its course and brought about the collision. On this point G. W. Weatherspoon, of the American Salvag Company, which has been conducting diving operations on the scene of the wreck, was closely examined this morning. "The evidence shows," Mr. Haight informed the court in the course of his cross-examination of Weatherspoon, "that the Empress of Ireland is pointing north, not pointing east or southeast as the other side stated." Witness said the heading of the vessel may have been affected by currents. Weatherspoon spoke of the danger of his undertaking. Divers had attempted to ascertain the damage of the ship, but the hazard was very great. In his opinion it would be impossible to raise the vessel. Diving operations would be continued on Thursday.

To-Night's Conservative Mass Meeting

Special Wire to The Examiner:

TORONTO, June 23. — Toronto Conservative organizers are sparing no pains to make the Whitney mass meeting in Massey Hall to-night one of the successes of the political season. Special interest is attached to recently created Knight Bachelor Sir James Whitney will make his first and only public appearance during the campaign, and he will attempt to crisp as much as possible of fighting fire into a short speech. A curtain raiser has been provided for Sir James Whitney in the person of the recently created Knight bachelor Sir Adam Beck, chairman of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission.

NEW WINTER ROAD TO FORT GEORGE

FORT GEORGE, B.C., June 23.—The Fort George Board of Trade, assisted by the trade organizations of Vancouver and other Coast cities, is urging upon the Provincial authorities the advisability of starting at once upon the construction of the new winter road which is to be built connecting Fort George with the Peace River country.

It is pointed out that there are more than ten thousand settlers in the Pouce Coupe and adjoining districts, who are much nearer to Fort George than any other railway point, and they look to the Provincial Government to establish communication in time for them to use the road for freighting in their supplies this winter.

The road as at present planned will make use of all lakes, rivers and streams, cuttings being made so as to connect these natural winter highways, thus practically eliminating all grades, and providing the most convenient means of reaching the Peace River country before the installation of railway service.

The road will follow the Giscombe Trail from Fort George to Giscombe Portage, then along the Crooked River with cut offs in convenient places to shorten the mileage, across McLeod Lake, along the Misinchinka River to the Pine Pass, across the pass and down the Pine River to the Pouce Coupe country with cuttings at various paces to enable settlers to get down to the river easily.

That this road, once built, will be the popular one for the new settlers going into the country is a certainty for the few grades are easy and the mileage much shorter than on any of the other routes to the Peace. It has been estimated that the cost of freighting into the heart of the Peace River country will be cut in half by this road. Goods sent in from Fort George over this route during the winter, can be delivered to all parts of the lower Peace during the open season for navigation with down-stream haul, and at Peace River Crossing, where goods from Edmonton first reach the river, merchandise can be delivered at a saving of from two to three cents per pound. Above the Crossing the saving will of course be greater.

CHANGED CONDITIONS.

These are days of changed conditions. The time was when ministers of the Gospel had special relations to the world and society. There was a time when they were exempted from taxation; they travelled on railways at lower rates, and expected, and got, discounts on all their purchases, in shops of all kinds. Ministers have been admitted to the ranks of modern citizenship, must stand on even terms in regard to privileges and rights. If they ride their bicycles on the sidewalks or take the wrong side of the road with their auto cars they stand ready to pay their fines, and meet all the obligations of citizenship. By what reasoning, then, can they be denied the right to prominence as citizens on any subject in the public interest, especially on a great moral and social one, coming especially within the sphere of their ministry, and directly and detrimentally affecting it, and defeating its object and their work. Ministers want the rights of an honest bricklayer and no more. He or any other citizen is free to speak the thing he thinks; and why not a minister? The class of men who are shocked at ministers 'degrading' their calling by taking an active interest in politics, is not composed of men who have any particular use for religion, churches and ministers.

NOT A BONA FIDE CANDIDATE.

Mr. Soden may pose as a temperance candidate, but he is not the straight temperance candidate in any sense. He refuses to subscribe to the platform of the Peterborough Temperance Association, though he is the candidate of the government whose policy is to keep the bar, in the real sense. He is appealing for support on false pretences. He may deceive some for a little time. Some of the names placed on Mr. Soden's nomination paper were put there because the signers were given the impression that he was the temperance candidate. That is only a temporary support, for the persons so signing, under a false impression have been undeceived and will not vote for the man they helped nominate. This condition is only consistent with the changing attitudes Mr. Soden has adopted from time to time.

Mr. Soden is the supporter and candidate of a government whose policy is to keep the bar and the three-fifths clause in the interest of saving the bar.

Mr. Gillespie is the temperance candidate, the candidate and supporter of a leader whose policy is abolish the bar and save the homes and home happiness that are abolished by the bar.

THE WASTE OF THE BAR.

The Rowell policy of abolish the bar, not only involves a great moral issue, but a very important business issue.

The merchants of Peterborough who cooperated with the Examiner in the 'dollar-day' enterprise recognised the extent to which their business was benefitted by small expenditures widely distributed among the people. It is estimated that that day alone added at least $30,000 to the receipts of the merchants and business men of the City.

This was only once a year, but it was thought worth while. How then are our merchants affected by conditions that withdraw from them money, that would otherwise be largely spent with them, to the extent of ten times $30,000 or $300,000 or more, per year.

When the Oriental Hotel ran a bar the receipts from the bar alone averaged $35,000 a year. This is not a mere guess, but is based on the percentage of bar receipts the present Government passed a law to collect direct from the bar. If a bar takes in $100 a day, which is the average in small cities, the Government collects five per cent. on half of it; all bar receipts over $60 per day are taxed five per cent.

So that this temperance government, which is held up as a great friend to temperance advance, actually and directly becomes a partner, and makes the people partners, in the drink traffic, demands and accepts a share of the money that represents the food and clothes of children, the happiness of homes, and the life and character of the fathers and sons of the home.

Now, if the receipts of one bar averages $35,000 a year, the receipts of ten other bars would each be nearly as much; for the most money is not spent over the bar of the largest hotels. At a moderate estimate at least $300,000 are spent over the bars of Peterborough in a year.

This amount does not include the shops; the receipts of these are not so large, but they would add considerably to the vast amount spent directly and absolutely wasted on strong drink, to the detriment of business and the injury of the home and the general injury of society.

Our merchants and business men are directly interested in this condition. This large amount, which comes principally from local sources, from the people of the city and surrounding country, represents money that would, if the bar were removed, be spent with our merchants and business men, or put into the erection of a home, which would mean demand for building material and furnishings, etc.

Our merchants and business men would hold up both hands for a new industry that would mean $300,000 in wages, to be spent in the city on legitimate business, that is if the open bar should not, as it does now, absorb an equal amount.

It would, then, by moderate reasoning, pay our merchants and business men, to hold up both hands for the abolition of the bar, which subtracts such large sums daily from the ready money, that would otherwise be spent for the necessaries of life which hundreds of families, the victims of drink, have to do without, beyond the bare food to keep body and soul together.

It may be argued that some of the money spent over the bar is spent in food and furnishings for the hotel. That is true, but a very large part of the money representing the bar receipts would otherwise be spent from day to day with our merchants and business men.

But as hotels are a public necessity they will distribute, even if they have no bar, as much and more money for food, furnishings and supplies; the hotel without a bar has to spend more money, for it has to give a better service to maintain its patronage.

A hotel can be conducted without a bar and hold and gain patronage and make a profit without it. The Oriental Hotel has for some time had no bar. Yet, last year, it spent $5,000 in structural improvements and improved furnishings and paid every cent of it out of profits, and this year it will spend nearly as much more.

And every dollar of its income is legitimate profits, not blood money. None of it represents the ruin of families and homes, the degradation of manhood and the destruction of earning power.

Every employer of labour, every industry, every manufacturing concern, would be the better for the abolition of the bar. They all know how the working capability, the earning capapacity of employees is lessened by drink; and to such an extent is this generally recognized that in every field of employment the man that drinks is blacklisted.

Therefore a man that wastes his earnings in drink not only robs his family to that extent, but he forfeits employment and his wage earnings become less. This is the harvest of th open bar, which it is now sought to close in the moral, material, and business interests of the community.

Nor is this the only way in which the bar wastes money that could be devoted to legitimate purposes, by productive expenditure. Nobody will admit or claim that the bar gives value or benefit for the money spent over it. It is absolute waste and worse, for it destroys manhood and wrecks homes. Any police magistrate will tell us that if the bar were abolished seventy-five per cent. of the cases that come before him—seventy-five per cent. of the ghastly array of drunks and human wrecks that slouch to the dock every day—would be lacking.

It needs no abstruse reckoning, no deep study, to convince any man who wishes to be convinced that the bar is responsible for an appalling waste of more than money—of manhood, homes and the general welfare of the community. It is therefore no surprise that a great cry of "abolish the bar" has gone up through all the Provinces.

"Abolish the bar" is the issue in this contest. The Government has accepted it and the candidate of the Government thinks so highly of it that he steals it and masquerades as a temperance man, supporting a government whose declared policy is keeping the bar.

Man is a reasoning being; that is unless he submits to the dominance of party, then he becomes blind and "goes it blind." Thinking men, men with a conscience, men with honest hearts are confronted with a duty in this contest. It is abolish the bar, or keep the bar. Which shall it be. It is for you to say.

ONE OF THE OLDEST CONSERVATIVE PAPERS IN PROVINCE COMES OUT STRONGLY IN FAVOUR OF ROWELL

The Ottawa Citizen Emphatically Condemns the Present Government and For the First Time Since Confederation Opposes Conservatives

OTTAWA, June 22.— Under the heading, "The Provincial Elections" The Ottawa Citizen (Conservative) will tomorrow say editorially:

"In withdrawing its support from Sir James Whitney and the Provincial Conservative party because of their persistent refusal to grant municipal local option in taxation, and in asking its readers to vote for the candidates pledged to support Mr. N. W. Rowell because of the latter's advocacy of tax reform, abolition of the bar, and equal suffrage, The Citizen realizes fully the responsibility it assumes. Its course in thus declining to support the Conservative party in the present appeal was unavoidable, however, if we desired to retain our self-respect and our readers' confidence in our honesty of purpose. The Citizen has been aggressively advocating local option in municipal taxation for over five years. Sir James Whitney obstinately declines to grant this fundamental measure of reform. The municipalities need it, and most of them want it. The ratepayers of the city of Toronto last year voted four to one in favour of it. Ottawa City Council on three different occasions has unanimously asked for it. Mr. Rowell has definitely promised to grant it if he is returned to power. Hence The Citizen, for the first time since Confederation, will support the candidates who are opposing the Provincial Conservative party.

Other Good Reasons.

"As Mr. Rowell includes in his platform advanced temperance legislation, that ranks as a reform measure almost equally with the taxation question in its beneficial influence—indeed, most people would perhaps place it very much in first place—The Citizen has a second good reason for supporting him. Equal suffrage, or woman suffrage, is the third progressive measure that Mr. Rowell has pledged himself to grant, if called on to form the next Government.

Can Wipe Out the Bars.

"If the Independent and sincere temperance voters of the Province will, though allied with the Federal Conservative party, support and vote for the Rowell candidates next Monday, the bars and club licenses of the Province, the real backbone of the liquor curse, will be wiped out. The Independent Liberal electors of Ontario were largely responsible for the victory of Sir James Whitney in 1904, aiding the Independent Conservatives of the Province, whose temperance convictions are real, have that precedent for supporting Rowell in his fight against the bar in 1914. If Rowell is defeated it will simply mean that a majority of the temperance electors of Ontario put party before principle. It would mean also that no further advance in the crusade against the drink evil would be made during the present generation. No political leader would, in the face of Rowell's sacrifice, extend a hand in support of the temperance cause. The liquor interests realize this, and will make every effort, regardless of present cost, to insure the return of the Conservative party. The issue is clear, and rests on the shoulders of the temperance electors of the Province."

The Boston Promise.

The Citizen also publishes correspondence between its proprietors and the Conservative Association of Ottawa. In this it points out that Sir James Whitney and Hon. Mr. Hanna urged The Citizen to undertake a campaign of education along tax reform lines several years ago, and asks that the Conservative party live up to its promise, asserting that there is a great demand from practically every municipality, township, county and City Council for the advanced legislation. In reply the Government denies the legislation, hence The Citizen's first party change since Confederation.

ARRESTED ON ASSAULT CHARGE

High County Constable George Cochrane had a motor trip to the head of Stoney Lake yesterday, where he arrested Aleana Hull a young man living near Jack's Creek, on the charge of assaulting Archibald Mills. The charge is the sequel of a fight between the two. Hull has promised to appear before Magistrate Edmison on Friday.

SUCCESS OF THE TEN MINUTE SERVICE DEPENDS ON THE PATRONS OF CARS THEMSELVES

Fine New Car Will be Initiated With the Inauguration of the Ten Minute Street Car Service in This City Which Commences Monday

On Monday next the ten minute service, the advent of which has been hailed with considerable commendation by patrons of the company, will be inaugurated in connection with the local Street Railway. And with the inauguration of the ten-minute system will come the intiation of a splendid new pay-as-you-enter car, of the very latest model, which will operate with the other three on the George street line.

The new car arrived at the Canadian Pacific station last night from the shops of the Ottawa Car Co., and was unloaded to-day and taken to the Street Railway barns for the installation of the motors. The new car is an improvement in many ways over the present P.A.Y.E. cars in Peterborough, and is designed so as to give more benefits to the passengers and the company alike. In the first place the car is three feet longer, and will seat 38 passengers, or ten more than the old P.A.Y.E. cars. The vestibules at the front and rear for the motormen and conductor are done away with altogether, and the space is devoted to increasing the seating capacity, and at the same time the airiness and ventilation of the cars.

The conductor's space is marked off by brass bars, but he is not enclosed by wood-and-glass partitions as formerly, the extra room is used for seats. Then, too, the last two seats of the care are parallel with the sides of the car, leaving a very wide aisle where the passengers enter and leave the body of the car, and insuring freedom from crowding. The aisle leaves plenty of room for passengers entering and leaving the car at the same time, and sanitary hand grips arep rovided above these seats, which have not the hand grips that are to be found on the other seats. The seats are set on higher pressed steel pedestals which make it possible for the car to be swept out thoroughly.

As in the case of the conductor the motorman will not be enclosed in a vestibule. He is protected from encroaching passengers by brass rails, and much of the space gained by this change is used for seats. The rails make it possible, when the car becomes crowded for a number to stand at the front of the car without crowding the motorman as would be the case with the old cars. At the rear of the car there is a rail dividing the passage on the rear platform. All persons standing at the back of the car, for smoking or any other purpose, must stand behind this rail. Thus the entrance to the car is kept perfectly clear, and there need be no time lost, or inconvenience suffered through passengers entering a car where some of the passengers are standing at the back. Those who are standing at the back will be protected by the rail from having any persons entering the car precipitated on to them when the car starts. Bars are also put around the windows of the rear lobby to protect the windows from the elbows of the passengers, and the passengers from suffering injury or cuts by breaking through the windows.

The exterior and interior of the new car might be termed "classy," the interior being particularly bright and airy. None of the seats are crowded and the convenience of the passengers is provided for in many details more than in the present cars. The fender is of a new type that has been adopted in London, Eng., New York City and Buffalo, designed so that a gate under the car swings back when the car is about to pass over any obstruction, and automatically a fender is lowered to the track and picks up the obstruction. If the obstruction be a living thing, considerable jolting is avoided by the fender.

The New Service.

Through the new service there will be a car leave every part of the system every ten minutes. On the George street line the new turnouts on Romaine, George street near Charlotte, and George street near Antrim, will be used. It is important that all should understand that the success of the new system will depend on the passengers themselves. Any delay in getting on or off the cars, or at the transfer points, will hold up the whole system and prevent correct connections being made. They are therefore urged to lose no time in entering or leaving the cars or making transfers.

A new diamond is being installed at the Grand Trunk crossings at Bethune and Charlotte streets, which is the first of the kind to be used in Peterborough. It is constructed of Manganese steel and costs about three times as much as the old diamonds. But its life is supposed to be three times as long as it remained uninjured from ravages of the frost, and its smooth-running qualities last to the end.

Brownie is the Australian rider at the Toronto Motordrome, which is a new feature in sporting circles in Toronto, being the largest in America. "Brownie" has been cleaning up all the events in great style. Mrs. Carslake started the race for the Carslake Sweepstakes a few nights ago.

BASEBALL

NEW YORK, June 22.—Old John J. has spent many a long year rounding out his collection, but if there is in baseball to-day a stronger trio than Burns, Beecher and Robertson, Col. McGraw would greatly admire to be led into the vicinity of the same and shown.

For several years Detroit, with Cobb, Crawford and almost any old third man; the Boston Americans with Lewis, Speaker and Hoper, and the Cincinnati Reds, with Marsans, Beecher and a companion piece were strong leaders in this branch of the national pastime; but in their palmiest days none of the above had much, if anything on the picket line now on daily exhibition at the Polo grounds.

In this critical age, it is only necessary to label a ball player as "a second Cobb," or "another Speaker," to put a plight upon him. But this here Robertson feller come up, called all that and even more, is immediately taken seriously and in three days has an entire populace with him, closer than his little brother's collar.

Not since Cobb broke in has a young ball player created anything like the sensation that Robertson is now spreading through the National League. Joe Jackson had been on the Athletics before he joined the Naps, and his fame was rather tardy in catching up with his batting average. Tris Speaker plodded along for a couple of months before fandom was ready to accept him as a real find.

But the Robertson—he just plants himself into the line-up, takes two cracks at a baseball and is forthwith invited to sit among the elect. He is accepted, not with reservations that provide the dopsters with an "out" in case he should flivver but as one who has come among us to stay for a long time, shedding base hits and happiness plentifully along his line of march.

Robertson would himself quite from baseball tick goal, but there is Clark York ha chas two master workmen to keep him company in the bar reaches Clarke Burns, the National League's batting hitter, said Bobby Bescher, by common consent the shiftiest base runner in the Tenner circuit. And both superfielders. It is by a wide margin the strongest outfield the Giants have owned for many years, and by quite a shade the best all-round trio now operating in the National League.

Of course it won't help McGraw any to toss such an outfield as this against the Athletics in the big money series next fall. No, not even a little bit; only in so far as it may help to lead against the American League champions a full line of slugging, running, sure-sliding stars, where heretofore the had been forced to depend upon three that, while good, were never ranked above the average.

There is no outfield in either league which can do so many things quite so well as Katie, Bobby and Davey. All these are hitters; all three are flashes on the base lines; all three field beyond the average; and all three are equipped with strong, accurate throwing arms. Until he fell into his four-day slump when he plodded through nineteen fruitless times at bat, Burns was leading the National League hitters by a healthy margin, and yesterday he climbed out of his slough with a perfect average on the day.

Beecher is not hitting so heavily, but has been climbing steadily up to his own standards of swat. While Robertson, with eleven times at bat in three days, has hit .454, with three singles, a triple and a home run, Davey will probably fall off from that high notch, but not very far. The young man is a natural run, with whom all stages are alike and before whom a pitcher is just a pitcher, whether he be an Alexander or a Buster Brown. Once in a while one of this sort breaks in to add to the income of the young man in charge of the automobile parking enclosure.

GRADUATING EXERCISES HELD AT THE CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC LAST NIGHT

Graduating Nurses Honoured in Splendid Affair Which Was Featured by Splendid Musical Programme and Addresses by Rev. R. G. Peever and Dr. A. Moir

DIPLOMAS CONFERRED

Very beautiful and impressive were the graduation exercises of the Nicholls Hospital in the Conservatory of Music Hall, last night. The Graduating Class was honoured in a very pleasing affair and a large number of invited guests responded to the invitation tendered them to be present.

The Graduating Class, in whose honour the exercises were held last night and who took the affirmation, and received their diplomas, the latter being presented by Mr. William Madill, is made up of the following successful members:

Graduating Class—1914.

Miss Frances Muriel Smith.
Miss Agnes Gregg Davis.
Miss Vera Dell Burgess.
Miss Margaret Ritchie Scott.
Miss Margaret Brotherson.

Mr. Wm. Madill presided at the exercises last night. In his brief address he regretted the absence through illness, of Mr. Richard Hall, Chairman of the Board, who had presided at every graduating event since the Hospital had been built. Then Mr. Madill gave a very interesting sketch of the history of the Hospital, referring especially to the splendid addition that was made to the already praiseworthy institution, and just recently competed.

The musical programme was contributed by Miss Ada Richardson, Mr. Asa Hucke and Mr. John Crane. Miss Richardson rendered two solos in excellent voice. Miss Richardson possesses a soprano voice of beautiful quality, thoroughly cultured, and used with artistic taste and effectiveness, which was charmingly demonstrated in her two solos, with which she delighted the audience last night.

Mr Asa Huycke, the well-known local tenor, gave two solos, which were warmly received. Mr. Huycke's playing for the dance that followed the exercises is also worthy of much favourable comment, as it was greatly enjoyed.

Mr. John Crane also contributed several well-played selections on the piano.

The Rev. R. G. Peever, in his address, referred to the motto of the nurses—"For God and Humanity," and spoke, too, of the founder of the order, Miss Florence Nightingale, and her heroic work in the Crimean war.

Of the graduating class Miss F. A. Smith was most signally honoured. She was successful in winning the bandaging prize, which was presented to her last night by Dr. A. Moir.

Dr. Moir also delivered an excedingly helpful address to the graduates giving them many words of counsel and advice that must prove of considerable value to them in entering upon the responsibilities which commence with the completion of their course at the Hospital.

The diplomas were presented to the graduates by the Chairman, Mr. Madill.

After the programme a very enjoyable dance was held. The music was provided by Mr. Asa Huycke, and Mr. John Crane, and was of the highest order. The dancing continued until the hour of midnight when, to the regret of the hostess and guests alike, the affair was brought to a close. During the evening tasty and dainty refreshments were served.

THE STONEY LAKE POWER SQUADRON

STONEY LAKE, June 23. The number of boats propelled by power, usually gasoline, is becoming so great in Stoney Lake, that owners should acquaint themselves with the "rules of the road," not only for the greater comfort of their companions, but for the safety of their own lives. It is not so difficult to keep clear of the other fellow in daylight, but at night there is great danger of colliding with some careless navigator, if care is not exercised. Many people undertake to operate a power boat who know no more about the boat than the boat knows about them, sometimes with disastrous results.

If we may judge by experience in some lines, things will go on as they are until some appaling disaster occurs, then the authorities will waken up and compel every motor boat user to pass a rigid examination before he will be permitted to run a boat. The rules governing the safe navigation of vessels are founded on experience and common sense. Motor boats meeting one another head on, should turn to the right, as in driving a horse on a street. Ordinarily, one whistle is exchanged, which means, "I am directing my course to the right." If there is some good reason for passing on the left, then two whistles should be exchanged, which mean "I am directing my course to the left."

At night, boats meeting head on, will expose to each other both sidelights, and as the course is changed to pass, the colour of the side light seen should be the same as your own side light exposed to the approaching craft. In the case of boats crossing you have the right of way if the other boat is off the left bow crossing to the right; but if the vessel is crossing from the right you must keep clear, by crossing astern.

At night, if a green light is seen off the left bow, hold your course, for you have the right of way. If a red light appears to the right of your bow swing to the right until the light is on the left bow. In overtaking a motor boat you must keep clear as she has the right of way. In all cases a sailing boat has the right of way. No boat should attempt to run at night without the regulation lights. A bright, white light at the bow, screened so as not to show across the bow; two side lights, green on the right, red on the left, both screened so as not to show across the bow. A white light at the stern, visible at all points; four short blasts of the whistle is the "danger signal," and should never be used except when absolutely necessary.

Above all, use god, common sense. Do not get excited, and know your course. Ah! There's the rub, particularly in Stoney Lake.

—Monty La Rock.

ADMITS SHE CALLED HER HUBBY A "NUT"

NEW YORK, June 23—Mrs. Dorothy P. Stevens, daughter of the Rev. Madison C. Peters, admitted she called her husband a "d— fool," and "a nut" when she took the stand before Justice Kelly in the supreme court, in Brooklyn, at the trial of her action for separation against Tarry A. Stevens, a salesman.

"She swore at me frequently," Mr. Stevens testified. "We agreed finally that she was to give me 10 cents each time she swore at me. We thought that would break her of the habit. One evening she asked me if I knew how to make her happy. I inquired how. 'Well, get knocked down by a trolley car, and then may be I'll send your body home,' was her answer.

In reserving decision Justcie Kelly said: "You can go into the huts of the poor and lowly and not hear such conversations between husband and wife as have been testified to here."

NEW LAKE SHORE LINE OF THE C.P.R.

The new Lake Shore Line of the C.P.R., running from Agincourt to Glen Tay, which has been in operation since June 1st, is now in full swing. Although already considerable freight is being carried over the line, it will not materially effect Peterborough, for through freight only is sent via by this route. Havelock, however, will probably suffer severely by the opening of the new road. Indeed, even now stories are being told of the retrograde in real estate values. One man, it is said, built a house some little time ago at a cost of four thousand dollars, and was obliged to accept three thousand for it, while another is offering a seventeen hundred dollar house for one thousand dollars. It is understood also that insurance men are transferring insurance from Havelock to Trentan, the new divisional headquarters.

Speaking with Mr. Dodd this afternoon The Examiner was informed that it is unlikely that a new station will be built at Havelock as was originally intended.

Heavy Decrease In The Canal Tonnage

Special Wire to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, June 23. — Canadian canal statistics just compiled for the period from the opening of navigation until the beginning of the present month show a heavy decrease in tonnage below the statistics for the corresponding period last year. A falling off of two million tons at the Soo is largely responsible for the decrease in the total traffic. The St. Lawrence canals show an increase of 63,889 tons, and the Welland an increase of 61,823 tons.

WILLL NOT LIKELY APPEAR IN COURT

License Inspector Stewart recently went back to Swamp Lake to serve Hank Smith, who was charged with selling liquor in Galway Township, an unlicensed municipality. Smith resided with Mr. Sheavers, in a little log hut on the lake shore. When Mr. Stewart arrived Hank was out on the lake. He left the summons to appear in Peterborough on Friday with Sheavers. The Inspector is of the opinion that Smith will leave the country and come down for trial. Several months ago he was fined $100 for a similar offence at Kinmount.

MOONLIGHT OF KNOX CHURCH YOUNG PEOPLE

A very successful moonlight excursion was held down the river last night by the Young People's Guild of the Knox Presbyterian Church. A large number took in the outing, and all were pleasingly entertained and spent an enjoyable evening. A good orchestra provided splendid music, and there was a big run on the refreshment booth throughout. Every possible arrangement for the convenience of those on board was made by the committee in charge, who should be congratulated on the success of the affair.

Vasil Delmege—the collection clerk of the Merchants' Bank, Montreal, who is charged with stealing $150,000 from the Bank's funds. A young woman, named Miss "Buster Legault," who has been travelling around with the absconder as his wife, came to the mail to see him, and they indulged in such strenuous love scenes the officials decided to take Delmege to the Bordeaux jail for safekeeping.

POINTED SENTENCES FROM PROF. REYNOLDS

"Don't desire your children to stay on the farm and at the same time speak disparagingly of it," was one of the nuggets of the homely philosophy expounded by Prof. Reynolds of the O.A.C. at an institute meeting attended by one of the editors of Farm and Dairy last winter. Other pointed sentences from Prof. Reynolds' address were the following:

"Respect yourselves or you will not get others to respect you. If you don't your children will respect neither you nor your calling.

"We will never solve the rural problem by education until we give our boys and girls the education that will make them contented to stay on the farm.

"I would be the last to say that because a boy is born in the country he must stay in the country. We must have neither legislation nor sentiment such as this. As a general thing, however, the boys born in the country should be the farmers. They are the best adapted to it.

"There is an education that in the end tends to make boys discontented with the farm. This is not so much the fault of the education as of conditions on the farms.

"The boy who goes to college comes back with a desire to do one hundred and one things to improve the farm. The father is there. He is old-fashioned in his ideas and opposes the enthusiastic propositions of his son. Consequently the boy leaves. We must set ourselves to the task of making conditions more satisfactory to these boys. The solution of the rural problem must begin on the farm and in the farm home.

"Chores, chores, chores! If boys find that the work can be done easier and more conveniently and you oppose the newer methods, can you blame the boy if he is discontented? These improvements cost money, but mental inertia is a greater drawback to their adoption.

"Why not take up cow-testing? Any scheme that gives mental interest to work will help to attach the boy to the farm.

"Many people in the cities whose incomes are not as great as the farmer's have conveniences in the home and they pay for them. Household conveniences are not only of the city.

"In the hands of the fathers and mothers on the farm to-day largely lies the solution of the rural problem."

The health of the average farm flock of poultry is not as a rule well looked after. In a few cases regular and systematic cleaning of the house is observed, but these are the exception rather than the rule.—J. H. Hare, Whitby, Ont.

TOSSED INTO LAKE BY A MANIAC

ABINGTON, Pa., June 23.—Actuated, is is believed, by religious mania, Jerry O'Keefe, an employee of the Overbrook farms of Captain W. W. Frazier, at Willow Grove, picked up 12-year-old "Billie" Phipps, a Willow Grove boy, and hurled him into Willow Grove lake. Phipps was not injured, and was not in a whole lot of danger, because there is but about four feet of water in the lake at that point. O'Keefe was arrested and was taken to the Abington police station, where, after a hearing before Magistrate Williams, his case was held under advisement, pending an examination of his condition.

THE TOLL OF THE BELL ON THE TOLL OF THE BAR

Dear Editor,— Notwithstanding all I have read out of the mouths of our ministers of the Gospel in Peterborough, I believe the fight is between Rowell and Whitney who shall be boss of Ontario. No doubt our ministers believe that Christ is the Saviour of the world. But will they believe that Borden and Whitney are the saviours of Canada What about reciprocity? What about our navy. Reciprocity would have made Canada the slave of Uncle Sam. And if we don't stand by the British navy Canada is doomed to die. What did the Rev. Robt. Pogue of St. Paul's Church say in his patriotic sermon last year? He said it is the height of folly for Canada to spend her millions in buying Dreadnoughts and supporting an elaborate military system to fight an imaginary foe, a foe which in the nature of things can never exist. Would the rev. gentleman rather live under the Stars and Stripes than under the Union Jack. It seems to me that Canada must be under the one or the other, and if forced under Uncle Sam, that there would be fighting, because Canada being the possessor of the best half of North America, could not hold it long without the British navy. I think that God would not be with Mr. Pogue in this fighting matter. I think the laws of Great Britain are the best in this world, and I hope that the Grits of England and the Grits of Canada will not smash them. I believe that Whitney has given Ontario the best government that has been since Confederation, and the Grits must crucify him.

The temperance sentiment is strong,
The only plank Grits stand upon,
The Ross rascality is known
Throughout the British Empire.

Remember the ballot burnings,
Minnie M. jaunts and journeyings,
The numbered ballot shufflings
By Grits of Ontario.

—John Bell.

Mr. Bell is living in the past; he is walking among ghosts of long dead political issues. The Ross government and its work are not on trial. Whatever its sins according to Mr. Bell and others, it has expiated them and if its enemies wish to think so, it has been punished. It is no longer an issue. The present government's policy of keep-the-bar is being weighed in the balance of public opinion with Rowell's policy, abolish the bar and all its works. Mr. Bell is at least sincere. He publicly announces his hostility to temperance measures like local option, and he is consistent. The man who has been advocating the abolition of the drink traffic, unless he takes his stand with Mr. Bell and the licensed victuallers' association, will abolish the bar.

CAUTIOUS WITH STRANGERS

Mistress: "Of course I don't wish to put any obstacle in the way of your getting married, but I wish it were possible to postpone it until I get another maid."

Mary Ann: "Well, mum, I 'ardly think I know 'im well enough to ask 'im to put it off."

Who Is Behind The Liquor Interests Of Ontario?

The Ontario Government or Mr. Rowell—The Letter Below Will Show—Read It

The following letter was received by a gentleman of this city formerly in the hotel business, evidently sent under the impression that he was in that business. The letter explains itself and a good deal more besides:

Toronto, May 22nd, 1914.

Dear Sir,—A provincial election with the "abolition of the bar" as the issue is shortly to be fought in Ontario. Already there is more than one-half of the area of the province "dry" under the local option by-law which as you know needs a three-fifths vote, whereas a Rowell candidate may be sent to Toronto on a straight majority to endorse his cause in the Legislature. You must then, realize that the present situation is fraught with not a little danger to the licenses of hotel property throughout Ontario.

There is not one newspaper or periodical of any description which is flat-footed fighting the battles of the licensed trade in Ontario to-day with the exception of this journal, which since its inception has waged a relentless war against the Dominion Alliance, the Lord's Day Alliance, and their county organizations of so-called reformers.

It is now the intention of the publishers to go a step further, and before the election, we propose to issue a Special Hotel Number, double the size of the regular number, devoted entirely to a discussion of the prohibition fallacy, showing the evil results of prohibitory and sumptuary laws wherever they have been enacted. The publishers have arranged with one of the most versatile writers in the province on this subject to prepare the copy for this special number.

"Jack Canuck" is read by 100,000 people every week, but we will go one better for the special number and print double the usual issue, which means that it will be read by 200,000 people who will be urged to vote against the measure which is aimed at your business.

This will take money, and we address you with the request that to make the publication of this number possible, you will agree to purchase advertising space in this number to the extent of $10.00 at least.

We promise an issue that will stagger the "drys" and will not only have the effect of blocking Rowell's candidates, but will also be effective in stemming the tide of Local Option and Scott Act sentiment which will be stirred up for January next if Rowell is defeated.

Yours faithfully,

AFRAID OF THE STRAIGHT ISSUE

The Government party in Ontario is evidently filled with alarm at the prospect of defeat on the "abolish the bar" issue, and is now making frantic efforts to shake loose from that question and contest the election on something else—anything else.

The strategists of the party are desperately trying to hide the bar-room behind the schoolhouse until polling day is over.

They have adopted the soldiers' idea that it is sometimes possible to end rebellion at home by starting a foreign war.

The word has gone forth to all the party faithful to preach an old-time Ontario Jehad and make a wild alarm all next week about the French language in the schools and the encroachments of the French race on this English and Protestant Province.

It is all very sudden, of course. The Government's record in regard to French in schools is now precisely what it was a few months ago, when the Orange Sentinel, the Toronto Telegram and the rest of them were raging at Hon. Dr. Pyne and the Government for betraying the public schools and making French a dual official language. Now these men who were so recently denounced as betrayers are to be extolled as heroic defenders of our race and language, although since they were denounced they have not changed the school laws by altering a word or dotting an i.

The strategists of the Government party see that their only hope of success lies in changing the subject. They must raise an alarm of fire; they must start a fire, get the crowd running to it, and make the people forget what they were thinking about. For a quick blaze they regard race, language, and religion the handiest materials.

But it is rather late to try this, and the object in view is too plainly evident. The object is to inflame a racial sentiment in the hope that it will be stronger than temperance sentiment, so that in the confusion the bar-room may escape. The attempt is being made to lead the present uprising on, past the tavern, to the little red schoolhouse, where Dr. Pyne says, there are terrible text-books, authorised by Dr. Pyne, and printed in a foreign language that no honest Briton ought to be able to understand.

"Billy Goat" "Butts In" With Some Good Argument

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—To some of us that are or have been familiar with the bar, the arguments used against the Rowell policy in many cases are ridiculous in the extreme.

One curious statement, made by those who are getting the benefit of thousands of dollars furnished by the liquor manufactures to fight the banish-the-bar policy, is that if the bars are abolished there will be more drinking than ever. Any one who knows the drinking business as well as the Conservative candidate claims to know it and will stick to what are facts will agree with one who has had some of the same experience when I claim that if the liquor interests had their choice they would say give us the bar and the club, and take the shop. The truth of the matter is there is no choice for them; for they know that if the Rowell party is returned on the 29th of June, the tail will go with the hide.

Let us get after the bar and the club now when we've got the chance, and if the shops are as bad as they claim they will be, how easily it will be to get them away without the three-fifths handicap, and the help of the good and true Conservative temperance lush (if there are any), who are not with us but against us.

While some of the Conservatives are telling us that the present government are the only true friends of the temperance cause, others of them are saying that temperance legislation is all humbug. One worker amongst them has told me that in a local option village not far from our city, men are often seen upon the streets under the influence of liquor, and that it is no trouble to get all you want if you are known. I don't doubt this; for do we not know that the liquor laws are not enforced in our own city by the officials of the present government. The temperance people should not forget how they were treated by the license commissioners a short time ago and how they were backed up by the government.

Why do we make laws that permit men to sell liquor to men that want to get drunk, and only beer slingers and bottle pushers who can do the job quick are wanted on the job and then have a policeman outside to lock him up and punish him in the police court the next morning for exercising his personal liberty.

Take it from one who knows that if you close the bars you will strike at the root of eighty per cent. of the cause of immorality in our city. If it is not fostered and encouraged by the keepers it is by a large percentage of the frequenters, and in the most of cases by both.

Some of the women who were out for a policewoman a short time ago are not in favour of Rowell's policy. If they knew the bar as some of us do, they would know that the blackguards and scoundrels who molest and are practicing the ruin of young girls get their education in the bar.

One of the most absurd statements ever made from a public platform was that made by the Conservative candidate when he said that more young men were ruined by the shops than by the bar. When a man who knows the true state of affairs in connection with a bar-room as well as he claims to know it, will try to mislead the public in this manner for his gain, it is hard to strike a limit as to how far he will go.

If the people of Peterborough do their duty upon the 29th he will not get a chance to go very far.

BILLY GOAT.

Peterborough, June 22rd.

NEWBRO'S HERPICIDE SAVES WORRY, SAVES MONEY, SAVES THE HAIR

If you want to lose your head of dandruff and stop falling hair, you must sooner or later resort to Newbro's Herpicide.

By using Herpicide first you save yourself worry, which is desirable, you save money, which is a consideration, and you save your hair, which is the most important thing of all.

Why not profit by the experience of Mrs. S. A. Lee, of 110 South 4th Street, Richmond, Va., who writes: "Four years' residence in India ruined my hair until it was but two inches long and very thin. I tried everything in Europe and America without benefit until I was induced to use Herpicide. My hair is now long, soft and silky and natural colour, while before it was quite grey. My friends never tire of admiring my hair."

Mrs. Lee's story is a typical history of hair troubles. After everything else fails Newbro's Herpicide brings relief. It would be just as effective if used first.

Newbro's Herpicide makes the accumulation of dandruff impossible and prevents falling hair. It stops itching of the scalp almost instantly. No matter what the claims of others, Herpicide is the only "genuine original dandruff germ destroyer."

Newbro's Herpicide in 50c and $1 sizes is sold by all dealers who guarantee it to do all that is claimed. If you are not satisfied your money will be refunded.

Applications at good barber shops.

AND ONCE WHACK AT THE TENT CATERPILLAR

The Comissioner of Agriculture of the State of New ork has declared it a misdemeanor punishable by a fine to harbour the insect known as Tent Caterpillar after June 1. This stringent order has gone forth because of the alarming rate at which this pest has spred over most of the state during the past two years.

It feeds on apples, pears, cherries, and various other fruit trees, but seems to be especially fond of the wild choke-cherries which are so badly infested that it has been suggested to allow them to grow on one's premises, should also be considered a misdemeanour. Since they are of but little value their destruction would not work much hardship.

How to Know the Insect.

The tent caterpillar is so named because of its habit of building a web-like tent or nest in the tree and into which the worms go for shelter at night and on cold, rainy days. The worms or caterpillars hatch in great numbers about the time the leaves appear from eggs laid in a mass about a small swig. These are laid by a moth during the late summer and fall and they remain on the tree over winter. The damage is done by eating the leaves. In many instances every leaf on a tree is eaten by these hungry insects.

Methods of Control.

There are three rather easy methods of control. First: The nests may be cut out and burned. Since the caterpillars all come into the nest by taking out the nest in the late evening or early morning, and may be killed by burning or crushing under foot.

Second: They may be destroyed by burning out the nests in the evening or early morning with a torch near enough so as to burn the nest slowly so that the worms will drop out and fall through the blaze. In this way they will be burned. If the torch is placed close to and at one side of the nest it will burn suddenly and the worms will fall to the ground uninjured and will climb back up the tree again.

Third: They may be destroyed by spraying. Since the worms eat the foliage spraying the leaves thoroughly with arsenate of lead or any other arsenical poison will kill them. It heuld be used as a rather strong spray—at least three pounds of arsenate of lead (paste) or one-half pound Paris green to each 50 gallons of water. It should also be aplied before the worms have reached full size and are leaving the tree to spin their cocoons, for at that time they eat little or nothing.

The Franchise A Sacred Trust

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—We are in the midst of a wonderful event. The Church has spoken as never before. Let us calmly look at a few words from the Good book in this fast age, for here we are on common ground, inasmuch as in every letter we write, and every paper we print, we refer to the birth of our Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ. Matthew 16 and 18, and "I say also unto Thee that Thou art Peter, and upon this Rock I will build My Church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

Mark 6 v. 11. "After the twelve were sent forth," and whosoever shall not receive you nor hear you, when ye depart thence shake off the dust under your feet for a testimony against them. Verily I say unto you, it shall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrha in the day of judgment than for that city." Acts 2 v. 47, "praising God and having favour with all the people and the Lord added to the Church daily such as should be saved." Acts 20 v. 28. "Take heed, therefore, unto yourself and to all the flock over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers. To feed the Church of God which He hath purchased with His own blood.

Eph. 3 v. 10. "To the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in Heavenly places might be known by the church the manifold wisdom of God." Sph. 5 v. 23. "Even as Christ is the Head of the Church, and He is the Saviour of the body." Verse 25. "Even as Christ also loved the Church and gave Himself for it." Verse 27. "That He might present it to Himself a glorious Church not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing, but that it should be Holy and without blemish." Eph. 3 v. 20-21. Now unto Him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us, unto Him be glory in the Church by Christ Jesus, throughout all ages, world without end. Amen."

After His Resurrection. Rev. 1 vs. 4. "John to the seven churches which are in Asia, Grace be unto you and peace from Him which is, and which was and which is to come, and from the seven spirits which are before His throne." Verse 7. "ehold He cometh with clouds and every eye shall se Him, and thy also which pierced Him, and all kindreds of the earth shall wait because of Him even so. Amen."

Now here we are, thousands of us, yes millions and millions of us, every soul going away during this century (likely true), many, many of us going before the century is half gone, some perhaps ere this year closes (very uncertain). Where are we going?

Blessed be God we are not left in the Dark. He has told us in His word: "In My Father's House are many mansions." He has also told us how to reach them.

Now I believe that the Church stands for the uplift of man here and hereafter. And I believe this world was fitted up by the Divine Hand for man, and that man has been used by the Divine Hand in the past to make this world better, and I believe he is still interested, and using man, and if not through the Church, tell me what way, for I honestly do not know.

Now God has placed in our hands a sacred trust, t.ev ove. We are the final appeal. Be careful. Be careful. Think twice before you oppose the Church of Christ.

An oppossum eats the head and neck of a fowl and kills one or two at a time. A mink bleeds his victmaturity, maturing the first season. tims in the neck and sucks the blood, and will slaughter a dozen or more birds in a night, Both leave the carcasses in the coop or house.

The best way to clean drinking fountains, which cannot be reached on the inside, is to use scalding hot water and a big handful of shot. Fill the vessel about a quarter full of hot water and then pour in the shot. Shake the vessel briskly so that the shot will scrape along the bottom and the sides of the fountain. This will remove the scum and leave the fountain sweet and clean.

In giving medicine to a fowl, commonly speaking, what would be considered the dose for a child is about right for a fowl. A two months old chick will need as much medicine in a day as a six months old child. At six weeks it would require the same sized dose as for a year old child; when half grown, as much as for a two year old child, and an adult bird as much as for a four year old child.

Immediately after dressing poultry it should be thrown into ice cold water, and allowed to remain until all the animal heat has left the body. Neglect to do this is apt to cause the carcass to turn green in parts by the time destination is reached.

NO MORE UGLY HAIRS TO MAR YOUR BEAUTY

(Beauty Notes)

A thick paste made with powdered delatone and water, and applied to objectionable hairs for two or three minutes, when removed will take every trace of hair with it and leave the skin firm and free from blemish. After this treatment has been employed, the skin should be washed to remove the remaining delatone. This is quick, harmless and certain, but to avoid disappointment care should be taken to see that it is real delatone you get.

THINGS WORTH KNOWING

Some housewives find the matting in their summer cottages wears much longer if it is treated with a coating of varnish each spring.

If you are doubtful about your cream keeping sweet, heat it to almost boiling, put it in tightly corked bottles and set on the ice to cool. In this way it will not sour nearly as soon.

Chamois gloves will remain softer after washing if the soapsuds are not entirely rinsed out, but allowed to dry in the gloves.

To have an iron stand always in readiness on your ironing board, nail an oblong piece of zinc a rule or tin longer than the iron to the ironing board. You will find this saves annoyance, as the regulation stand is not always at hand when required.

To iron a natural-coloured pongee so as to preserve its beauty, iron it only when it is perfectly dry and with an iron only moderately hot, as nothing scorches quite so easily as silk. Do not sprinkle pongee, as the water spots never iron out.

It's easier for a pretty girl to flag an automobile than it is for a homely one to stop a street car.

VEAL LOAF.

This can be made from veal left over from roast. Chop fine two cups of cold veal, adding cup of cracker crumbs and tomatoes, small piece of onion and a sprig of finely-chopped parsley; season with salt and pepper to taste; mix all together with an egg. Form in shape of loaf and put in a pan lined with slices of bacon, adding strips of bacon and a little parsley on top. Bake 20 to 30 minutes in a moderate oven.

Fruit Cocktail.

Peel a grape fruit, divide it into lobes, and cut each lobe into four pieces, rejecting all bits of membrane and all seeds; prepare an orange in the same way; cut two slices of pineapple into small bits. Mix the fruits, sprinkle them with sugar, flavour with maraschino, if this is liked; add enough of the sweetened juice from the fruits to make a rather liquid mixture. Set on the ice until ready to serve in chilled, fruit glasses, putting several maraschino cherries on the top of each glass of fruit, or, if you prefer, serve in baskets made of the grape fruit rinds.

Oatmeal Bread.

Two cups rolled oats, one-half cup sugar, one-half cup molasses, one large, tablespoonful shortening, one quart boiling water. Let this stand until cool, then add one yeast cake and white flour enough to knead (about three quarts). Let rise, knead and let rise in time. Bake one hour.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

FIRST GAME OF THE SERIES WAS AN EASY VICTORY FOR THE PETES

Tracey's Steady Pitching and Timely Hitting of the Homesters Gave the Blount Gang a 7 to 1 Win Over the Brants

QUICKLY PLAYED GAME

The Petes won the opening game of the Brantford series yesterday so easily that one would wonder how they ever dropped two games in one day to the Brants, if he did not appreciate the vagaries of baseball. The score was 7 to 1, and Rube Deneau's hand was never in the hunt. The Petes swung their war clubs lustily on Hank Gero's offerings, and as the visitors obligingly mixed in a few errors with the safeties, the runs came freely. On the other hand Tracey was out there with splendid brand of pitching, holding the Brants to six scattered singles and would have had a shut out had it not been for a boot by Fox, by the way the only error in the Petes' play during the day. Tracey showed his usual good control, not handing out a base on balls, while his only complimentary was handed to Dolan in the shape of a slant in the ribs. "Trace" is twisling in his 1913 form, and has won five decisions in eight starts.

The Petes played snappy peppery ball. Fox was the pivot for a fast double play, and Joe Byrne wound up the game by a beautiful stop of Forgue's lofty bounder to third, which robbed the little shortstop of a hit. Rooney, the new first-sacker, who replaced Jimmy Gorman, handled himself nicely around the initial corner, accepting fourteen chances in good style, while he had one hit in four trips to the plate. He takes a healthy cut at the ball, and looks like a hitter. Welsh and Stewart starred with the stick with two hits out of three times up. The former was robbed of a perfect average when Biddy Burns made a neat catch of his line drive to left.

The Petes got after Gero early, getting two runs in the first innings, and they kept a systematic bombardment going all the way. They were handed two or three runs, but they earned the rest by their hitting.

The game was galloped through in the remarkable quick time of 1:20, a local record for a nine-innings game. Considerable credit for this is due to Umpire Buck Freeman, who kept the teams on the run throughout. Freeman, the old Toronto and Washington slugger, looks like a real umpire. There were no disputes about his work yesterday, and the crowd appreciated the way he kept the players hustling.

First Innings.

Brantford—Burns died on a foul fly to Kelly. Nelson grounded to Fox. Deneau died the same way. No runs, hits or errors.

Peterborough—Blount died on a bounder to Roth. Byrne beat out a little roller along the third base line. Welsh singled to centre, Byrne going to third and Welsh taking second on the throw to third. Stewart singled to centre, scoring Byrne and Welsh, and going to second on the throw. Rooney flied to centre. King flied to right, Dolan making a nice catch. Two runs, three hits, no errors.

Second Innings.

Brantford—Ivers rolled to King and was out. Dolan was hit. Roth grounded to Rooney, Dolan going to second. Forgue fanned. No runs, hits or errors.

Peterborough—Fox caught the Sox flat-footed with a bunt which he beat out easily. Kelly sacrificed, Nelson to Roth. Tracey hit to Forgue who threw high to first, Fox scoring and Tracey going to second. Blount grounded to Ivers, Tracey advancing to third. Byrne grounded to Nelson. One run, one hit, one error.

Third Innings.

Brantford—Fox fumbled Lacroix's easy grounder. Gero singled to right, Lavroix going to third. Burns grounded to Fox who lost an easy double by throwing to first. Nelson fanned. Lacroix scored on a wild pitch. Deneau fanned. One run, one hit one error.

Peterborough—Welsh singled to centre like a rifle shot. Stewart sacrificed, Nelson to Roth. Rooney fanned. King grounded to Forgue. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Fourth Innings.

Brantford—Ivers fanned. Dolan flied to Stewart. Roth grounded to King. No runs, hits or errors.

Peterborough—Fox walked. Kelly sacrificed, Gero to Roth. Tracey flied to Deneau in deep centre, and Fox scored when Forgue missed Deneau's relay. Blount flied to Burns. One run, no hits, one error.

Fifth Innings.

Brantford—Forgue grounded to Rooney. Lacroix rolled to King and was out. Gero flied to Welsh. No runs, hits or errors.

Peterborough — Byrne walked. Welsh sacrificed, Gero to Roth. Stewart singled through Roth, Byrne scoring. Stewart went to second when Lacroix missed Dolan's throw. Rooney singled to right, scoring Stewart and taking second on the throw to the plate. King grounded to Nelson, Rooney going to third. Fox fanned. Two runs, two hits, one error.

Sixth Innings.

Brantford—Burns flied to Welsh. Nelson died on one to Blount. Deneau singled to centre. Ivers singled to left. Dolan died on a grounder to Rooney. No runs, two hits, no errors.

Peterborough—Kelly grounded to Gero. Tracey drew a pass. Blount singled to centre. Byrne forced Blount, Forgue to Roth. Byrne was out stealing, Lacroix to Roth. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Seventh Innings.

Brantford—Roth singled to left centre. Forgue hit into a double, King to Fox to Rooney. Lacroix grounded to Fox. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Peterborough—Welsh died on a line drive which Burns grabbed neatly. Dolan made a nice catch of Stewart's smash to right. Deneau grabbed Rooney's fly. No runs, hits or errors.

Eighth Innings.

Brantford—Gero grounded to Tracey. Burns popped to Rooney. Nelson singled over Burne's head. Deneau fouled to Kelly. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Peterborough—King singled to centre. Fox sacrificed. Kelly was safe when Forgue let his roller go through, King scoring. Tracey hit into a double, Gero to Roth to Ivers. One run, one hit, one error.

Ninth Innings.

Brantford—Ivers singled to left. Taylor batted for Dolan and fanned. Roth flied to Stewart. Byrne made a beautiful stop of Forgue's bounder to wind up the game. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Summary—Struck out, by Tracey 5, by Gero 2; bases on balls, off Gero 3; left on bases, Peterborough 5, Brantford 6; double plays, King to Fox to Rooney, Gero to Roth to Ivers; sacrifice hits, Kelly 2, Fox Stewart, Welsh; wild pitch, Tracey; hit by pitcher, by Tracey 1 (Dolan). Time 1:20. Umpire, Freeman.

NOTES.

The Petes' hitting was timely.

Tracey pitched a fine game of ball.

The Brants' errors were costly, but the Petes earned more than enough runs to give them a victory.

Stark will likely pitch for Peterborough this afternoon, while Deneau will probably use his new pitcher Nicholls.

A. W. Clydesdale, of the Central Cigar Store, is offering a $5 pipe for the first home-run made here by a Peterborough player. The same store has a box of cigars for every home run by the Petes.

Game Will Be Played Over Again

A meeting of the Canadian League executive was held in Toronto yesterday. The matter of the protested game between Peterborough and Toronto was referred to a committee composed of Messrs. Stevely, Chantler and Nelson, who were appointed to deal with the protest, and after going into the matter it was decided to have the game replayed, the Peterborough club being awarded their share of the gate receipts of the day.

A change was made in the system of gate receipts and paying the visiting clubs. The old rain guarantee has been done away with, and from now out each club will be given a straight guarantee of $50 a game with the usual percentage privilege.

It is the intention to reduce the number of umpires to five. Six have been carried for some time, but fault was found with this, owing to the fact that Toronto and Ottawa were the only cities to enjoy the benefits of the double umpire system. This caused some dissatisfaction, and unless the other clubs are given a taste of the double system, a reduction will be made in the number of umpires carried.

The player limit caling for not more than 14 men to each team, exclusive of the manager, will be enforced, while the salary limit question was also aired to some extent. The president will keep close tab on all the clubs and hold the respective presidents responsible for any excesses.

A slight alteration of the schedule was necessary, caused by the Toronto Beavers not being able to open at home with St. Thomas until July 3. The changes were made as follows for July 2, but the regular schedule will be adherred to on July 3:

St. Thomas at Brantford.
London at Hamilton.
Toronto at Ottawa.
Peterborough at Erie.

WILCOX AND GORMAN ARE RELEASED

Utility player Wilcox and First-Baseman Jimmy Gorman were released by Manager Blount last night, the acquisition of Rooney and the probable coming of other players leaving no room for the two. Gorman has been a classy fielder, but has had hard luck in his hitting, which led to his losing his berth here. Wilcox has played some good ball for the Petes, but there was no place for him either in the outfield or inner defence with the other players going as they are.

STANDING IN FIVE LEAGUES

BASEBALL

Indianapolis of the Federal League had the most successful week of any club in the five leagues. Bill Phillips' Hoosiers went through the week without a defeat, winning six games. The lowly Naps did the next best work with four wins out of five games. St. Thomas showed the best in the Canadian League with five out of seven, and George Stallings' Braves showed the same record in the National, leading all towns in the older organizations. Newark, thanks to their three wins over the Leafs in the last two days, tops the international with five wins out of eight games. Toronto, after getting away to a good start, fell badly at Newark and were only able to break even on the week. Jersey City had a good week, ending it all right by taking four straight from the Bisons. The latter had evidently shot their bolt; they only won two games during the week, losing six. Baltimore, the league leaders, are low in the list, with three victories out of eight games. The Giants had a pretty good week, with four wins against two defeats. Athletics, with three out of seven, and Washington, with one out of seven put in a poor week for pennant aspirations. Providence had a busy seven days scoring runs, and tops all clubs in this respect with .630, Brooklyn of the National League, scored the least number, eleven.

'IT'S ALWAYS FAIR WEATHER'

"SUMMER is here — I'll save money by cutting out my advertising." Thus a few merchants still delude themselves. They thereby confess themselves beaten by the weather.

But most merchants, in these times of keen business, would scorn to make such a move. The more obstacles—whether in the form of weather conditions or other handicaps—the most earnestly they strive for our patronage.

For a merchant to cease advertising as soon as the weather is a little warm, is to take his "bark of trade" out of the channel of good business and beach it on the sands of business dullness to await "fair weather."

But with the modern type of merchant it is always fair weather. His is an "all-year-round" store—a store ever ready to serve you, and serve you well.

He is a believer in all-the-year-round advertising. He does not take his advertisement out of the newspaper the first day of warm weather. He knows you may be in the market for something he can sell you—in July as well as in January.

He invests his money in newspaper space—every week in the year—to let you know he can serve you—and it's safe to assume that he "has the goods" in the fullest sense of the phrase.

You can obtain helpful advice on advertising, free of cost and without obligation by consulting the Business Department of the EVENING EXAMINER.

Premier On Stump

Sir James Thanks People of Ontario for Sympathy

DEFENDS HIS GOVERNMENT

TORONTO, June 24—Spontaneous, intense, fervent and affectionate was the reception given to Sir James Whitney last night by a crowd of his admirers, who taxed the capacity of Massey Hall to the utmost. It was the Prime Minister's first public utterance since his recent illness, and his only appearance in the present provincial campaign. It was not a political gathering. It was, as Sir Adam Beck said, "a tribute to the man who has given the best of his life, yes, almost his life, for the people of Ontario."

Sir Adam Beck and Hon. I. B. Lucas made vigorous addresses.

Sir James at the opening of his address was greeted with long and insistent applause.

"I have just come here to-night to say that my health and strength being practically restored," he said, "I am ready and desirous of continuing the work in which I and my colleagues have been associated for the past ten years.

"Mr. Rowell is prepared to gamble for power on the condition of my health or ill-health," he declared. "He has said that the Conservatives never expected the Premier to recover."

"We have fulfilled every one of our pledges," said the Premier turning to the campaign issues. "We have carried out and performed all that we promised to do."

He referred to the university grant which he said had been increased four times, the agriculture grant swelled from $400,000 to a million.

"We have doubled the revenue, but we have not wronged anybody. We have not taken anything wrongfully but we have taken toll of the blessings which a kind Providence has laid on this country."

He complimented the Hydro-Electric act, who unchallenged by any in the world, he continued. The hydro success was not a matter of hope, but of fact. In time, under Sir Adam Beck, power would be taken to the very doors of the people on the farm. So with the railroads, which would gridiron the province.

Running quickly down the list of pledges fulfilled he came to the "gigantic scheme by which this maligned Government proposes to make 50,000 miles of good roads in Ontario." What did the province think of that? he asked.

The Premier then dealt with the liquor question, and gave the number of license reductions during the present regime, the Government amendments and their effect on the traffic.

He was vigorous in his denunciation of the participation in the fight of clergymen in the pulpits.

"We have kept our faith and I presume now, for the fourth or fifth time, as we have promised that this question will never be let out of our sight, but from time to time, as opportunities arise, we will be careful to settle them and develop them as far as possible."

"There are few clergymen who will fall into this trap in the province," he declared. "This is a free country, a British country, and a Christian country." They have no right to take these matters into the pulpit. They have a right to discuss them as all have. They have a legal right, but no moral right to take them into the pulpit and denounce as bad citizens and worse than those who do not agree with them.

Sir James discussed the question of bilingualism and assailed Mr. Rowell's position. Not a word had he said of bilingualism, as he was reported. Afraid likely to burn his fingers. In New Liskeard, however, he had said he would like to see his French-Canadian friends gain an education in their own language as well as in English.

Sir James then restated the Government's attitude in Rule 17.

The Premier's final word was a personal one to the people of Ontario.

"Before I conclude, I would like to express my gratitude for the kindness shown me during my illness. This kindness was shown by both Conservatives and Liberals alike. Coming back as I did, by God's mercy, from the shadow of the valley, I am more impressed than ever with what I owe to the people of this province. They have given me confidence in full measure, heaped up, pressed down, shaken together and running over. As long as my health holds good I will be at their disposal. With a heart full to overflowing, may God bless you every one."

Sir James took his seat amid a storm of applause.

"This is not a political meeting in the ordinary sense," said Hon. I. B. Lucas. "It is a reception to the Prime Minister. The thousands which throng the streets have come to welcome him out of respect for the work he has done for Ontario."

Sir Adam Beck dealt chiefly with the development of Hydro-Electric power. He said the previous Government had handed over the water power rights of the province to a group of exploiters and promoters, and not for the good of the people, and added that the public would have been a helpless community if the Whitney Government had not restored these rights. "It was a nice heritage left by the Ross Government which gave over these natural resources to private corporations," said Sir Adam. "Now we have to buy back these resources."

BABY COVERED WITH RASH

From Head to Foot. Itched and Burned. Disfiguring. Face and Arms Worst. Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment Cured.

Legere Corner, Moncton, N. B.—"When my baby was five months old he had a rash which used to trouble him very much. The rash was very bad and he was covered from head to foot. I got no rest day or night with him. It would itch and burn so much that he used to scratch till he used to bring the blood and then it would turn to a mattery sore which disfigured him. The worst was his face and arms.

"I tried a good many different salves and soaps but to no use; he got no better. But after a while I thought I would try Cuticura Soap and Ointment and had only used them two or three times when I saw a great change. The sores dried up and came off and he was cured." (Signed) Mrs. George French, May 26, 1913.

For pimples and blackheads the following is a most effective and economical treatment: Gently smear the affected parts with Cuticura Ointment, on the end of the finger, but do not rub. Wash off the Cuticura Ointment in five minutes with Cuticura Soap and hot water and continue bathing for some minutes. This treatment is best on rising and retiring. At other times use Cuticura Soap freely for the toilet and bath, to assist in preventing inflammation, irritation and clogging of the pores. Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold everywhere. For a liberal free sample of each, with 32-p. book, send postcard to Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Dept. D, Boston, U. S. A.

OTTAWA, June 24.—Judge MacTavish ruled yesterday that the four controllers who were unseated in the courts ten days ago, on the ground that they were illegally elected last January, must be re-elected by the electors and not by the City Council, as some legal authorities claimed was the proper way. The four controllers are: Dr. Rufus Parent, J. W. Nelson, E. P. McNeil and Joseph Kent.

Had No Power Over The Limbs

Locomotor Ataxia, Heart Trouble and Nervous Spells Yielded to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

It would be easy to tell you how Dr. Chase's Nerve Food cures locomotor ataxia and derangements of heart and nerves, but it may be more satisfactory to you to read this letter

Mrs. Thos. Allan, R.F.D. 8, Sombra, Ont., writes:—"Five years ago I suffered a complete breakdown, and frequently had palpitation of the heart. Since that illness I have had dizzy spells, had no power over my limbs (locomotor ataxia) and could not walk straight. At night I would have severe nervous spells, with heart palpitation, and would shake as though I had the ague. I felt improvement after using the first box of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and after continuing the treatment can now walk, eat and sleep well, have no nervous spells and do not require heart medicine. I have told several of my neighbours of the splendid results obtained from the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food."

NOTED IN CHURCH WORK

TORONTO, June 24. — The Hon. Samuel Hume Blake, K.C., distinguished lawyer, churchman and educationist, passed away early yesterday at his residence, 46 Maple avenue. Deceased was 79 years old and had been in poor health for the past few months. His family were, therefore, notified and remained at the bedside until the end.

The late Mr. Blake was a brother of the late Hon. Edward Blake, M.P., and was senior member of the legal firm of Blake, Lash, Anglin & Cassels.

The funeral will take place on Thursday afternoon, following a service at St. Paul's Church at 3.30 o'clock. The interment will be private, and the family have made a request that no flowers be sent.

Born in Toronto in 1835, S. H. Blake was educated at Upper Canada College and Toronto University, graduating in 1856. Two years later he became a barrister and took silk in 1873. Almost immediately he was called to the Bench and was Vice-Chancellor of Ontario until 1881, when he resigned and resumed general practice. He had the respect of the entire Bar of Ontario, and had filled most of the offices of honor in their gift.

HON. S. H. BLAKE, K.C.

His chief joy in life, outside of his profession, was the English Church. He was truly a religious man, upright, and uncompromising as the Puritans, and with a passion for the modified Ritual of the low branch of the church. He had no sympathy with the Oxford movement.

All his life he had been a Sunday school teacher and it was a rare privilege to listen to his clear and masterly exposition of Holy Scripture. He was one of the founders of Wycliffe College, has been president of the International Sunday School Convention, of the Toronto Y. M. C. A., and of the Laymen's Missionary Movement. Proud of his church, proud of his creed, determined, vigorous, broad-minded and supremely intellectual, he was beyond question the most eminent layman of the Anglican communion, and one of the most eminent Christians of this country.

Of late years the most spectacular legal cases in which he was engaged was the Gamey trial, when he held a brief for the Provincial Conservative party, in opposition to Mr. E. F. B. Johnston, K.C.

Mr. Blake was twice married. His first wife was the daughter of the late Bishop Crouvn, of London, and his second, Miss Baird, of Teffonte.

STOMACH TROUBLES DUE TO ACIDITY

SO SAYS EMINENT SPECIALIST.

So-called stomach troubles, such as indigestion, wind, stomach-ache and inability to retain food, are in probably nine cases out of ten simply evidence that fermentation is taking place in the food contents of the stomach causing the formation of gas and acids. Wind distends the stomach, and causes that full, oppressive feeling sometimes known as heartburn, while the acid irritates and inflames the delicate lining of the stomach. The trouble lies entirely in the fermenting food. Such fermentation is unnatural, and acid formation is not only unnatural, but may involve most serious consequences if not corrected. To stop or prevent fermentation of the food contents of the stomach and to neutralize the acid and render it bland and harmless, a teaspoonful of bisurated magnesia, probably the best and most effective corrector of acid stomach known, should be taken in a quarter of a glass of hot or cold water immediately after eating, or whenever wind or acidity is felt. This stops the fermentation, and neutralizes the acidity in a few moments. Fermentation, wind and acidity are dangerous and unnecessary. Stop or prevent them by the use of a proper antacid, such as bisurated magnesia, which can be obtained from any druggist and thus enable the stomach to do its work properly without being hindered by poisonous gas and dangerous acids. CAN'T DODGE ISSUE

Fight is "Liquor vs. Christianity," Says Mr. Rowell

BIG RALLY AT STRATFORD

STRATFORD, June 24—Mr. N. W. Rowell, the Liberal leader, addressed a crowded meeting of electors of North Perth in the Opera House here last night.

Mr. Rowell, who was cheered on rising to speak, declared that the Government thought they could trifle with the temperance sentiment of Conservatives in the province, that they could get the support of the liquor interests and yet expect their Conservative friends to stand by them. "All honor to the thousands of Temperance Conservatives in this province," remarked Mr. Rowell, "that they refused to fall in with such an alliance and placed patriotism above partisanship in this contest. The Government has dissolved and called for an election, but we have made the issue."

MR. N. W. ROWELL.

Concluding his address, Mr. Rowell declared: "I say to the man who believes that the bar is a curse, and yet who, for the sake of party, votes to retain the bar, that he must carry in his conscience to his dying day his share of responsibility for every home blighted, every life blasted, every child ruined by the continued existence of the open bar.

"You cannot dodge the issue. The liquor traffic is lined up on one side, with all the resources it can command. Organized Christianity is lined up on the other. You must go to the polls and vote for one of the other. Now is your chance. Will you be patriots and Christians, and rise up and smite the traffic? If so, the 29th of June will mark the death signal of every open bar in the Province of Ontario?"

COMPROMISE HINTED AT.

Amending Bill Next Government's Last Work on Home Rule.

LONDON, June 24.—The crisis in connection with the deadlock in regard to the granting of Home Rule to Ireland entered another stage yesterday when the Marquis of Crewe, Liberal leader in the House of Lords, introduced a bill to amend the Irish Home Rule bill.

The terms of the amending bill are identical with those offered on March 9 by Premier Asquith and contemptuously refused by Sir Edward Carson, the Irish Unionist leader, who described the Premier's proposal as a "hypocritical sham."

By the new bill the Parliamentary electors of each county in Ulster are to be allowed to decide by vote whether the county shall be excluded from the provisions of the Home Rule bill for a period of six years from the first meeting of the new Irish Parliament.

The situation has never been paralleled in Parliamentary procedure in the British Isles. Never before has a bill been presented to Parliament to amend a measure not yet on the statute book. This was, however, the only means of overcoming the deadlock, as the House of Lords refused to consider the main bill until the full proposals of the Government were before it.

The Marquis of Crewe made it quite clear, however, that the amending bill was not necessarily the Government's last word. "The bill gives the widest possible latitude for an amendment," he said, and he explained that under it the civil government in the excluded areas would be administered by the Lord Lieutenant through officers to be appointed by him.

The Marquis of Lansdowne expressed relief that the Government had at last realized the necessity of making some effort to avert an imminent danger. He wished he could add that its contributions yesterday had met the need for fundamental changes in the Irish Home Rule bill which alone could make it workable.

"THE TERMS OF SURRENDER"

By Louis Tracy

Power's brain was on fire as he read; but his heart seemed to be in the clutch of an icy hand. For some minutes — he never subsequently knew how long the trance lasted—he was transported bodily to the shores of a sunlit lake, and he lived again through the frenzy of those first hours after Nancy's disappearance. When his senses came back, and his blazing eyes could discern the written word, he read and reread those parts of the letter which breathed her secret. Then, with the listless despair of a man who realizes that the new sanctuary of hope and self-confidence which he had constructed with so much blind faith, to which he had given so many laborious years, was tumbling in ruins at his feet, he opened the second letter, which was somewhat bulky, and crackled under his touch. From the middle of the folded sheet he took a withered spray of white heather. Had it been a poisonous snake he could not have started more violently. There was no doubting either its origin or significance. He held in his shaking hands the very spray which Nancy carried at her wedding, and she had sent it as a token that all was at an end between them. He was minded then and there to commit the whole pile of correspondence to destroing flames; but he was well aware that such a coward's trick would prove of no avail. Strive as he might, he could never expel from his breast the blighting knowledge lodged there now and forever. Those shrunken and faded strands of heather were typical of his own life. Not all the alchemies of wisandry or miracles of science could restore their bri[illegible] hues. They were dead, and sh[illegible] slowly into dust. No shower [illegible] Heaven could freshen them, no kindly care quicken them into vitality. They were dead, and he was dead, a mere dried-up husk of a man, a banned creature, to whom hope and faith and the bright vision of a new career were ruthlessly forbidden.

At last, thinking he might as well learn the scorching truth in its entirety, he turned to the letter.

It was undated; but the post mark was eloquent, and it began with strange abruptness:

"So, then, Derry, you have cast me off, left me to die; for I shall die within a month, or less. Well, be it so. If such is the woman's lot, of what avail to cry aloud to Heaven that it is unjust? But, if ever you come to realize what tortures I have endured while waiting in vain for the answer that never arrived, surely you will pity me. I, once so full of the joy of life, am humbled to the dust. Your departure from Bison—for my constant friend MacGonigal has told me of your going—robbed me of my last frail refuge. Some day, perhaps, you will read these farewell words of the woman who loved you, who still loves you, who will love you to the end, whose last prayer will be for you and not for herself. Oh, Derry, it will be hard to pass int o the everlasting night, knowing that you and I shall never meet again on this side of the grave, but harder still to deliver into the keeping of one whom I loathe the living memory of my brief happiness. It may not be so. My child and I may go out into the darkness together; but I dare not petition the Most High for that crowning mercy. Have I really done wrong? I cannot decide, but grope blindly for guidance. If I am judged, it will be by One who looks into the heart, and will treat an erring woman with divine compassion as well as justice. But you, if you ever see what I am setting down here, and I am convinced that you will, even though I be long dead—what of you? My heart aches for you. Can I give you any message of healing and solace? Yes, one. If my child lives—ah, it is better to think that the mother's eyes will be glazing in death when they see her babe!—I charge you with a sacred responsibility. What do I mean? I cannot tell you. I am fey to-day. I peter into a dim future. I only know that I shall not survive my little one's birth, and that some day, somehow, you will understand that which is hidden from my ken in laying this duty upon you. And that will be some consolation. Do you remember how I used to hate that word 'duty'? Yet it is stronger than I. It compels me, even now.

"Farewell Derry. I kiss you in a waking dream. No matter what the world has in store for you—though some other fair woman may quicken into life because of you—though men may honour your name and exalt you to the highest places—you will never forget the girl you once held dear. As a souvenir, I shall send you all that is left of the bunch of white heather which formed my wedding bouquet. Did you see it that day when you hid on the ledge, and watched the triumphal start of a journey which has led me into such strange places and is now to end so soon? We never spoke of it when we passed the long, sunny hours by the lake! Would that its bright waters had closed over my head then; for I was so happy, and so much in love with you and the world! But I knew what happened on that June day in the Gulch, for I could read your soul mirrored in your eyes; so now I give you one final memento, and hug the belief that you will press it to your lips. My poor secret dies with me, perhaps. I don't imagine that the man whom I used to revere as a father will satisfy an unfathomable spite by denying my child the tending and luxury it will receive in Hugh Marten's care. I could write reams of a woman's sad longings, of explanations that would lead nowhere; but I dare not trust even you, else you would deem me mad. And I am not mad, only woebegone and fearful, for the night cometh, and I shudder at its silence and mystery. So, once more, and for the last time, farewell, my dear. I take you in my arms. I cling to you, even in death."

Te unhappy man wilted under that piteous leave-taking. He felt that he had descended into a tomb, and was listening to a voice speaking in dread tones. The thick curtains of despair closed over his soul, and he seemed to be falling into an abyss. He heard himself uttering a broken wail of protest; for it was borne in on him that Nancy's heart-rending message had riveted close against the fetters he thought to have left behind forever amid the dun recesses of the Andes. What remained in life for him? What could there be of happiness and content, with the dire conviction lodged immovably in heart and brain that Nancy, like his mother, had died because of his wrong-doing? He was caught in some furious and fatal maelstrom which, like that fabled whirlpool of the North Sea, was sweeping him, in ever-narrowing circles, to irresistible doom. The marvel is that his mind did not give way; but a merciful release was not to be vouchsafed in that manner, for the fantastic laughter of lunacy would have been kinder than the blackness of darkness which now enwrapped his being. In that hour of abasement his spirit capitulated. Nothing mattered. He was crushed and paralyzed. He could not pray, because it did not seem as though there was One who gave heed. The bright world had become a place of skulls, a charnel house, a prison whose iron walls were closing in on him eternally.

It was a strange thing that he did not, even as a passing obsession, think of terminating the dreary pilgrimage of life then and there. At Bison, during the first stupor of grief after his mother's death and Nancy's desertion, he had pondered, many a time, the awful problem which ever presents itself to men of strong will and resolute purpose. When life appears to be no longer worth living the question arises—why not end it? But seven years of lonely musing had given depth and solidity to his nature. Above all, he had been taught to endure. He had come now to a worse pass than any that pierced the Andes; for an unending desert lay in front, while he was leaving a fair territory in which lay domestic joys and a love for which his soul hungered. In that moment when union with Marguerite Sinclair was forbidden so sternly he guaged with woeful accuracy the extent of his longing for her companionship. He understood, with a certainty of judgment that brooked no counter argument, that he could never marry. He dared not. If that which Nancy had said was true, he would surely kill himself in a paroxym of loathing and self-accusation when any other woman's kiss was still hot on his lips.

There remained a task not to be shirked—he must ascertain, beyond doubt, that Nancy was reall dead. Gathering the four letters in whose yellowing sheets was summarized the whole story of his wasted life, he placed them in a pocketbook. In doing so, he happened to touch the case containing the ring he had bought for Meg. Oddly enough, that simple incident cost him the sharpest pang; but he conquered his emotions, much as a man might do who was facing unavoidable death, and even forced his trembling fingers to put the envelope which held Nancy's white heather side by side with Marguerite's diamonds. Then he went out.

An old-time acquaintance in Denver the ways of journalism led him to the nearest newspaper office. There he asked to be taken to the news editor's room, and a busy man looked at him curiously when he explained that he wanted to know whether or not M. Marten, wife of Hugh Marten, was living, and, if dead, the date of her demise.

There was something in Power's manner that puzzled the journalist, some hint of tragedy and immeasurable loss, but he was courteously explicit.

"You mean Hugh Marten, the financier, formerly of Colorado?" he inquired.

"Yes, that is the man."

The other took a volume from a shelf of biographies, by which is meant the newspaper variety—typed accounts of notable people still living, together with newspaper cuttings referring to recent events in their careers. Soon he had a pencil on an entry.

"Yes," he said. "Mrs. Marten has been dead nearly seven years."

MRS. THOMSON TELLS WOMEN

How She Was Helped During Change of Life by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Philadelphia, Pa.—"I am just 52 years of age and during Change of Life I suffered for six years terribly. I tried several doctors but none seemed to give me any relief. Every month the pains were intense in both sides, and made me so weak that I had to go to bed. At last a friend recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to me and I tried it at once and found much relief. After that I had no pains at all and could do my housework and shopping the same as always. For years I have praised Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for what it has done for me, and shall always recommend it as a woman's friend. You are at liberty to use my letter in any way."—Mrs. THOMSON, 649 W. Russell St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Change of Life is one of the most critical periods of a woman's existence. Women everywhere should remember that there is no other remedy known to carry women so successfully through this trying period as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential), Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

Why She Left.

With some families a flitting, if not quite an everyday affair, is at any rate an annual event, but it is different in the country, where most folks give up their houses only when leaving the village (or the earth). It was, therefore, a surprise to a country house owner whose house was to let to receive an application from a woman who had had another house in the same village for some years. Terms were considered suitable and the bargain was being fixed up when the landlord asked her what was wrong with her present home. "Oh," was the reply, "I've nae fau't to fin' wi' the house at a'. It's rale comfortable, an' I'm sweer to leave it, but ye ken I've never paid ony rent." She is still house hunting.—Glasgow News.

A Personage.

She loomed big in the eye of the public and occupied no inconsiderable space in the community.

Weighed in the balance, she was never found wanting nor could any accuse her of lightness.

Her husband declared that she was altogether too much for him.

Her banker found in her a woman of substance.

Her pastor deemed her a well rounded character.

Her admirers called her a great lady.

And the women all called her fat.—Lippincott's.

Children's Eyes.

It is not at all uncommon to consider a child stupid, blame him for lack of interest in his studies, or even to punish him for outbursts of temper, when defective vision is the only cause. Medical inspection of school children has shown that 15 per cent are suffering from bad eyesight, undiscovered until the school doctor calls it to the attention of the parents.—Woman's Home Companion.

Spoiled His Appetite.

"Every bit of food on this table," said the serving lady to Lamson as he sat down to eat at the church supper, "was cooked by your wife."

"Oh, I don't mind," rejoined Lamson faintly. "I'm not a bit hungry, anyway!"—New York Times.

Russia's Forests.

Russia has 404,500,000 acres of forest. That is to say, more than one-third of the whole country is covered by trees, and there are four acres of forest to every inhabitant.

All In His Head.

Instructor—Mr. Smith, kindly name the bones of the skull. Student Smith—Well, sir, I've got them all in my head, but I can't think of their names just now.

He who has once done you a kindness will be more ready to do you another than he whom you yourself have obliged.—Holmes.

Much Pain From Kidney Disease

Doctored in Vain Until Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills Were Used.

Kidney derangements are often associated with disorders of the liver and bowels, and under these conditions ordinary kidney medicines usually fail to effect cure. It is because of their unique, combined action on the liver, kidneys and bowels that Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are so generally successful, even in the most complicated cases.

Mr. Emanuel Bernard, farmer, St. Paul's, Kent County, N.B., writes:—"About eighteen years ago my wife was bad with kidney disease, and suffered greatly from headaches, pains in bowels and stomach, and her heart was affected. For a year she was treated by her doctor, with no apparent benefit. She then used five boxes of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills with most satisfactory results. This gave us such a good opinion of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills that we always keep them in the house to be used for all derangements of the kidneys, liver and bowels." BRITISH M.P.'S SPEECHES.

How They Are Preserved In Classic Westminster.

With the regularity of the morning milk a neat, gray covered booklet of the speeches of M.P.'s on the previous night is delivered to the London home of every member of Parliament. This is the official report of the proceedings of the House of Commons. The workmanship of this valuable booklet is perhaps the best of all the vast multitude of Parliamentary publications. It represents, says E. A. J., in The Daily Citizen, the output of an army of reporters, typists, compositors, proofreaders, machinists and bookbinders. An editor, an assistant editor, and no fewer than twelve reporters—perhaps the finest shorthand writers in the United Kingdom—participate in the production of this official report. When, after prayers—a few minutes before three in the afternoon—the gallery doors are unlocked to the press, a couple of men step into the two Hansard boxes. One takes notes till three, and then his colleague taps him on the shoulder and takes up the note-taking. From quarter past ten till the normal hour for adjournment—eleven or half-past—no man is in the box for more than five minutes.

At the end of each turn the reporter goes down to the typists' room. Here a staff of typists awaits the shorthand writer, and in one of the sound proof cubicles he dictates his notes. The typewritten MS., having been carefully corrected, is presented to the assistant editor, who, in an editorial sense, puts everything into apple pie order, and reduces the copy off to the printers. Away in the city the copy, arriving in numerous batches, is eagerly "devoured" by the compositors, and the type having been corrected and made up into royal octave pages the copies are struck off, bound in gray covers, and distributed, a postoffice van, by special arrangement, calling at the printers at six in the morning. Members are allowed to correct errors of their own or slips of the reporter, but they are prohibited from making any alterations which would give a different turn to the spoken words. These necessary revisions are made before the daily editions are bound into the bulky volumes which fill the shelves of the members' reading room and other resorts of reference.

A CRIPPLE FROM RHEUMATISM

Tortured Four Years Until He Took "Fruit-a-tives"

ENGLEHURN, Ont., May 21st, 1913.

"Your "Fruit-a-tives" cured me of Rheumatism. It was the only medicine that made any impression on me. I was a terrible sufferer from Rheumatism. I was laid up for four winters with Sciatica and Muscular Rheumatism, and was a cripple completely, not being able to do anything. I doctored with four different physicians, but they did not help me. Other advertised remedies were equally unsatisfactory, and I have taken several.

Some neighbor of mine told me that "Fruit-a-tives" helped him, and I took them faithfully every day and the result was marvellous. For over two years now, I have been free from any Rheumatic pains whatever, and give "Fruit-a-tives" the full credit for making a remarkable cure".

W. T. RACHER

If you are subject to Rheumatic Attacks, Sciatica, Lumbago or Neuralgia, take "Fruit-a-tives" right now and start the permanent cure which "Fruit-a-tives" will complete if taken faithfully. 50c a Box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c. At dealers or sent on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

A Great Fighter Dead.

A great Maori fighter recently passed away in New Zealand in the person of Tuta Nihoniho, who was a chief of the Ngati-Porou tribe, and who fought on the British side during the Maori war, and especially in the disturbances caused by the notorious Te Kooti, greatly distinguishing himself in several engagements. For his services he was thanked by the Government, awarded the New Zealand war medal, and presented with a sword of honor. He was for several years captain of the Ngati-Porou Native Rifles. For some years prior to his death the late chief, who was an authority on Maori carving and antiquities, was engaged collecting specimens throughout the Dominion for the Dominion Museum, and through his influence many samples of carving and precious greenstone, which would otherwise have been lost, were secured. As a fighting man, Tuta's reputation extended all over the North Island, and by European officers with whom he served he was held in great esteem.

Pyjamas For Ulstermen.

There seems to be a danger of the Ulster volunteer movement being covered with ridicule. Somebody happens to suggest that pyjamas would be needed by the volunteers in the case of active operations. No sooner was the suggestion made than dozens of Dorcas societies and ladies in London and Ireland set to work making pyjamas for all they were worth. Consequently a veritable plague of pyjamas has descended on the headquarters of the Ulster Defence League. "I never knew," remarked a prominent member of the league in the British House the other day, "how skillful ladies were in the making of pyjamas. Already we have one pair for every volunteer, and still they come." As emblems of patriotism these pyjamas should be much treasured.

Nailing a Lie.

There is a traditional anecdote of Richard Baxter which was very popularly current many years ago in the west of England. Richard Baxter was born at Rowtown, in Shropshire, in 1615. When he lost his wife he published, for the edification of other Mops Nonconformists, a "broad sheet," headed, "Last Words of Mrs. Baxter." This "broad sheet" had an immense sale, and the printer very shortly afterward brought out a second and spurious "broad sheet," headed "More Last Words of Mrs. Baxter." Richard Baxter, unable to endure this, then issued a small handbill, with the concise assertion, "Mrs. Baxter did not say anything else."

Varieties of Housefies.

In a book on flies as spreaders of disease, Dr. G. S. Graham-Smith of Cambridge University gives a list of eighteen species of bewitching flies that frequent our houses. Of these the commonest is the Musca domestica or ordinary housefly, which is from 80 to 90 per cent. of the fly population of the house. It is the most dangerous also.

In His Line.

"I'm surprised that you should be so interested in watching those silly dudes."

"Force of habit, I guess. I'm president of a real estate improvement company."

"Well?"

"Well, they're a vacant lot."

Work.

To speak or write Nature did not peremptorily order thee; but to work, she did.—Carlyle.

Etruscan Vases.

The famous Etruscan vases were wrongly named, for, though made in Etruria, they were the productions of Greek genius. They are elegant in form and enriched with bands of beautiful foliage and other ornaments, figures and similar objects of a highly artistic character. One class has black figures and ornaments on a red ground—the natural color of the clay; another has the figures of the natural color and the ground painted black. The former class belong to a date about 600 B. C., the latter date about a century later and extend over a period of some 300 or 350 years.

Tobacco in France.

Twenty great factories work up the whole of the tobacco manufactured in France, and the right to retail is jealously guarded by the state. Permits to open tobacco shops are usually granted to widows of officers of the army and navy or of other employees of the government.—London Telegraph.

DOWRIES FOR GIRLS.

Britain Has Several Bequests To Provide For Maidens.

At different times thoughtful people have stipulated in their wills that a certain sum of money shall be set aside to provide dowries for girls. The best-known example is the Bute Marriage Dowry, established by a Marquess of Bute, who left $5,000 for the purpose. The annual interest upon this money, about $750, is presented each year to a claimant for it, the fortunate girl being chosen by the Mayor of Cardiff. When handing the money over to the lucky young lady and her sweetheart, it is customary for the mayor to read the young couple a portion of the second chapter of St. John, which refers to the marriage in Cana of Galilee.

Dowries for girls are also presented at Guildford, the practice of throwing dice for what is called the "maid's money" taking place annually. The money is derived from capital set apart in the will of a certain John How, who requested that dowries should be paid to poor servant girls who had worked faithfully in the borough for some years. John How was presumably an opponent of public-houses, for he stipulated that no maid working in licensed premises should be eligible to compete. The gift generally amounts to $60 per annum.

St. Cyrus, in Scotland, also distributes dowries, but they are rather peculiar ones. Sixty years ago a native of the village died, and decreed in his will that the interest on a certain sum of money should be distributed amongst the oldest, youngest, tallest, and shortest ladies to get married in the parish during the year.

The somewhat unenviable task of deciding which ladies can claim the various distinctions is left to the minister. Notwithstanding the smallness of the dowries—they amount to $30 each—there is keen competition amongst all the brides of the year, no reluctance to claim the oldest bride's share being shown. "Bride-measuring day" is looked upon as a public holiday in St. Cyrus.

Another curious ceremony takes place every year in the German town of Hachmann. The founder, a Polish nobleman, hoped to render the plain girl's chance of getting married equal to her pretty sister. He left $2,500 to be distributed annually amongst brides of the town, stipulating that plain girls should receive a large portion, whilst pretty girls should get hardly anything.

He Got His Knighthood.

G. W. E. Russell has a story of a British member of Parliament whom he calls Mr. Thomas Titmouse, approaching the chief whip of his party for a knighthood. He was told he had not earned it. Next year he repeated the request and explained. He had a few years before met and proposed to a delightful woman with a large fortune, and to strengthen his suit told her his public services entitled him to feel confident of the reward of knighthood. Attracted by the prospect of becoming "My Lady," she consented. But now the wife had begun to enquire when the knighthood was coming. In short, the member's domestic happiness was at stake.

The whip conveyed this artless tale to the Prime Minister, whose reply Mr. Russell quotes as follows: "Under the circumstances which you so feelingly describe, I will recommend Mr. Titmouse for a knighthood, as it seems to be the only way of making Mrs. Titmouse a lady. I only regret that there is no honor in the gift of the crown which could possibly make Mr. Titmouse a gentleman."

Check these Colds in the Head with FOSSAL BALM

As you know, "catching a cold" simply means allowing the germs to a cold to catch you.

Usually these germs, which abound wherever people congregate, gain their first foothold in the nose—[illegible] ing the nasal membrane. Here they multiply if unchecked, and quickly set up an inflammation. Then follows that smarting, burning, stuffed up, "headachy" feeling—that cold in the head that is so depressing and so likely to develop into something more serious.

Fossal Balm gets right to the spot, kills the germs and checks the cold. Fossal Balm is an antiseptic, healing ointment, put up in a collapsible tube with a long, nozzle-shaped opening. This little nozzle, inserted in the nostril, carries the Fossal Balm well up into the passage, where it quickly spreads over the inflamed membrane, and kills the germs that are causing the trouble, soothes the irritation, clears the passages, and gives grateful and lasting relief.

Get a 50c tube of Fossal Balm from your Druggist or write for it direct to us. National Drug & Chemical Co. of Canada, Limited, Montreal. 4

A Great Race.

Two globe trotters met in the smoking room of a hotel. They found that they had once spent a week in China, on the strength of which they proceeded to "weigh up" that country to their mutual admiration and satisfaction.

From that the talk drifted to sporting events witnessed in different parts of the world.

"While I was in Australia," said No. 1, "I saw what I imagined to be the closest race in the world. The winning horse only beat the second by a tongue's length."

No. 2 seemed lost in thought. He gazed abstractedly out of the window. At last he spoke:

"I have seen a closer race than that," he murmured. "I was once in Scotland."—London Answers.

Rammed by a Shark.

The strangest shark story which ever came to the writer's ears was of a shark that charged a steamer. This was in Queen Charlotte's sound, and an account of the incident appeared in a Vancouver paper. The captain of the steamer, which was a small craft of only fifty tons or so, saw the shark on the surface on the port bow and could not resist the temptation of taking a shot at it with his rifle. He hit his mark, whereupon the monster, said to have been fully twenty feet in length, deliberately charged the steamer. The boat quivered from stem to stern, and the captain said afterward that it was like striking a rock. After this display of temper Master Shark had had enough of it and sank out of sight.—T. C. Bridges in Chambers' Journal.

Study Your Moods.

People ruled by the mood of gloom attract to them gloomy things. The hopeful, confident and cheerful attract the elements of success. A man's front or back yard will advertise that man's ruling mood in the way it is kept. A woman at home shows her state of mind in her dress. A slattern advertises the ruling mood of hopelessness, carelessness and lack of system. Rags, tatters and dirt are always in the mind before being on the body. The thought that is most put out brings its corresponding visible element to crystallise about you as surely and literally as the visible bit of copper in solution attracts to it the invisible copper in that solution. Every thought of yours has a literal value to you in every possible way. In whatever mood you set your mind does your spirit receive of unseen substance in correspondence with that mood.—Prentice Mulford.

Plain John Smith.

In Latin it is Johannes Smithus; the Italian smooths it off into Giovanni Smithi; the Spaniards render it Juan Smithus; the Dutchmen adopts it as Hans Schmidt; the French flatten it out into Jean Smeet, and the Russian sneezes and barks Jonioff Smittowski. When John Smith gets into the tea trade in Canton he becomes Jovan Shimmit; if he clambers about Mount Hecla the Icelanders say he is Jahne Smithson; if he trades among the Tuscaroras he becomes Ton Qa Smittis; in Poland he is known as Ivan Schmittiweiski; should he wander among the Welsh mountains they talk of Jihon Schmidd; when he goes to Mexico he is booked as Jontl F'Smitti; if of classic turn and he lingers among Greek ruins he turns to Ion Smiktin, and in Turkey he is utterly disguised as Yos Sost.

To Prevent Bubonic.

The plague staff in the Punjab, India, have been making experiments in rat destruction by means of slow-burning squibs containing fumes and smoke-producing combustibles, such as potassium chlorate, potassium nitrate, sulphur, neem leaves, etc. The experiments have so far given very promising results, a specially interesting and important feature being that the fumes have been proved to kill rat fleas coming in contact with them in less than 30 seconds, and probably almost instantaneously.

Queen Mary's Flag.

A strange flag fluttered from the flagpole over Buckingham Palace while the King was at Newmarket the other week, and on examination it was found that the Queen had exercised her right to fly her own flag from the palace during the King's absence. It is a combination of the Royal Standard and the Queen's family arms. In doing this Queen Mary is following the example of Queen Alexandra, to whom King Edward accorded the right of having a flag of her own.

Tipping the Attache.

A good story of the younger days of Sir Herbert E. H. Jerningham is told in The London Mail. As an attache and feeling very pleased with himself, as he records, he was once told that he was wanted in the anteroom of our embassy at Paris. There an old man addressed him as a "clerk" and demanded a passport to Russia. When he received it he handed Sir Herbert half a crown, saying: "It's for you, you knew. I know what clerks are. Bless you, they do like an occasional tip."

An Absolute Vacuum.

What would seem to be an absolute vacuum may be produced in an extremely simple manner. There is employed a test tube (a tube of glass closed at one end), which in this particular case must be composed of a kind of glass that melts only at a very high temperature. Into the tube is poured molten glass of another kind which melts at a comparatively low temperature. When the latter has cooled, thus forming a solid mass completely filling the tube, a suction pump is attached to the open end of the tube, and heat is then applied until the softer glass inside is again melted. The next step is to withdraw the molten glass by means of the pump, enough being left to close the end of the tube completely, when it is allowed to cool once more. As no air can enter the space left vacant by the withdrawal of the molten mass, a perfect vacuum, it is believed, is produced there.—St. Louis Republic.

TIRED-OUT KIDNEYS

Kidney troubles are so frightfully common because the kidneys are so easily upset by overwork or excesses of eating and drinking. Cure is effected not by whipping them on to some weak effort but by awakening the action of liver and bowels by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. This rests the kidneys and makes them well. Backache and urinary disorders then disappear.

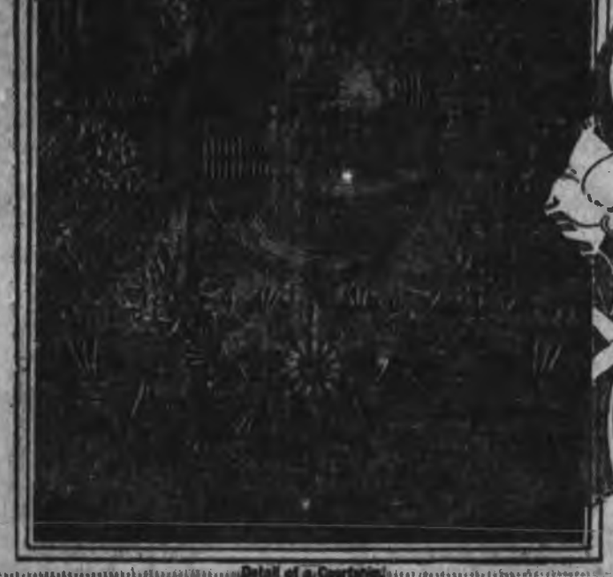
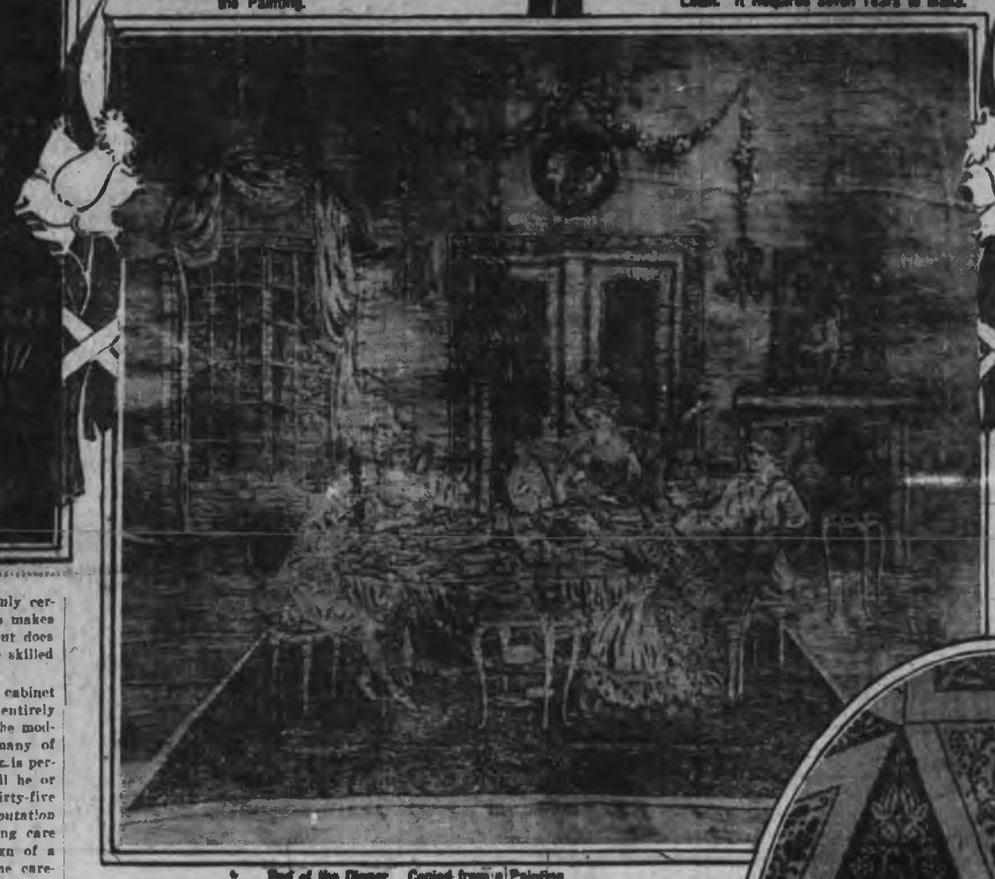
La Veille D'Iena. A Faithful Reproduction of the Painting.

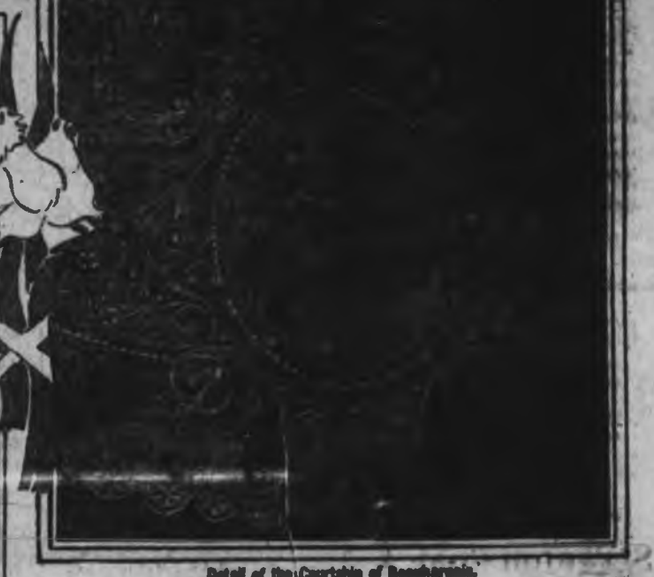
The Taking of Marbella. A Solid Panel of Linen. It Required Seven Years to Make.



Detail of a Courtship.



End of the Dinner. Copied from a Painting



Detail of the Courtship of Beauharnais.

A COLLECTION of exquisite laces and embroideries, which is valued at $100,000, has recently passed from the ownership of the firm of Lord & Taylor to that of Dr John Adriance, of Williamstown, Mass. Dr. Adriance has up to this time figured not as a collector of precious webs and works of art wrought in fine linen, but as a lecturer in chemistry attached to Williams College, the college of his family throughout several generations.

Dr. Williams will store his newly acquired masterpieces of needlework in his handsome house at Williamstown, which is situated in the midst of a magnificent estate of more than 100 acres. The pieces are all of a quality entitling them to inclusion in a museum and it is possible that they may later on become a part of some museum exhibition.

Mr. John D. Welfley, head of the linen department of Lord & Taylor, of New York, is responsible for the bringing together of the fifty rare pieces which compose what is now tow be known as the Adriance collection." Mr. Welfley conceived the idea of assembling pieces of unusual merit for display in the linen department of his firm about seven years ago. To obtain these pieces he has ransacked the world with the help of six able lieutenants, who from time to time, as their business called them to different parts of Europe where the arts of lace making and embroidery have been pursued for several generations, have discovered pieces whose perfection warranted their purchase for the collection.

There are both antique and modern laces and embroideries in the collection. Bedspreads, table cloths, scarfs, centre pieces, pillow covers, a fan, panels and many small pieces originally intended for use on the table, but too precious because of their exquisite workmanship to be anything but cabinet treasures, are included in the list.

Among the pieces are those of rose point, Venetian point, Italian filet, Italian Valenciennes used with other laces and embroidery, Catalonia embroidery, flat Venetian, Duchesse, Richelieu work, mosaic work, Fayal embroidery and fine French, German and Aplnsell embroideries. The pieces come principally from Belgium, France, Germany, Italy, Switzerland, Spain and Austria.

Each piece is a masterwork of its kind and represents the highest skill and the greatest degree of artistic talent which can be expended on work of this sort. Each piece is a work of slow time which grew tiny bit by tiny bit under the patient hands of its maker. There is probably not a piece in the collection which took less than a year to make, and many of them took all the time of five or six workers for a much longer period than that. It is probable that the largest and most valuable piece of the collection known as the Amechetta required all the time of five or six persons for not less than ten years.

In the old days, when this beautiful lace making and embroidery was first started and when humanitarianism was less widespread, the workers or their employers took no thought of the strain on the eyes occasioned by constant application of this sort, and the eyes were often permanently injured. To-day lace makers are permitted to work only certain hours of certain days. This makes a piece longer in the working, but does much to save the eyesight of the skilled craftsmen.

So necessary is it that these cabinet laces and embroideries shall be entirely free from imperfections that in the modern establishment from which many of the modern pieces came no worker is permitted to help with a piece until he or she has attained the age of thirty-five years and has acquired a reputation for skilfulness and never flagging care in the carrying out of the design of a piece. One stitch set wrong, one careless moment, might impair the perfection of the work and, although beyond the detection of the average onlooker, might render the piece faulty in the eyes of the expert.

History and romance are intertwined with every thread of the wonderful work. The majority of the antique pieces were made for some great occasion, usually to figure as a very lovely wedding gift for a royal or noble bride. One of the handsomest of the pieces is an antique lace bedspread which a nobleman presented to his daughter as a part of her dowry in the year 1700.

The spread is a particularly handsome example of lace work of the period. The entire border surrounding the cloth is of flat Venetian lace. The spread contains more than 100 metres of lace. Milan point, rococo, Italian Valenciennes and Venise laces are used in the spread. There are very few museums of Europe that contain so rare an example in such a state of preservation as this old piece.

In wonderfully carved chests these precious pieces were stored away, scented with rose or violet petals or with the more pungent lavender. They figured, some of them at royal nuptials when the King himself set his foot over the threshold of some favored great one, and my lady of the castle hastened to display her finest to the eyes both her lord and her royal master. Some of them passed the years in conventual seclusion, wrought perhaps by the hand of a sad nun who faded quietly from youth to age as she set the delicate stitches of their quaint traceries. Some of them were fashioned into that one-time potent instrument of coquetry, the fan, and formed a fascinating shield for bright eyes, eclipsed in momentary confusion, or wafted delicately scented breezes in the direction of a bewildered cavalier.

The "Amechetta," a very large piece, is copied from a mural decoration now in the Berlin Museum. The section of wall on which the design appears came from the palace of Sultan Abdul Hamid in Constantinople, and was presented by this monarch to the Emperor of Germany at the time of the Emperor's visit to Turkey.

In order that the design might be photographed for use by the embroiderers, it was necessary to obtain special permission from the royal owner and to give a written guarantee that the design would not be reproduced on stone or wood.

Many of the pieces deserve to be called needlework paintings. The use of various kinds of stitches has enabled the worker to obtain an astonishing variety of light and shade and to produce an illusion of different coloring, which is marvellous in a work wrought entirely in the ivory white of linen thread. The general effect of many of these fine pieces is much akin to that of fine ivory carvings in low relief. The designs are wrought with solidity as well as delicacy, and it seems scarcely possible that such results should be attained by so tiny an instrument as the needle in patient, unswerving human hands.

The "Taking of Marbella" is one of the most marvellous pieces in the collection. It is one solid piece of linen, but at first glance the inexpert onlooker believes it to be inset with lace. Parts of it which closely resemble lace are of the most exquisite drawn work. The piece took seven years in the making. A patient statistician has ascertained that there are 480 holes to the square inch. Careful study of the piece reveals a mass of exquisite detail, which goes to make up the large design. The groundwork is entirely of fine drawn work, against which the turretted gate of the city stands out in low relief. A company of knights, mounted, are without the gates, engaged in the attack. In the corner of this piece is worked the Spanish coat of arms.

"The Dawn of Iena" is a faithful reproduction in needlework of the painting of the same name. It shows Napoleon on horseback with a beautiful little goosegirl surrounded by her charges pointing the way. The background of the picture shows a wood, an old farm house and a windmill.

"Le Souper Fini" is an elaborate piece of needlework whose design is copied from the original painting by Morreau. The supper table is elaborately set forth in a gorgeous room, whose beautiful carved doors, charming fireplace, window drapery and candelabra are represented in the minutest detail. Six diners, three cavaliers and three beautiful women of the period are at supper. The vivacity of the poses, the remarkable expression on the faces and the perfection with which all the various fabrics included in the magnificent toilettes of both men and women have been represented by various stitches make this piece one of the most valuable of the collection and one which repays hours of study by revealing new beauties in every inch of its surface.

"The Courtship of Beauharnais", is another series, including four tablets showing the proposal, the acceptance, the first meeting and Beauharnais meditating. Designs for other pieces have been drawn from the "Hunt of Cupid," scenes from "Lohengrin" and "La Boheme," Napoleon's poses, the four seasons, Columbus and George Washington.

In the antique pieces the design was frequently wrought directly upon the linen without a drawing to follow. The modern method is usually to photograph a painting whose design is suitable for the purpose, and to use this photograph as the basis for a drawing from which the embroidery is to be made. Sometimes the embroiderer is also enough of an artist in design to make the working drawing from the photograph, but there are also special draughtsmen employed especially for this work.

Pieces of such worth and beauty as those of the Adriance collection are preserved and displayed at the same time by the use of glass frames in which the embroidery or piece of lace is stretched as is a canvas in a picture frame. They are sometimes also kept in cabinets so that they may be taken out and examined at first hand, but they are rarely or never put to any sort of practical use, for they are regarded as precious works of art whose beauty entitles them to the same care as that which is expended on valuable paintings.

Auction Bridge.

By Prospero.

ABOUT a month ago I quoted from a [illegible] English newspaper on "American Auction Leads" and their pernicious influence. They were justly condemned as retarding the healthy development of the game.

In the meantime several correspondents have asked and invited expression of opinion on these very points. High spades and conventional calls, preemptive bids, are the burden. In particular a letter signed "Mr. and Mrs. H., Highland Park, Philadelphia," comes closely to the subject. "We bridge devotees are decidedly on side of your simplified progression of bidding, also to omit honor count. We are seriously studying the negative no trumpers, which on every trial reveal new possibilities. They assure a fair balancing of forces, bringing luck and skill nearer to each other.

An analysis of the so-called spade conventions is in preparation. For to-day a few remarks on the declarations that primarily intend to cut off or shut out all other bids.

The name of auction implies competition—the obtaining of a certain object at the lowest possible effort or expense. It is not and does not mean an invitation for single proposals, the highest of which, after comparison, receives the award. A shut-out bid would answer this latter purpose, but hardly is in compliance with the sense and meaning of an auction. Such a bid might possess academical or theoretical merit. Judged on principles carried into practice it cannot be upheld.

Auction bridge has to remain identified with progressive declarations. Discussions pro and con may continue. Instances may be adduced where preemptive bids preferred the next signal victories. Still, I should plead, such instances are exceptional. A rule for action must be based on general, not on exceptional happenings.

The main feature of auction is formed by the bidding for the game in the choosing of the trump, thereby differing from bridge and their common ancestor, whist. But rational bidding signifies the incurring of a contract at the least amount of risk, not at the highest. If a bid of one diamond would stand, the opposition not being inclined to go better, why should you voluntarily burden yourself with a contract of three odd? Taking three odd at diamonds you score 3x7=21 whether your original bid was one diamond or three. You assumed a contract of three-odd, where one odd had sufficed for the same returns. A higher risk for results no better. Had the adversaries succeeded in taking five tracks, at one diamond you would have been safe; at three yep are set. Where lies your benefit? In case the other side held cards to go better than three diamonds depend on it you could not have scared them. At the same time your partner might have wished to put in his oar—he was shut out also. Silencing your partner you peremptorily exclude him from that co-operation which forms the most fascinating part of the game—hands working together in the bidding as well as in the play.

Presumptive bids must be high, otherwise they fail of their purpose. Thence, the bidder may overreach himself and invite disaster. Moreover, if your hand be of such texture that an unusual initiatory bid seem opportune, you are safe to conclude it might be classed as a freak hand. But one abnormal hand can be only a part of an abnormal deal, in which bids out of the ordinary should be expected. Is it likely a high shutout bid will avail?

Among the records of plays I find two in particular which in a distinct way punctuate (I was tempted to write "puncture"), pre-emptive bidding. They deserve to be called odd; perhaps not more so than many deals that happen without the distinction of being recorded.

Score:—A B one game in and 250 ahead in penalties. Second game, love all.

Bidding: Z with strong hearts, intends to shut out all bids from opposition, and declares 4 hearts. His plan succeeds, but in play he is not, taking but 3 odd.

Readers are requested to send answers, other bids, or other ways of bidding, that promise better.

Score:—Rubber game, A B 500 ahead above line.

First deal.

Z is the dealer.

The two hands Y and Z only are given.

Supply the remaining 26 cards to A and B, and judge whether the actual bidding was correct or not.

Z commenced to shut out all other bids with 2 royals.

A by.

Y, considering his cards invincible, and not united with partner Z's royals, goes to 7 clubs. It effectually cuts off all other bids. How could Y be set?

B double.

Z by.

A by.

Y re-double.

On the play, Y Z are set—forfeit 200 to A B. The placing of the cards in A B, the reasoning of B to double, of Y in re-doubling—these are questions to be answered to

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

CLEMENTINE'S SILENT PRAYER

"Letter for you, Clem," shrilled Alvira as she poked the missive through the bars of the post office window, "Lawyer's letter."

As the alert little form disappeared from view the postmistress turned to her assistant.

"Another lawyer collecting letter," she explained. "Clem Dilley's business is tottering to ruin.

"If village folks would only trade with Miss Dilley instead of going way over to Bayport she might make a living," vouchsafed Josie Ricks.

"Clem Dilley couldn't keep up a stock that would satisfy Long River folks," retorted Alvira.

There was to be a remarkable change in Clementine Dilley's affairs if she read the lawyer's letter aright. It read, in part:

Dear Madam,—I have a client who is anxious to invest some surplus funds in a small but lucrative business, and after investigation I am authorised to make you the following offer, viz., My client to put $5,000 into a partnership with you, you to manage the dry goods business, and the partnership to be a silent one. My client believes that there will be a good opening for a profitable business that has financial backing."

Three days after Clementine Dilley's return from New York there was a sensation in Long River. Waggon after waggon stopped before the door of the little shop and unloaded great boxes of dry goods.

Frm that day Clementine Dilley's business flurished mightily. Dozens of people who had always traded in Bayport, 18 miles distant, drove up to Clementine's door and made their purchases there.

Clementine was very happy on that day when she went down to New York and presented her books for Mr. Day's inspection. She was doing a splendid business, and the lawyer said he was sure that his client would have no cause to regret his investment.

Clementine often wondered about tion.
the mysterious partner whose money enabled her to prop up a crumbling business.

When he heard that Clementine Dilley was making money "hand over fist," Deacon Marberry dropped into Clementine's store and asked for collar buttons. It happened to be the noon hour and Clementine was alone.

"Clem," he said hurriedly, "the Scripture says 'tain't good for man to be alone."

"I expect that's why dogs were created—and cats—and parrots," returned Clem tartly.

"Yes—yes—yes!" returned the deacon impatiently, and then warily he added: "I don't reckon you can guess who your silent partner is, Clementine, can you?"

Clementine was startled for a moment. There could be no mistaking the deacon's meaning.

But she stiffened her neck coldly.

"I might guess, Deacon Marberry," she said.

"He ain't a thousand miles away from where I be standing this minute," went on the deacon craftily.

"I don't see him," said Clementime curtly. And she was glad when a customer came in and the deacon was compelled to take his departure.

It was after six o'clock that same evening, when Clementine was about to lock the door after the last clerk, when there came heavy footsteps on the porch and the great form of Captain Tommy Lisk, who used to call on her once a week in the long, long ago. That was just before David Marsh had come to town. After that Clementine had not had eyes for anyone save David.

"How's business?" pursued the captain genially.

"Very good," replied Clementine.

"What can I do for you, captain?"

"I say, Clementine Diley, I'll bet you can't guess who your silent partner is," he said jokingly.

"I might," said Clementine dryly.

"He ain't a thousand miles from where I'm standing," said the captain significantly, with a mysterious wink of his blue eyes.

"The old sinners!" laughed Clementine as she put out the lights in the store. Her mind went back to her one brief romance of a few months, the hurried departure of David Marsh to assume his father's responsibilities in caring for a mother and several young children and then gradual drifting of romance out of her lift.

When she opened the door and found David Marsh waiting for her in her cosy sitting-room, Clementine Dilley discovered in a splendid rush of joy that romance was not dead after all. David Marsh was a little chnged, a little grey and worn, but still the fine, upstanding lover of her youth.

It was nine o'clock, and the little group around the stove in Pinney's grocery stil llingered, loath to go out into the cold.

Deacon Hen Marberry was winding a red muffler around his stringy neck and barking sharp retorts at Captain Tomy Lisk.

"What if I did stop in to buy some collar buttons of Clementine Dilley?" he cried angrily. "If you knew who Clem Dilley's silent partner was you'd say he had some right to buy there!"

Captain Lisk stared incredulously.

"If you knew who Clem Dilley's partner was you'd never speak up like that to me, Hen Marberry. I'll venture to say that Clem Dilley's going to marry her silent partner, and hes standing not a thousand 'miles from where I be this minute!"

"Right you are!" said a deep voice from the doorway, where a tall, dark man was observing the scene with visible amusement. "Miss Dilley's partner is standing right here, Captain Lisk, and when you say she's going to marry her partner you're right again. ought to know, because 'm David Marsh, and 'm the man!"

WAS TROUBLED WITH BOILS AND CARBUNCLES.

There is no more frequent source of illness than that arising from bad blood, for when the blood becomes impure, it is only natural that boils, pimples or some other indication of bad blood should break out of the system.

Boils in themselves are not a dangerous trouble, but still at the same time are very painful, and the only way to get rid of them is to cleanse the blood of the impurities. Cleanse it thoroughly by the use of Burdock Blood Bitters, that old and rqliable blood medicine that has been on the market for nearly forty years.

Mr. James Wilds, Plaster Rock, N.B., writes:—"I was greatly troubled, a few years ago, with boils and carbuncles, and the doctor told me I was in a bad condition. My appetite failed me, I began to lose strength, and was pretty well run down when one of my friends recommended Burdock Blood Bitters. After using three bottles I began to feel like another man. My troubles soon left me, and to-day I can certainly give Burdock Blood Bitters a high recommendation to my friends."

A WARNING TO POETS.

In Which the Stern Demands of Justice Cause a Vacancy in the Ranks

All Bagdad was there to hear the caliph pronounce sentence, not because the caliph was a capital pronouncer, but because the prisoner's crime had been heinous. The convicted man was a poet who had written some verse to the caliph's thirty-eighth daughter, thereby meriting a sentence equal to the offense.

Hushed was the courtroom as the poet-prisoner, shaking from fright, was led in. Stately was the caliph as he passed this sentence upon the guilty one:

"Prisoner, under the Editorannean law, which says 'the caliph regrets—great poem of available matter—and so forth,' I might sentence you to join your contributions in the wastebasket. Again, I could send you to the galleys, there to wear our your life awaiting release.

"But no! Such trifling punishments are too light for you—you are accustomed to them.

"Prisoner"—here the caliph's face grew graver and his auditors leaned forward—"prisoner, I sentence you to live, clothe yourself and be happy on the proceeds of jokes you must make and sell. Furthermore, you are not to accept any money other than that derived from the sale of your jokes."

At the close of this terrible pronouncement the prisoner staggered, raised his hand above his head and fell at the caliph's feet—dead.—New York Times.

Wartime Wit.

"Throughout the siege of Paris," says Ernest A. Vizetelly in his book, "My Days of Adventure," "the so called meat pour rire was never lost sight of." Thus:

"When horseflesh became more or less our daily provender many Parisian bourgeois found their health failing. 'What is the matter, my dearest?' Mme. du Bois du Pont inquired of her husband when he had collapsed one evening after dinner. 'Oh, it is nothing, mon amie,' he replied, 'but I used to think myself a better horseman!'"

Then there was the soldier whose age was conveniently elastic:

"When Trochu issued a decree incorporating all national guards under forty-five years of age in the marching battalions for duty outside the city one of these guards on being asked how old he was replied, 'Six and forty.' 'How is that?' he was asked. 'A few weeks ago you told everybody that you were only thirty-six.' 'Quite true,' rejoined the other, 'but what with rampart duty, demonstrating at the Hotel de Ville, short rations and the cold weather, I feel quite ten years older than I formerly did.'"

Homely and Proud of It.

Frankly, I know I am not a handsome man, and equally frankly, I acknowledge that I don't want to be a handsome man. As a matter of personal confession I may say that I have not a single misgiving about my face, which is one of those "homely"—I use the word in the American sense—straightforward, rugged, hewn out of a rock and then stamped upon by a steam roller sort of countenances which command the admiration of all fortunate enough to have caught sight of it—once. I write "once" because I heard a nervous woman remark as I came out of the stage door of the Gaiety one night that if ever she saw a face like mind again she would never go to the theater—she wouldn't be able to. In raucous tones she said that a second shock like that would be too much for her weak heart and delicate state of health.

But I am not jealous of handsome men—not a bit of it. Beauty forsooth! It should be a drug on the market.—Edmund Payne in London Strand Magazine.

It is Well.

It is well to carefully cultivate tastes. Ruskin says, "Tell me what you like and I will tell you what you are."

It is well to study human character. Sodenstadt says: "In the face of every human being his history stands plainly written; his innermost nature steps forth to the light. Yet they are the fewest who can read and understand."

It is well to "brush up against the world." Goethe says: "Talent forms itself in secret, character in the great current of the world."

It is well to be never cast down. Elizabeth Barrett Browning says:

Let no one till his death
Be called unhappy. Measure not the work
Until the day's out and the labor done.

Wingless Victory.

Aunt Dinah was a colored saint in Charleston, who could shout above the entire congregation. It was the custom during the collection to sing "Fly abroad, thou mighty gospel," and Aunt Dinah always threw back her head, shut her eyes and sang away lustily till the plate was returned to the altar.

Deacon Alphronius Green, noting this, stopped when he reached her pew one Sunday and said:

"Look a-heah, Dinah! What use you a-singing 'Fly abroad, thou mighty gawspel,' of you ain't give nothin' to make hab fly?"—New York Post.

The Footpath to Peace.

To be glad of life because it gives you the chance to love and to work and to play, to be satisfied with your possessions, but not contented with yourself until you have made the best of them; to despise nothing in the world except falsehood and meanness, to fear nothing except cowardice, to covet nothing that is your neighbor's except his kindness of heart and gentleness of manners and to spend as much time as you can, with body and with spirit, in God's out of doors—these are little guideposts on the footpath to peace.—Henry van Dyke.

Didn't Want to Learn.

"I do not love you," said the young woman, who knew her own mind.

"But," persisted the wrong man, "couldn't you learn to love me?"

"No," she replied. "I have learned a good many difficult things, but they have always been things that I wanted to learn."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Complicated Courtesies.

"I tried to apologize to my wife," said Mr. Meekton, "but it was awfully confusing."

"Why?"

"Every time I tried to say anything she insisted on saluting back, word for word."—Washington Star.

SETS HAY ALIGHT.

Four-Year-Old Boy Perishes and Mother Is Burned.

TORONTO, June 24.—Four-year-old Tommy Taylor of 163 Shanley street, was burned to death and his mother badly burned in attempting a rescue, in a fire which destroyed the stables of R. G. Bainbridge of 165 Shanley street at 2ve o'clock yesterday afternoon. According to the information in the hands of the police the unfortunate child, along with another, lighted some hay in a stable. The child was unable to climb back to safety and was almost instantly suffocated by the flames which immediately shot to the roof of the stable.

Mrs. Taylor saw the flames almost immediately and rushed to the stable to rescue her child, but her efforts were in vain.

STOPS STOMACH PAINS
IN TWO MINUTES

The recent discovery by a leading specialist that pure bisurated magnesia will almost instantly relieve pains in the stomach resulting from indigestion, dyspepsia or acidity, is of the greatest importance to thousands of people suffering from various forms of stomach trouble. As is well-known, nine-tenths of all the stomach disorders are directly traceable to stomach acidity. One to two teaspoonfuls taken in a little water after meals not only neutralizes the acid and stops the pain but quickly overcomes the cause of the trouble, soothes the inflamed lining of the stomach and in a short time will correct the cause. Be sure to ask your druggist to supply you with bisurated magnesia.

POSTAL CLERKS ANGRY.

Parisian Staff Barricades Office and Resists the Police.

PARIS, June 24. — Excitement among employes of the Central Postoffice at the Senate's delay in passing a measure which would improve their working conditions, led to an amazing demonstration when the office closed last evening. The disorder was anticipated and 500 police had been assembled, but the postmen suddenly appeared in the windows of the upper floor and bombarded the police with stones until several of them were stretched out unconscious on the ground. Meanwhile other postmen unharnessed the horses from the vans which were about to take out the mails for delivery, and the courtyard gateway was barricaded by a heavy postal van. The police freed the gates, whereupon the postmen barricaded themselves in the postoffice, which they held against the police, and where they detained many sacks of mails which ought to be delivered in Paris during the evening. The postmen also announced their intention of preventing the departure of the provincial mails. It is estimated that at least a million postal packets are being detained by the besieged postmen.

Empress Inquiry Is Now Approaching Its End.

QUEBEC, June 24.—The Empress of Ireland wreck enquiry continues to draw out interesting information. It is expected that evidence other than that of the experts will be concluded to-day. With a day devoted to this testimony, and another day or two devoted to the addresses of counsel, the investigation is expected to be closed by Saturday.

Edward Gosseboon, the diver who lost his life at the wreck, had his story told by W. G. Weatherspoon, the salvage expert who has charge of the work of getting the bullion out of the vessel. Gosseboon found that the Empress is pointing northeast, is lying in 15 to 20 feet of mud, and rests on her side, and is 75 feet below the surface. He believes she can be raised.

Capt. Walsh of the C. P. R. denied that officers were promoted for making rapid voyages.

Lord Mersey conversed with Mr. Haight over the latter's anxiety to find out if Adelard Bernier, the pilot of the Empresses, was always chosen for this work, asking when Mr. Haight found out that Bernier was an interested party, and saying that he himself always scrutinised the evidence of such witnesses carefully for bias. Lord Mersey told Mr. Haight that if this was true, it applied with equal force to each Storstad witness.

Alfred Tuftenes, first officer of the Storstad, produced memoranda from Montreal on the movements of the collier and the condition of the weather prior to the collision, but they added nothing to the particulars in the scrap log book.

FIRED ON MINERS.

One Man Killed In Riot In Butte, Montana.

BUTTE, Mont, June 24.—Violence broke out anew last night in the struggle between factions of the Butte Miners' Union and three men were shot, one of them being killed by the fusillade fired by deputy sheriffs in clearing Union Hall.

An attempt has been made to dynamite Miners' Hall, but the charge failed to do any great amount of damage. The explosion could be heard for blocks.

Armed men preceded to the Stewart Mine and boldly carried down boxes of dynamite in the attempt to blow up the hall, but the guns of deputies prevented effective placing of the charge.

Charles H. Moyer, president of the Western Federation of Miners, and other officers of the union who were to address a peace meeting in the hall, fled through the rear door of the auditorium when the shooting began.

Broken by The Tango

By MARJORIE CLOUGH

From the time when I came to be old enough to think of marriage I looked upon it in a Hindoo way. I didn't say when I was grown I'd be a teacher or a lawyer or anything like that. I said I was going to be married and live in a nice, cozy house and thought of my dolls as real children.

When I was eighteen years old my father died and left me little or nothing. It looked very much like my being forced from the domestic life I had laid out for myself when a child. Will Isham and I were spoons, but Will was such an easy going fellow that he didn't fill my ideas of a husband at all. What I wanted was a strong character, who would make up my mind for me, relieving me of forming decisions, which I always disliked. Will was an amiable chap, and I was very fond of him, but it seemed to me that we were too much alike.

I was hesitating between Will and stenography—Will was perfectly able to take care of me—when Warren Robbins came along. It seemed to me that Mr. Robbins was just the man I wanted. It was not long before he proposed to me, and I accepted him at once.

I confess it seemed very nice to have some one to obey. There are two divisions of mankind and womankind in these days. I may call them pleasurites and nonpleasurites. Formerly the pleasurites played cards and the nonpleasurites didn't. Now the pleasurites dance the modern dances and the nonpleasurites are shocked thereat. I found very soon that I was a pleasurite and Warren was a nonpleasurite. I became infatuated with the tango. Warren declared that any woman who danced the tango was not the wife he should like to marry.

We hadn't been long engaged before Warren made this known to me, and I felt called upon to defer to his wishes. Somehow this particular deference was not pleasant. I didn't see why I shouldn't dance the tango so long as I danced it properly. Warren argued that I could not always rely on finding a partner who would dance it properly with me and that, the tendency of such dances being bad, by dancing it I was encouraging vice. I told him that I didn't agree with him and should dance the tango.

Warren was somewhat surprised at this and reminded me that I wished to follow a leader. To this I replied that in the tango the man guided the woman's steps.

You should have seen the look he gave me. "That's the most brilliant bit of logic I ever heard," he said. "It's worthy of Archbishop Whately, who wrote a book on categorical sylogisms and other points pertaining to the subject. If he heard it he would turn over in his grave."

"I don't see anything the matter with it or the tango either," I replied with some curtness.

"It's about like the clinging vine and the sturdy oak. A flagpole set up near the oak, the vine unclings from the oak and clings to the flagpole."

"The vine wouldn't do that unless the ants had got in under the oak's bark and rotted the trunk."

"Perceiving that your logic and your similes are altogether beyond my poor intelligence, I bid you good evening."

I didn't feel very good over this. Somehow I felt that, irrespective of the morality or immorality of the tango, in dancing it despite my fiance's wishes I was not following out that for which I had agreed to marry him. While I was thinking about it I was called to the phone. Will Isham was at the other end. Will and I were good friends. We had simply not matched, that was all.

"Do you go to the —— ball tonight?" he asked.

"No. Warren doesn't approve of these modern dances, and just now the old ones are not danced. He won't take me."

"Do you suppose he would let you go with me?"

"Let me?"

"Yes. Haven't you said you were going to marry for the purpose of having a master?"

"I'll go with you."

"Thanks awfully! I'll call for you at 9."

When 9 o'clock came I was dressed in a new ball costume just come in and waiting in the drawing room when who should call but Warren. He had come to make up, but when he saw my clinging skirt and my decollet waist, with only a little lace over one shoulder, he forgot all about what he had come for and began to abuse my costume.

"Looks like an elegantly folded sheet," he said sarcastically, "only the sheet must have been taken from a crib."

I flared up at this and gave him such a tongue lashing that while about it I didn't notice the entrance of Will Isham. When I did notice him he was grinning like the cat that ate the canary.

Warren left me, slamming the door behind him. I went right out with Will, got into the carriage, and we were driven to the ball.

What a softening influence there is in the tango! It made me forget the disagreeable episode.

I have engaged myself to Will. He says he always wished to cling to a woman, and I'm just the woman he prefers to cling to.

Alaskan Earthquake.

FAIRBANKS, Alaska, June 24.—An earthquake which lasted fifty seconds, accompanied by a rumbling like thunder, occurred here.

VOTE FOR ME

LONDON'S VARIED LIFE.

Scenes at Covent Garden Market and the River.

Covent Garden at 6 a.m.

Babel itself never heard such a confusion of tongues. The stranger may well be forgiven if he thinks perchance he has been whisked away by a magic carpet to some foreign clime. Cosmopolitan London surely is seen at its best here. Lumbering carts, piled up with every class of merchandise, roll up in an endless stream to the confused jangle of any and every kind of tongue, and dispose of their goods in a motley pile. Smiling dark-hued faces showing a row of pearly teeth juggle with huge baskets each filled with the fruit if their native land. Tree-bred Cockneys with a strange mixture of slang and "English as She is Spoken," which can never be described, yell strange cries to each other, drivers of the various wagons, each with a peculiar bread accent that proclaims his birthplace before he has spoken a dozen words, all go to the formation of such a group as can only be seen here.

Merry faced wenches, typical London flower girls, with a saucy tongue and quick wit, spread their sweet-smelling wares to catch the eye of the early comer and stand shoulder to shoulder with the sharp-faced hawker with his heavily-laden barrow hitched to a plump little "moke."

South, over Waterloo Bridge, can be found a wonderful array of second-hand shops, where a man can purchase anything from a silk hat to a toothpick. Old clo' shops with a marvellous display of every kind of garment that was ever made from Solomon's time to the present day, presided over by the wily Hebrew, who will entice you into the dismal depths of his gloomy shop and explain the merits of each garment.

Did you ever hear tell of "Wapping old Stairs" down 'midst the "Pool?" No? Here is found yet another scene altogether of kaleidoscopic London. Large bulky figures abound here that live in sou'-wester and oil skins. They get their precarious living on the bread and muddy bosom of old Father Thames. Here are to be found the homes of a great number of the lightermen, whose lives are spent on board those lumbering scows and barges that pass up and down like gaunt shadows in the night. Up as far as Kingston and down to Sheerness they ply their trade, huge unwieldy hulks, and yet many a man has been born aboard one of these floating homes. Yes, and died there, too, and many a wee face rocked in the arms of a white-faced woman, that looks out over the surging tide, bemoans the loss of a father and husband. But the busy crowd goes its way, and little knows of these lives that are spent on the watery highway of commerce.

Wander down one of those dim lighted streets at night, and watch as one-hand tho tall chimneys belching forth clouds of dense black smoke; on the other, here and there a ruddy glow shows, lighting up in a ghostly fashion the swirling waters on the other, while across the gloom comes the cry of "Heave yo he" of the watermen.

Curious Old Laws.

Some of the old laws of Nepal, India, were curious. Killing cows ranked with murder as a capital offense, for instance. Every girl at birth was married with great ceremony to a betel fruit, which was then cast into a sacred stream. As the fate of the fruit was uncertain the girl was supposed never to become a widow. To obtain divorce from a husband a wife had only to place a betel nut under his pillow and depart. In Nepal the day is considered to begin when it is light enough to count the tiles on the roof or to distinguish the hairs on a man's hand against the sky.—Westminster Gazette.

Kaffir's New Use For Waistcoats.

The Kaffir boy's way with a waistcoat is described by Dudley Kidd in his book, "The Essential Kaffir." First, he tried to put his head through one of the armholes, but finally, finding that impossible even with the help of pushing from the rear by his little brother, he wore the waistcoat as trousers, thrusting his legs trough the holes and buttoning it up behind. A piece of green string as braces completes the outfit.

THACKERAY.

He Was a Humorist But Failed of Being a Prophet.

Nothing need be said here of Thackeray's place in English literature, which is discussed by all the critics. In any case, he is one of the most characteristic writers of the first half of the Victorian period. His personal character is indicated by his life. "He had many fine qualities," wrote Carlyle to Monckton Milnes upon his death; "no guile or malice against any mortal; a big manly of a soul, but not strong in proportion; a beautiful vein of genius lay struggling about him—Poor Thackeray, adieu, adieu!"

Thackeray's weakness meant the excess of sensibility of a strongly artistic temperament, which in his youth led him into extravagance and too easy compliance with the follies of young men of his class. In later years it produced some foibles the more visible to his contemporaries because he seeks to have been at once singularly frank in revealing his feelings to congenial friends, and reticent or sarcastic to less congenial strangers. His constitutional indolence and the ironical view of life which made him a humorist disqualified him from being a prophet after the fashion of Carlyle.

The author of "a novel without a hero" was not a "hero-worshipper." But the estimate of his moral and intellectual force will be increased by a fair view of his life. If naturally indolent, he worked most energetic and under most trying conditions through many years full of sorrow and discouragement. The loss of his fortune and the ruin of his domestic happiness stimulated him to sustained and vigorous efforts. He worked, as he was bound to work, for money, and took his place frankly as a literary drudge.

He slowly forced his way to the front, helping his comrades liberally whenever occasion offered. Trollope only confirms the general testimony by a story of his ready generosity. He kept all his old friends; he was most affectionate to his mother, and made a home for her in later years; and he was the tenderest and most devoted of fathers. His "social success" never distracted him from his home duties, and he found his chief happiness in his domestic affections. The superficial weakness might appear in society, and a man with so keen an eye for the weakness of others naturally roused some resentment.

But the moral upon which Thackeray loved to insist in his writings gives also the secret which ennobled his life. A contemplation of the ordinary ambitions led him to emphasize the "vanity of vanities," and his keen perception of human weaknesses showed him the seamy side of much that passes for heroic. But to him the really valuable element of life was in the simple and tender affections which do not flourish in the world.

During his gallant struggle against difficulties he emphasized the satirical vein which is embodied with his greatest power in "Barry Lyndon" and "Vanity Fair." As success came he could give freer play to the gentler emotions which animate "Esmond," "The Newcomes," and "The Round-about Papers," and in which he found the chief happiness of his own career.—Leslie Stephen (Dictionary of National Biography.)

Lord Kitchener's Influence.

While driving one day in Egypt, Lord Kitchener noticed an old man in the street whom he recognized as an acquaintance from the Sudan. The Consul-General ordered the driver to stop, and invited the old man to take a seat in the carriage. So the two drove together through the town to the place to which the Sudanese wanted to go.

A few days later the dark friend of Lord Kitchener was seen hovering about the British Agency. At last an officer asked him what he wanted.

"I should so much like to drive out with Lord Kitchener once more," the old man replied.

"Why?" the officer asked.

"You see," the Sudanese answered, naively, "after my friends and acquaintances saw me sitting at the side of Lord Kitchener, they came to me one after the other, and from one I received five pounds, from another two pounds, from others one pound, and forty piastres from the very poorest. They all believe that I could speak in their favor to El Lord. And," the old man added, "I should very much like to see that happen all over again."

LAKEHURST MEETING WAS VERY ENCOURAGING

Mr. G. A. Gillespie Made Fine Speech Last Night--Assisted by Mr. George Leader and Mr. O'Connell.

ARE AGAINST THE BAR

Mr. G. A. Gillespie held a fine meeting at Lakehurst last night. The candidate himself made the best speech of his campaign and entered fully into the consideration of the Rowell policy. He was asisted by Mr. George Leader and Mr. D. O'Connell. The attendance at the meeting was most encouraging and the presence of a number of ladies added a touch that has been a new feature in this campaign in the country.

Mr. Gillespie made clear his position on the temperance question, stating that he would not only support legislation aimed at the closing of licensed clubs, shops and bars, but would also support legislation to wipe out the residue of the traffic in the province. The Rowell candidate told of the big convention of advertising men in Toronto this week, whose principal object is the bringing of complete honesty into business and particularly the business of advertising. The idea strikes a higher note in the business field. His sincerity in advocating the wishes of the temperance people of the province has rallied the temperance forces to him. Among them have been prominent clergymen throughout the entire province and at least six of the candidates in the Rowell ranks are clergymen.

There is the spirit of human uplift in the election, and it is uniting all those who recognize the broad duty of service. Mr. Gillespie stated that the assistance of the clergy and of the temperance workers had been of the greatest encouragement to him. He had gone into the campaign on the abolish the bar issue because it had been a question upon which the people had expressed their convictions. The requests of many to enter the contest had prevailed upon him and the assistance of temperance workers had been most welcome.

Mr. George Leader mad a strong appeal for the support of the temperance issue. He admitted he was a Conservative and had taken a prominent part at the nomination of Mr. Soden, but afterwards when the Conservative candidate had refused to sign ap romise to give his support to the temperance question Mr. Leader said he could not remain with the party. Mr. Soden had wavered in his avowed temperance support. In short, Mr. Leader intimated that Mr. Soden could not expect the support of the temperance people when he refused to pledge them his support of advanced legislation.

Mr. Leader made a strong plea for unity on the part of temperance people on Monday next, and for active influence up to that time. He went into the history of the question, and he spoke of its great importance for the future welfare of the province.

Mr. Leader had no excuses to make for his difference of opinion with his party on the temperance issue. He referred briefly to this situation as a matter of regret on his part. But as a strong advocate of temperance he could not consistently support a man who did not clearly define his position. Mr. Rowell had left no doubt as to what he would do, and Mr. Gillespie made an unqualified promise that he would stand for the whole platform as desired by temperance people.

All Literature: Was Distributed

The officers of the local Board of Trade received a hurry call to-day from their representatives at the Ad. Club convention that is in progress in Toronto now, for more literature advertising Peterborough. This is a very gratifying indication of the success of the "Peterborough Booth" at the Convention. It was feared at first by the officers of the Board of Trade, who have supervised the equipment of the booth, advertising this City, that it would be a difficult proposition to interest the convention in the Peterborough exhibits. They have found, however, just exactly the opposite to be the case, with the result that the officers not now in Toronto in charge of the booth are skirmishing for as much extra literature as possible. The pamphlets given by the Board of Trade are brightly illustrated ones, describing the industrial, commercial and social davantages of the City, and one pamphlet was made up especially for distribution at the convention by Messrs. Basil Hall, Jack McNabb, E. N. McWilliams, Jas. Hamilton and A. N. Allison.

STEAMER AND FERRY BOAT IN COLLISION

3000 People on Two Craft But Panic is Averted and Vessels Reach Shore Safely

FORTY ARE INJURED

Special to The Examiner.

NEW YORK, N.Y., June 24. — Crashing together in a dense fog in the Hudson river the Steamer Taurus and the ferry boat, Red Bank, met this morning. There was suggestion of panic, but quick work by the officers reassured all. On the two boats there were three thousand passengers. Fortunately the damage was above the water line and both reached safety. Forty people were seriously hurt in the shock of the collision.

AUTO OWNERS ARE APPEALED TO

Lacrosse Club Goes to Norwood on Friday and the Railway Schedule is Inconvenient

Owing to the inconvenient railway communication with Norwood, the Peterborough Lacrosse Club makes an appeal to automobile owners to transport the team to the eastern village on Friday of this week. Two cars are already available and two or three others will be sufficient for the team. The distance can be covered in an hour of easy running and the return to the City made in good time. If there are any car owners who can spare Friday afternoon and will come with the team, their kindness will be greatly appreciated. The team is going nicely. The boys are giving the game every attention. It is purely amateur and everything promises that they will win the district. If car owners who are willing to help the team will call the Examiner this evening or to-morrow morning their assistance will be a big help on this occasion. The cars would not be needed until after three o'clock, as the game does not begin until about six. The run can be made in an hour.

BAD FIRE IN HARDWARE STORE

Special to The Examiner:

MANCHESTER, N.H., June 24.—With the loss of nearly a million dollars and serious injury to eight firemen from exploding cartridges and gunpowder, the Thomas Varrick Hardware Company premises were consumed to-day. For a time it was feared that the whole town would be burned or blown up.

POLICE COURT

The usual "drunks" were the only charges that faced Magistrate Dumble in this morning's police court.

Frank Watson, who was drunk, pleaded guilty and was assessed $2 or ten days. This man is married and his wife had been complaining of his drunkenness.

Harry F. Turney, who was let off for being drunk the other day, again put in an appearance in the prisoner's box and was fined $2, to be paid forthwith, with the result that Harry will spend ten days in jail.

Stanford Sinclair, who hails from Bobcaygeon, pleaded guilty to being drunk and was fined $2.

STUPENDOUS STRAWBERRIES

Mr. Throop of 585 Homewood Avenue, has left with The Examiner a basket of common, and yet, uncommon strawberries. Two dozen of them completely filled an ordinary box, and twelve of them had an aggregate circumference of 54 1-2 inches. The quality is excellent and the variety, the "Clyde," very prolific. It would do one, who has not done so, good, to have a look at Mr. Throop's plot, 585 Homewood Avenue.

LEAVE ON 800 MILE CANOE TRIP

Mr. G. H. Graham of Lakefield and Two Local Boys Will Paddle to New York City

TAKE FIVE WEEKS

Two local boys, J. F. Davidson, son of Rev. Canon Davidson, and Donald Cameron, son of Dr. Cameron, accompanied by Mr. Gordon H. Grahame, master at the Lakefield Preparatory School, left Lakefield this morning on a canoe trip that has as its terminal point, New York city. The party reached Peterborough today in time to have dinner at home and continued on their way this afternoon.

The distance to be travelled is 800 miles, and Mr. Grahame informed The Examiner that they counted on reaching New York in five weeks' time. They will travel down the Otonabee, through Rice Lake, down the Trent River to the Bay of Quinte, through part of Lake Ontario, down the St. Lawrence River to Rorel, then down the Richelieu River to Lake Champlain, and eventually down the Hudson River to New York.

The dauntless trio have a seventeen-foot canoe and a complete camping outfit.

Lieut. Porte, R.N., Prepared to Defy the Mighty Deep. — Trans-Atlantic airman realizes that it will be no holiday trip, and will avoid all avoidable risks, as the promoters of the enterprise do not desire any loss of life. As a British naval officer Lieut. Porte had a good deal of adventure, having had long submarine experience. He was chosen from a long list of airmen to pilot the airship across the Atlantic, owing largely to his disciplined mind and body, and equipped as he is with scientific knowledge and love for service. Porte has become noted as the most careful successful airman on either side of the Atlantic.

Starving Rural Schools And Wasting Money On Mansions

While foolish extravagance and barbaric waste continued unchecked in the building of a Lieutenant-Governor's residence every public school section in rural Ontario found its Provincial grant cut down twenty-eight per cent. With more than a quarter of the expected and earned grant cut off many school sections were seriously crippled. It was the most injurious line of economy, and shows in striking contrast to the most useless line of extravagance practiced at the same time. When the statement that the rural public school grants had been cut down first appeared there was a general denial, and the course of the Government was so obviously ill-advised that many were reluctant to credit the charge. But it received official standing when John R. Humphreys, Accountant of the Education Department, was called to give evidence before the Public Accounts Committee. In reply to a question by Mr. Bowman as to how the reduction of twenty-eight per cent. had been arrived at, he said:

"The total amount of grants earned by the public schools under headings 1, 2, and 3, that is, grants on salaries, certificates, and fixed grants, amounted to $484,898.65. Those grants are grants on salaries and certificates alone, and exclusive of the equipment grants. The total appropriation we had to share was only $366,178.71, so that we had to make a pro rata reduction of twenty-eight per cent. in order to keep to the amount.

"Q.—Was last year the first year you had that experience?

"A.—No, sir, for the last two or three years we have had that.

"Q.—In previous years you didn't have enough money?

"A.—Yes.

"Q—Was last year the only year any reduction was made?

"A.—Yes. We had always been able to get the Treasury Board to give us the deficit.

"Q.—And last year you couldn't get the Treasury Board to do so?

"A.—No, sir.

"Q.—And for that reason you were obliged to make a reduction of twenty-eight per cent.?

"A.—Yes.

"Q.—In connection with the school grants of last year, did the reduction of twenty-eight per cent. apply to both rural public schools and rural separate schools?

"A.—No, only to public schools.

"Q.—The separate schools got one hundred per cent. of their grants?

"A.—Yes.

"Q.—And the public schools?

"A.—A twenty-eight per cent. reduction."

To earn the grants promised the schools were required to attain certain standards fixed by the Education Department. This involved expenditure, and the school trustees relied on the grants to bear the expected proportion. The schools that made expenditures for and expected a grant of say, $300 would receive only $165.80, and all other rural public schools in proportion. In spite of new and excessive taxation and in spite of large sales of Provincial assets, in spite of unprecedented borrowing, the Government was so obviously ill-advised that many were reluctant to credit the charge. But it received official standing when John R. Humphreys, Accountant of the Education Department, was called to give evidence before the Public Accounts Committee. THE INTEREST IS LUKEWARM

Introduction of the Amending Bill into the British House has Aroused Little Excitement

IS HOPE FOR PEACE

Examiner Special:

LONDON, Eng., June 24.— (Special cable copyright.)—The introduction of the amending bill so fully discounted in advance, creates comparatively luke-warm interest. The Unionist press attempts to display indignation, declaring its profound disappointment, dissatisfaction and alarm, but these warnings are so familiar that the public treats them with indifference. There is a growing evidence that a large middle group of Liberals and Unionists are again making their influence for peace felt.

Lord Lanadownes' speech is regarded as a hopeful augury that the policy of moderation may yet prevail on the Unionist side. The Liberal papers do not profess enthusiasm over the bill, but maintain that it makes utter nonsense of the plea of coercion. The Labour party's indignation over the budget surrender has resulted in a decision to abstain from voting in favour of the second reading of the Finance bill to-morrow. It is reported that the Liberals have formed a permanent group to shape the Liberal policy on financial questions.

Bribery Case Against Macklin and Rev. Jos. Elliott Dismissed and Conspiracy Accusation Stands

HEARD JUNE 30th

GODERICH, June 3.—The case in which the Centre Huron election is so vitally involved did not get very far in court to-day, but was put off for a week. Magistrate Kelly dismissed charges of bribery against Dr. O. H. MacKlin, Conservative, and Rev. Joseph Elliott, one of his workers, but allowed the conspiracy charges against them to stand. They will not be heard until June 30, after the election.

SMALL BLAZE IN A CULVERT

The Fire Brigade received a telephone call at 11 o'clock this morning to the corner of London and Downie streets, where a fire had commenced in the culvert at that spot. In order to extinguish the fire it was necessary to remove a portion of the sidewalk. This done, the conflagration was extinguished by means of chemicals, and no damage resulted.

Con. Editor Is Against Bar In Whitney Riding

KINGSTON, Ont., June 23 — R. S. Pelton, publisher of the Iroquois News in Sir James Whitney's riding, is another temperance editor who has been compelled to step outside his party and stand for principle.

He says thousands of temperance Conservatives are face to face with the issue — How should I vote? He feels that he cannot consistently vote for any candidate, be he Conservative or Liberal, who refuses to pledge himself to abolish the bar when the opportunity is presented. The editor tells of pledgings and appeals made to Sir James Whitney for advanced temperance legislation but all these "the government politely but firmly refused to consider."

The editor goes on to say: "The government is going to get a bad shaking up in this election. The better element in the Conservative party will never again, if indeed it will on this occasion, submit to the liquor influence in this Province.

NOT THE SODALITY.

The Examiner of last evening contained an article stating that the dance held at the Pavilion at the end of the Street Car Line, was in charge of a number of young ladies from St. Peter's Soladity.

It is learned that this information was entirely incorrect, and are further informed that if any members of St. Peter's Sodality happened to be present it was entirely without the approval of the Sodality.

LAST MINUTE DESPATCHES

Special to The Examiner:

ST. PAUL, Minn., June 24.—Two persons dead, several missing and thousands of dollars' damage, was the result, as gleaned from the wires today from various parts of the State, as the result of a tornado which swept this section last night. At first it was stated that hundreds were dead.

MAILS HELD UP.

PARIS, June 23.—An extraordinary spectacle of mutinous striker mail clerks, barricaded in the post office department, surrounded by gendarmes vainly trying to secure admittance, was continued in this city today. The government continues to belittle the strike, but the mails of France were practically held up by the strike.

HINDUS WILL LAND.

OTTAWA, June 23.— It is understood that the ship load of Hindus anchored in Vancouver harbour, will be allowed to enter Canada pending legal proceedings. The Imperial government is known to have been putting pressure upon the Borden administration. It is feared that should the Hindus return to India there would be violent demonstrations against British rule there and the consequences would be serious. Though the Japanese cruisers have reached Vancouver they have as yet shown no inclination to take a hand in the matter.

By the end of next week the population of Canada will be increased by a ship load of Asiatics it is expected.

POSITION OF EMPRESS.

QUEBEC, June 23.— It was this morning a story of the Empress of Ireland as she lies on the bed of the river. Wilfrid Whitehead told his story simply. He had gone down to find out in what direction the ship was lying. He descended on to the side of the vessel, felt at her plates to determine the direction of her stem and then walked along her forward. By this means air bubbles rising from him would tell the officer above which way the vessel was lying. This direction, Chief Gunner Macdiarmid informed the court, was north-east and south-west, the stem of the ship being north-east.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 24, 1914

ROWELL IS SINCERE.

The charge that Mr. Rowell is using the policy of abolishing the bar only as a stepping stone to power is not just. Mr. Rowell wants to abolish the bar and all its evils, and the only reason he wants to get office is to be able to carry out this policy. He would not have to sound the slogan, "abolish the bar," if Sir James Whitney had accepted Mr. Rowell's offer that he and the party he led would join Sir James in passing a measure to abolish the bar. This rejection of Mr. Rowell's offer to make the abolition of the bar a non-partizan question, was a serious tactical political error. The abolish-the-bar question would have been out of politics and the Government would not have been confronted, as it is now confronted, with a straight, clearcut issue, which promises to give it the trouble of its career. If Mr. Rowell does not win a majority in the Legislature, he will have a following of such numbers as to show that the country demands advanced temperance legislation with an emphasis that the Government cannot afford to ignore. Mr. Rowell is sincere. Will you be sincere in this contest—next Monday?

NO USE FOR TEMPERANCE.

The Whitney government is claimed to be a great friend of temperance reform; but what it has accomplished in this direction has come from active pushing from behind.

It claims and is heartily accorded credit for having amended the local option law so that municipal councils would be compelled to submit a local option by-law on presentation of a duly signed petition.

Local option had entered upon its stride, had become so popular before the present government came into power in 1906 that 184 municipalities had adopted it. But the liquor party became alarmed at the local option epidemic and wanted the government to put a brake on the wheels of the local option "water waggon."

This the government did in the form of the three-fifths clause which has retained, throughout the province, 1313 bars that would have been wiped out but for this handicap—by a simple majority.

If it had not been for the three-fifths clause all the bars, club licenses and shop licenses would have been abolished in Peterborough the past two years; for the electors pronounced in favour of this sweep two years ago by a majority of something like 500. The device of the liquor party adopted by the government kept the bar, club and shop licenses, and they have been busy with their blessed work ever since and are busy still. Now, you have a chance to wipe them out on a simple majority vote. What do you say?

Hon. Mr. Hanna, the acting premier, claims that the three-fifths clause is in the intbrests of temperance, a statement that wouldn't fool a baby at the breast. Would the liquor party have urged this if it was in the interests of a movement to kill its traffic and wipe out its profits?

The temperance people didn't and didn't want an unafir law, an anti-British arrangement to prevent the abolition of local option. If local option should not be a good measure; if it did not commend itself to the temperance people who voted it in by a majority, then they do not want it, and the easiest way of removing it would be in the interests of temperance.

If the Government is so anxious for temperance, why has it obstructed abolition of the bar? When the resolution to abolish the bar came before the House, Sir James Whitney had it side-tracked by a promise of what he declared a better measure, the abolition of treating. Even so preposterous and easily applied substitution for the radical action of destroying treating and all the evils of the bar, root and branch, was not applied.

The government was satisfied by helping the temperance cause by a promise without action, while Mr. Rowell gives both promise and action—fulfilment—if the people that want the evils of the traffic removed will support him, by their vote for Gillespie, the candidate who subscribes to the temperance pledge in full without evasion or change of base.

Mr. Soden might as well try to make the honest elector, the elector who thinks, believe the moon is made of green cheese as make him believe he is a sincere friend of temperance. The people wouldn't hope much from a leader of a defending army in the protection of themselves and their homes if they saw the forces of the invading enemy ranged behind their leader.

In this contest every financial beneficiary of the liquor traffic, every deluded friend of the liquor traffic, will be found voting solidly for Soden.

No one will deny that the whole strength of the liquor party is behind the present government. Why, unless the liquor interests, who are no fools, feel and know that the present government is fighting the battle of keep-the-bar?

A Conservative authority, the Ottawa Citizen, declares that the liquor interests are contributing to an immense campaign fund for the present government. What for? To distribute "abolish-the-bar" literature? Not at all. But to influence the electorate in the interests of keeping the liquor traffic in existence.

What does this mean? It means that the money paid over the bar by drunkards who starve their families, will be used to bribe the victims of the traffic to vote for a perpetuation of the traffic—to hold themselves in the thrall of the slavery to drink.

This is, indeed, a ghastly aspect of the struggle now going on between right and wrong, between drink and decency. There are scores in this city and hundreds and thousands in the province who are bound by the drink habit, who would almost give their right hand to have the temptation of the open bar removed; and they will vote to do it, if some of them are not influenced by bribery, with their own money — the money that has debauched them — no vote as the remnant of their manhood urges them to do.

If Mr. Soden and the present Government were considered to be truly the friends of temperance and abolition of the drink evil, would they be supported by the traffic and the friends of the traffic?

No man of sense, no man half honest and in his right mind, will say, or can say, that by voting for Mr. Soden; by lining up with the solid vote of the liquor interests, and voting for a man who is at once trying to get the votes of temperance men and the liquor interests, he is serving the cause of temperance. Think it over.

The present Government has no use for any candidate that favours temperance and abolition of the bar. Every Conservative candidate who has raised his voice or pledged his vote against the liquor traffic, has been muzzled or crowded out by the party machine. The Government has no use for temperance candidates.

Mr. Soden was not silenced or crowded out; because he refused to pledge himself to vote for temperance measures. His attitude got the endorsation of the party machine in Toronto because the party machine knew that Mr Soden would vote with the Government which has no use for temperance candidates.

Mr. Soden could double and twist better than Mr. Doughty, the candidate in Rosedale, Toronto, who was deprived of the candidature, because he wouldn't swallow his temperance principles and play the double game.

Why was Mr. W. K. McNaught (now Sir William McNaught) refused the nomination for seat "A," North Toronto? He was every way deserving of it. He has given splendid service in the Hydro-Electric cause and his record was so conspicuous for good service that Sir Robert Borden recommended him to the King for the honour of Knighthood.

But—and here the true cause is found—Mr. McNaught was one of the chief advocate of temperance principles in the Government party, and the present Government has no use for honest temperance candidates—they have only use for "temperance" candidates that so pose, but won't pledge, themselves, to vote temperance—such a candidate as we have in Mr. Soden.

Now the supreme issue in this contest is abolish-the-bar. Electors who want the bar abolished will vote for the candidate, Mr. Gillespie, who is pledged to vote for every temperance advance no matter what party proposes it; and pledged to support a leader who commits his future, risks his political fortunes upon the one issue—abolish the bar.

But the man who only professes his temperance and makes it subordinate to other considerations will be attracted by Mr. Soden; he will be consistent in voting for a "temperance" candidate who will get the solid vote of the liquor traffic party.

Now is the time to decide. No matter how you chlorotorm your consciences, you cannot justify to your reason and your religion a vote against abolishing the bar.

SPLENDID ADDRESS BY DR. A. MOIR TO GRADUATING NURSES ON MONDAY

As reported in yesterday's Examiner, Dr. A. Moir gave a splendid address to the graduating nurses at the exercises in the Conservatory of Music Hall. The address holds much that is of interest and information to all and is given in full below:

"I consider it a very pleasant duty which has been assigned me tonight, of addressing the Graduating Class of 1914. First of all, I must congratulate them on the choice they have made of their life work. I think it is pretty generally conceded that the highest type of life is the life of service to our fellow men, and this being true, the life of a nurse must be a noble one, for I know of no other calling that affords such unparalleled opportunity for helpful service as it does. And while probably not all who enter that profession do so from the highest motives, I think it can be truly said of each one of the present graduating class, that they were prompted by no other desire than that of living the most useful life possible.

I must also congratulate you on the energy and zeal you have shown in your three years of training and the successful issue of your recent examinations.

I must also congratulate you on the high standing of the school from which you graduated, for the training received there compares very favourably with that obtained in the largest hospitals in the world. The large hospital does not furnish to the nurse in training the advantage that at first sight might appear. It does not afford the same opportunity for personal supervision and instruction that is possible in the smaller institution. I must also congratulate you on the ethical side of your training. It is a matter of the greatest importance that a nurse should know what information to give and to whom to give it, and that feature of your training is particularly to be commended, and for this we must thank the Superintendent, Miss Beamish, and her assistant, Miss Sanderson.

But while this is pre-eminently a time for congratulation, I would only partially perform my duty did I not offer a few suggestions which will be helpful to you in your future career. With this end in view, therefore, I shall try and outline briefly a few general principles, which you would do well to bear in mind.

First of all, let me remind you that you are now taking on yourselves new obligations and new responsibilities for the dignity of the nursing profession depends on the conduct of the individual members. One navies act of yours may serve to bring discredit on the whole profession.

Both nurses and physicians should always be careful to conduct themselves in such a way that neither by act or word will they hurt the feelings of the most sensitive. While a certain amount of gaiety may be permissible or even helpful in the room of the convalescent, it is quite out of place when we come to stand beside the bed of the dying. While we should be bright, even there, our demeanour should be quiet and reserved, in keeping with the scene.

"You must always remember that will be a pleasure to wait; at whose ation, and that having taken a case you are in duty bound to render the very best service you know how. You will all have patients upon whom it will b ea pleasure to wait; at whose bedside it will be a benediction to stand; but, unfortunately, not all your patients, and I fear, not even the majority of them will be of this type, but never allow the ingratitude of a patient to serve as an excuse for careless service. Should your patients make themselves so disagreeable that you feel you cannot render the service you should, withdraw, rather than relax your vigilance. To render a half-hearted service may not only endanger the patient's life, but bring discredit on yourself as well.

In the next place be loyal to the physician in charge. An unfaithful nurse may frustrate the efforts of the most faithful physician. While a faithful nurse may often be able to do more than the physician, himself and the conscientious physician will not forget to give you your share of the praise. Always give the physician any information about the patient and his surroundings which you think will be helpful to him, but refrain from telling him little things which only tend to worry and annoy and have no special bearing on the case. Above all things; avoid giving any information regarding your case to those not directly interested. Remember you are in a position to trust and often come into possession of knowledge which should not under any circumstances be made public. Carry out the attending physician's instructions carefully, and remember he is the only one from whom you need take orders. If the patient's friends are inclined to interfere in form the doctor and let him deal with them. If in spite of that they persist in interfering so that you are unable to carry out the treatment prescribed only one course is open to you, namely, to give up the case. By so doing you will command the respect of the patient's friends and the confidence of your physician—a thing which you must have if you are to be a success in your profession. And, lastly, I would say, be loyal to yourselves. Remember that if you are to render the best services you must have a reasonable amount of rest and relaxation. There will be occasions when

Participating versus Non-Participating Life Policies Again

FIFTEEN YEARS AGO a Publisher of this City at age 43 took out a Ten Pay 15 year Endowment Policy of $2000, No 81226 in The Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada paying therefore an annual premium of $187.20.

The Non-Participating Premium would have been $170.40.

The extra paid for profits per year (for 10 years only was $16.80.

On the 1st of May 1914 the above Policy matured and he received in cash $2620.25.

Had this man taken a Non-Participating Policy he would have saved $168.00 extra in premiums paid for profits during the ten years but he would have lost $620.25 at maturity of Policy as he would have received only $2000.00 instead of $2620.25 as he did.

Where is there a man that would not like to invest money at such a rate and that too in the Largest and Strongest Life Insurance Company in the British Empire?

You are invited to call and investigate.

Mr. Soden's Elusive, Evasive And Contradictory Attitude

His Changes of Position and Principle Have Neutralized Any Claim to the Confidence of Temperance Electors

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—In Monday's issue of your paper Mr. Soden makes another attempt to persuade voters that he is on the temperance platform. Even if his absurd proposal were feasible his actions and statements on the temperance question have been so ELUSIVE, EVASIVE and CONTRADICTORY that no confidence can be placed in his position.

Note the following: In a speech to temperance workers in the Y.M.C.A. at the close of the last Local Option campaign, Mr. Soden vigorously denounced the government's three-fifths handicap and stated he "WOULD NEVER CAST A VOTE for the Government while that clause remained. (Applause.)" In his speech at Young's Point he stated "the three-fifths clause is the best thing the country ever had." A flat contradiction, a broken pledge.

Mr. Soden's weakness is apparent in that he HAS NOT stated in any public utterance that he will vote with EITHER POLITICAL PARTY on the issues presented by the Temperance Association, — that is, the abolition of the three-fifths clause and the abolition of bar, club and shop licenses either collectively or separately.

Mr. Soden's insincerity is disclosed in that he repeatedly tries to make pronouncement similar in APPARENT MEANING but UTTERLY VALUELESS when closely scrutinized. The object of such statements is to mislead and hold the unwary temperance voter.

Mr. Gillespie unreservedly places temperance interests before party interests and thereby merits our support. Mr. Soden utterly fails to do this, but persists in pretending to do it. Soden says, "I may," Gillespie says "I will."

Mr. Soden tied his own hands at his convention by stating he would not pledge himself on these matters. Mr. Soden requested me to have our executive defer its pronouncment 24 hours that he might go to Toronto and see if he would be recognized as a Conservative candidate if he went all the way on temperance matters. He stated to me in the presence of a leading Conservative business man of this city that he was prepared to accept our first two questions asking for the abolition of the three-fifths clause. We deferred our pronouncement at his request; he went to Toronto, saw Dr. Pyne, returned and stated to a member of our executive he could not sign our questions and in the course of a few days completely flopped on the three-fifths clause.

We have no use for men of that calibre; they have proved a greater menace to our cause than open opponents. Past experience bids us beware of these statements that are hollow, deceptive and misleading.

To the discerning, thinking, temperance voters of West Peterborough, we say, away with temporizing, let us stand by our PRINCIPLES; stand by our CANDIDATE, STAND BY OUR CAUSE.—A. B. Cunningham, Secretary, County Temperance Association.

GILLESPIE AND SODEN MEETINGS IN BUCKHORN

Special to The Examiner:

HALL'S BRIDGE, June 19.—This community has been favoured by addresses representing the claims of Mr. R. J. Soden, the Conservative candidate, and Mr. G. A. Gillespie, the Liberal candidate for West Peterborough.

Mr. Soden confined himself to eulogising the conduct of the past government of Ontario. He referred to the great improvement which the Hydro-Electric had wrought in the province and the cheaper rates thus obtained. He then took a turn at Dominion politics and praised Mr. Borden's steps in cancelling the Burleigh Falls power lease. In regard to temperance his stand was to abolish bar, club and shop licenses, and then he wandered off into an attack on Mr. Ben. H. Spence, the secretary of the Dominion Alliance, whom he labelled "a Grit" who wished the Grits to get in above anything else. He also referred to the "Pioneer" as a Liberal paper because it is the organ of the Dominion Alliance. He said that 90 p.c. of the blacklisters in Peterborough get bottles from the shop through the agency of other men and that the shop supplies women drinkers. He then proceeded to pat the Whitney government on the back for withdrawing the grant from schools which would not conform to the law in regard to the teaching of English in French schools. He then went on to say that he was going to Toronto to do as he pleased, and no person or body of persons would bind him as to how he would vote as he liked.

To-night Mr. G. A. Gillespie held a meeting in the same hall as Mr. Soden had done the night before. Mr. F. E. Ellis of the "Farm and Dairy," a Conservative temperance man, and a graduate of the Ontario Agricultural College, spoke first. He said that the raising of the fees by the Minister of Agriculture and the Whitney government in the Agricultural College at Guelph was crowding out the poor man and that the sons of wealthy men were now attending, and their idea was to manage estates on the scale of the country establishments of English gentlemen rather than to raise grain for the nation. In regard to tax reform he said that the Whitney government favoured taxing improvements on property. Whereas Mr. Rowell's policy was to lay the tax on the land alone, thereby to discourage speculation and encourage building and the beautifying of the streets. "The present system," he said, "is producing a big crop of millionaires. There are 500,000 people in Toronto, 25,000 of whom own the land, and of these a few own the great percentage." Referring to the abolition of the bar he went on to say that there are 13,000 bars, 56 club licenses and 250 shop licenses in Ontario. The 250 shops are in 89 places. Mr. Rowell's policy is to abolish the bar and club licenses and to put away the shops by a straight majority vote. Furthermore, married women are to be given the franchise, and Local Option is to be made country wide.

Mr. Gillespie then addressed the meeting. Mr. Gillespie stands with a party behind him—a party pledged to abolish the bar licenses, club licenses and the shop licenses, the first two by legislation, the last by the straight majority vote of the people. Mr. Soden stands alone, unsupported by a party hostile to reform. Mr. Gillespie pledges himself to support all legislation conducive to the abolition of the liquor traffic in any or all of its forms. Mr. Soden pledges himself to nothing. He will not be bound. He is a temperance man and MAY support legislation which is desired, but he makes no promises. Mr. Gillespie if he is sent to Toronto, goes as the servant of the people, recognizing his responsibilities. Mr. Soden if he is sent, goes as nobody's servant, for he will not be bound. Mr. Gillespie goes to Toronto as the representative of West Peterborough. Mr. Soden as the representative of Mr. Soden.

Mr. Gillespie concluded his remarks by saying, "I promise to do all in my power to serve you, electors of West Peterborough, and ye shall know me."

Mr. R. R. Hall then spoke, continuing the detail work of Mr. Ellis. At present throughout Ontario there is an unrest and a spirit of revolt against the Whitney administration. Constantly old Conservative candidates, who have been representing their ridings for years, are being turned down. The expenditure of the government has been three times as much as prior to their advent, and yet whereas the Ross government spent $4,200 per annum on roads in the township of Harvey, Galway and Cavendish, the Whitney government had only spent $1,900 in one year. On the other hand they have squandered $1,250,000 on a lieutenant-governor's palace which overlooked the Don Valley brickyards and in front and behind which trains constantly pass. The value of the assessed property in the towns of Lakefield, Havelock and Norwood would not equal that figure. What benefit is such an expenditure to the people of Ontario to furnish such a palatial mansion with such an abominable site, for the benefit of one man who does nothing but sign his name, when on the other hand thousands of people are in want, and the rural school grant has been cut down 28 p.c. Moreover, the Minister of Public Works goes to Europe to buy tapestries for the mansion, when men who make such things are tramping the streets of Toronto, out of work. The electorate wants to know where a man stands. There can only be a "yes" or a "no" to the question, "Are you in favour of the abolish-the-bar policy. We know where Mr. Gillespie stands, but we do not know where Mr. Soden stands. Mr. Gillespie stands to serve the people. Mr. Soden stands to serve Mr. Soden, for says he, "I will allow no person to dictate to me as to how I shall vote." The electorate has the right and the power to dictate what Mr. Soden, if elected, must do, for Mr. Soden would not be representing Mr. Soden, but would be representing the people of West Peterborough.

G. A. GILLESPIE
Liberal Candidate in West Peterborough.

On Saturday, June 6, I gave the Temperance Associations a signed statement that if elected I would vote with either political party on every possible occasion for the abolition of the 1,300 bars, 215 shop, and 88 club licenses in Ontario. I repeated this statement in my Opera House address June 13. Furthermore, if I ever get the opportunity I will vote to prevent the manufacture of liquor. I ask for your support and influence.

TWO MEN MET AFTER A LONG SEPARATION--WHY DID EACH GO HOME IN A HACK?

The young man armed with a vote should weigh well his attitude in this election. That he has reached the age when his country gives him the franchise is an evidence that temptation has crossed his path, not once, but probably many times.

Where is the young man—not to mention those of older generations—who has not been invited into a licensed bar? The invitation wore the cloak of friendship; it bore the approval of custom. It is an everyday practice; age after age of men have followed it, but the last half century has seen a gradual revolt that is stirring nations.

For the reason that only the friendly swinging bar-room doors. They are doing this right now wide, unobstructed path through easily swinging bar-room doors. They are doing. They are doing this right now with eyes blinded by folly and along an avenue that is easy treading. There is not a young voter in Peterborough who cannot point to friends or acquaintances who are following the old lure that has wrecked so many. If he has been a resident of Peterborough a few years even the young man can recall those who have lost good positions, others who have injured their health, and some others who have been buried to their graves by the booze game.

Be Honest About it.

If the average man would only be honest about this question it would be quickly solved. Some of them turn from the truth because it borders on the sentimental, and with a spirit of bravado they scorn sentiment. Every mother warns her boys against the bar-rooms. It is a boggy to her as the sons begin to free themselves from the old nest. Do you think a young man takes his first drink with out remembering his parents' advice? He that does is a mighty poor specimen. In any case, his friends persuade him—those that suggested the bar, needless to say, went in for the red stuff. There is not a hand to help him. The bartender's questioning glance calls for a quick response. There is no time then to weigh the consequences. And right there many a young man has taken the fatal plunge. Sentimental stuff, some may say, but nevertheless a plain statement of what has occurred to thousands. Many, of course, turn back before it is too late, but generally they are carried along with the stream of folly that is begotten amid the glitter and tinsel of the hotel bar.

An Institution.

Speak of it only as an institution through which the vast majority of youth passes. The shops, hurtful as their influence is, pale into insignificance before the bar. It is so easy of approach, and the youthful victims are lured by friendship, bastardized to the work of the devil. There lies the charge against the bar there is the point the young man should remember. You do not have to believe in a real devil, but you have to admit the temptation through which you pass when you decide to take a drink or not. Remember that there is no reason above hell for the legalising of such a fire test for youth.

Years ago smallpox was a common disease. Pock-marked faces were numerous. To-day you rarely see them. Legislation turned its attention to the disease, vaccination was made compulsory. Mr. R. J. Todd and others declaim against vaccination, but it drove a loathsome disease from the communities of men.

The writer recalls a young man whose death was hurried by a joy jaunt before the mirrors. It was quite a prolonged trip, but it had the expected ending. All the bars in the country were not worth that life thev helped to wreck.

When Two Friends Met.

Two men meet up town after years of separation. As they walk along, swapping experiences one suggests a drink. Neither necessarily wanted "booze" but the bar was handy. After two drinks each, another acquaintance or two drop in. "Sure you've got to have a drink on me." Down the line it goes according to custom, and before long the original two are well "lighted." It would be ludicrous if it were not so sad. They did not want to get drunk, but they went home in hacks to their families, or staggered as best they could. But the foolish, vile traditions of the bar seemed imperative. Remember them when you use your franchise. The man who says "water was made to wash your feet with," went through the mill and it got him. Now he says, "water rusts your pipes"; but it would not have puffed his under eyes and streaked his eyeballs with blood, nor would the stuff from the old oaken bucket put that huskiness in his throat. But why go on? No honest man, young or old, just honest with himself, can afford to call the truth, in regard to the liquor traffic, mere sentiment. The present crop of bar-lards need scant consideration, but the present crop of school boys do. They will make friends when they get past the school age, but there is no reason why the bar-room and all its means should stand be their paths. This is the issue, and when you look at it right in the eye you find it the biggest problem you ever faced. If you will let yourself see the liquor game as it is, you will take a punch at it every time you get a chance. Think only of youth, bright eyed and expectant. Why should there be a legalized lure to beckon to them? The strange, sad feature is that the bar has lived to this enlightened age.

SPLENDID SHORE DINNER PLANNED FOR SATURDAY

The shore dinner which the local Automobile Association are holding to Indian Village, at the mouth of the Otonabee River next Saturday, promises to be the event of the season for motorists. The Indian Village where the dinner is to be held is reached by the finest roads in this vicinity, so a pleasant spin is assured all members who attend, as well as a very enjoyable time at the Indian Village.

A circular letter which has been sent to all the members of the local branch of the Ontario Motor League, contains the following directions for reaching the scene of the picnic:

"Go down the Keene Road to the O.M.L. Road sign "Hiawatha,' turn to right through to Rice Lake, then turn to right again along the North shore of the Lake for one mile. When you come to what looks like the end of the road run out into the field and to shore of Lage about one hundred yards, bearing to the Southwest. There you will find one of the prettiest spots in Ontario. A fine grove for games and all sorts of outdoor sports, a sloping sandy beach for bathing, and a great expanse of grassy carpet for base ball games."

There will be a game of base ball between the Denham fans and the Patterson Colts, the two teams being headed respectively by the two directors of the local ball club, Mr. W. H. Denham and Mr. E. C. Patterson. Mayor Buller will likely umpire the game.

The most important event of the day at Indian Village will be a sumptuous shore dinner, served from five to six o'clock. But besides this provision will be made for all who wish to enjoy a rubber of bridge or other games.

The main body of cars will leave Central Park at half-post-one o'clock next Saturday, but by following the direction given above motorists who cannot break away so early in the day can reach the site chosen for the affair, before the dinner is served. All who are going are asked to notify Mr. S. J. Keyes, Assistant Secretary, 773 Water street, and who can be notified by 'phoning No. 1103.

All local motorists who are not members of the Association are urged to come anyway, as the officers feel sure that before they return they will be anxious to be initiated into membership.

PARENTS' DAY AT "Y" CAMP

Friday, July 3rd, will be parents' day at the "Y" camp, and parents are requested to visit their boys and enjoy the day with them. The motto of the camp this year is "each for all and all for each." The advance guard leaves Friday morning at 8 o'clock, and will have everything ready for the boys when they arrive on Monday. The boys leave Monday morning at 8 o'clock, sharp, via the steamer Manita. All baggage must be at the wharf half an hour before the boat leaves.

The boys wish to thank Mr. J. E. A. Fitzgerald for the loan of his beautiful large tent and his kindness is appreciated by the "Y" boys very much.

The Employed Boys war canoe crew will practice to-night at 7.30.

BOY BE A SCOUT

To go through life successfully you must be scouting all the time, to prevent yourself from falling into the snares and pitfalls of this wicked world. SUCCESS comes by scouting only. When I say success I don't mean the boy or man who has things forced upon him as some seem to have without any effort of their own, as these are extraordinary exceptions and come but to few.

To you who have to make your mark in life and are anxious to ascend the ladder, I say be a SCOUT, as this will help you more than anything else I know, and the little time spent in same should be one of your best investments. Be a Scout, make an effort to be a man, and by God's help make one. Be a Scout, and by being a good Scout, you will become a good, useful, healthy, wealthy and wise man. Be a Scout.

The moving pictures at the Grand Opera House on Friday and Saturday last showed those who saw them what it was possible to do, what it was doing, and will do. Take the boy out of the slums and gutter of this life and bring him to be a sound, healthy, wealthy man. I suggest to you ministers of this City to be Scouts or Scoutmasters, as I understand this is what we are most in need of to press this noble movement forward. Ministers, become Scoutmasters, preach scouting. There is far more in it than politics and the liquor traffic. What it is and what it means, according to the principles laws and rules are laid down by Sir Robert Baden Powell, K.C.B., K.C.V.O., in his book, entitled "Canadian Boy Scout," which may be obtained at any of the book stores in this City, price 35c. In my opinion no better book can be put into a boy's hand. The Boy Scout movement is no more or less than training a boy to be a practical Christian. In addition to giving him health, which is the finest thing in the world. A Christian without good health is a poor creature.

"Better to hunt in the fields untaught than fee the doctor for a noxious draught."—Dryden.

The wise for cure on exercise depend. God did not make His work for man to mend.

To the Big Brothers of Peterborough I suggest to you to help to boost the Boy Scout movement. Your time will be well and profitably spent in saving and making our boys into good, sound, healthy, strong and intelligent men and citizens.

To the knocker I say, read the book before you open your mouth, so that you might know what you are talking about. Any fool can pull down: few can elevate. Try to be one of the few and elevate yourself and others, as the knocker as a rule knocks himself down, so do not be a knocker.

THE SCOUT LAW.

1. A Scout's honour to be trusted. If a Scout says "On my honour it is so," that means that it IS so, just as if he had taken a most solemn oath. Similarly, if a Scout officer says to a Scout, "I trust you on your honour to do this," the Scout is bound to carry out the order to the very best of his ability, and to let nothing interfere with his doing so. If a Scout were to break his honour by telling a lie, or by not carrying out an order exactly, when trusted on his honour to do so, he may be directed to hand over his Scout badge, and never to wear it again. He may also be directed to cease to be a Scout.

2. A Scout is loyal to the King, and to his officers, and to his parents, his country and his employers. He must stick to them through thick and thin against anyone who is their enemy or who even talks badly of them.

3. A Scout's duty is to be useful and to help others. And he is to do his duty before anything else, even though he gives up his own pleasure, or comfort, or safety to do it. When in difficulty to know which of two things to do, he must ask himself, "Which is my duty?" That is, Which is best for other people?" and to do that one. He must be prepared at any time to save life, or to help injured persons. And he must try his best to do a good turn to somebody every day.

4. A Scout is a friend to all, and a brother to every other Scout, no matter to what social class the other belong. Thus, if a Scout meets another Scout, even though a stranger to him, he must speak to him, and help him him in any way that he can, either to carry the duty he is then doing, or by giving him food, or, as far as possible, anything that he may be in want of. A Scout must never be a snob. A snob is one who looks down upon another because he is poorer, or who is poor and resents another because he is rich. A Scout accepts the other man as he finds him, and makes the best of him. "Kim," the Boy Scout, was called by the Indians, "Little friend of all the world," and that is the name that every Scout should earn for himself.

5. A Scout is courteous. That is, he is polite to all—but especially women and children, and old people and invalids, cripples, etc. And he must not take any reward for being helpful or courteous.

6. A Scout is a friend to animals. He should save them, as far as possible, from pain, and should not kill any animal unnecessarily, for it is one of God's creatures. Killing an animal for food is allowable.

7. A Scout obeys orders, of his his parents, patrol leader, or Scoutmaster without question. Even if he gets an order he does not like he must do as soldiers and sailors do, he must carry it out all the same because it is his duty; and after he has done it he can come and state any reasons against it; but he must carry out the order at once. This is discipline.

8. A Scout smiles and whistles under all circumstances. When he gets an order he should obey it cheerily and readily, not in a slow, hang-dog sort of way. Scouts never grouse at hardships, nor whine at each other, nor swear when put out. When you just miss a train, or someone treads on your favourite corn—not that a Scout ought to have such things as corns—or under any annoying circumstances, you should force yourself to smile at once, and then whistle a tune and you will be all right. (N.B.) Since this rule first appeared in print a great many Scouts, old and young, have written to me saying how useful it has been to them.)

8. A Scout goes about with a smile on and whistling. It cheers him and cheers other people, especially in time of danger, for he keeps it up then all the same. The punishment for swearing or using bad language is for each offence a mug of cold water to be poured down the offender's sleeve by the other Scouts. It was the punishment invented by the old British Scout, Captain John Smith, three hundred years ago.

9. A Scout is thrifty, that is, he saves every cent he can, and puts it into the bank, so that he may have money to keep himself when out of work, and thus not make himself a burden to others; or that he may have money to give away to others when they need it.

Thanking you for your valuable space, I am, dear sir, one interested in the interests of our boys and the Scout movement.

ONE INTERESTED.

WHAT HAST THOU GLEANED?

"Where hast thou gleaned to-day?" —Ruth ii., 19.

Has the day seemed to be a complete failure? Has everything gone wrong? Have we been cross and fretful and impatient? Does it seem as if it is no use any longer trying to be a faithful follower of the lowly Jesus?

One of the worst things we can do is to be always taking our spiritual temperature, by pondering over our faults and brooding over our failings. But it is a great help to take a few minutes each night to examine ourselves and see wherein we have failed through the day. How much of what has gone wrong were we responsible for, and more important still, what are we going to be and how are we going to act on the coming day?

It is a solemn thought to face that as we are to-day, so we will be to-morrow; as we will be to-morrow so we will be for the days to come, each one forming a stronger link in the chain of our character-building, which ever as the days, weeks, months and years pass by, become more difficult to change, as we realize that that character is not all we would have it to be.

Ruskin has expressed the thought that every morning should be the beginning of life, and every setting sun be as its close. So let every one of these short lives have some record of some goodly strength gained.

What would we think of a man who did not regularly examine his business affairs to see if his balance is on the right side? Likewise what would we think of a Christian who really never takes time to consider if in his life there is a spiritual gain in self-mastery, in going out of one's self for others? And if at night we feel with a sinking heart, that there has been no gleaning that day, let us not be discouraged, but remember that there is another day coming for us to try harder than ever, with fresh courage and faith.

"Every day is a fresh beginning,
Every morn is the world made new,
You who are weary of sorrow and sinning,
Here is a beautiful hope for you,—
A hope for me, and a hope for you."
I.H.N.

THINGS WORTH KNOWING

What do you do with your broken needles? The safest plan is to have a little bottle or box into which to drop the pieces, so there will be no danger of people being hurt.

To prevent a skirt placket gaping or ripping at the bottom sew a hook and eye near the bottom of the placket and press them down firmly. They will bear the strain instead of the cloth or stitches.

An enterprising woman conceived the idea of wearing an apron of contrasting color when sewing and thus relieve the eyestrain. For instance, when working on white wear a black apron and vice versa.

When making buttonholes on children's undergarments try holding a piece of white wrapping cord as near the edge as possible and work the buttonholes over it. Another good idea when sewing on buttons is to sew on a doubled scrap of cloth under the button and thus streagthen the material.

When ice is not available, put enough butter for a meal in a small dish, and set it in a larger one containing a little water. Turn a porous clay flower-pot over it and this will cause evaporation of the water in a way that will keep the air inside the pot very cool. If the pot is wrapped in wet cloth, the corners of which are left touching water in outer dish, the arrangement is almost as good as an ice-chest. Stand dish where there is a free circulation of air.

This is as helpful in connection with milk, meat and other food stuffs, and the similar trick of filling a can or bottle with water, closing it tightly, wrapping in wet flannel, and standing in a current of air, will cool the water as effectually as putting ice in it. If the wrapped can is stood in a plate containing water, the flannel will keep wet without attention.

Professor Robertson Gives Reasons For His Faith

Voted Against His Party for Conscience Sake; Now Voting With It For the Same Reason

Surely the Government candidates and newspapers that are appealing so strenuously to ministers of the Gospel during a holiday week in defence of the speakeasy institution of the bar-have very short memories; or is it that they merely have convenient memories? They are continually reminding us of the time when the Ross Government was driven from power in 1905 by Mr. Whitney, as he then was. Have they forgotten how during that campaign Mr. Whitney appealed to the clergymen of Ontario to assist him in arousing the people, and how, immediately after the election, he publicly thanked them for their assistance? "As you all know," he said, "the clergy have done their duty. They deserve the thanks of all men."

It is worth recalling also what the editorial columns of The Mail and Empire more than once during that campaign had to say about the propriety of clergymen speaking out in a political contest. For instance: "The attitude to be taken depends upon the issue that is before the public. If we are faced with a question of tariff or railways, clerical intervention is out of the question. But when the issue is moral it is not at all improper for the clergy to pronounce against the evils that are afflicting the country and threatening its future. If a clergyman cannot denounce against public wrong-doing why have a pulpit at all?"

Surely this is as sound doctrine in 1914 as in 1905, and as applicable. The issue of to-day has long been regarded by the Chairman as a moral issue, and it easily comes within The Mail and Empire's definition. It is no new thing for the clergy of Ontario to denounce the bar-room as an evil that afflicts the country and threatens its future. They have been declaiming against it for years. Why should they keep silence now? The issue has not ceased to be a moral issue simply because it has become also a political issue.

There is one difference, however, between 1905 and 1914. Ministers of the Gospel who spoke out freely then did so on their own initiative and responsibility. But in this election they have invariably endorsed the express authority of their Conferences, etc., Assemblies for speaking out boldly, and for declaring that all other issues fade into insignificance beside the question of temperance legislation. Indeed, after denouncing the bar-room and calling for advanced legislation all these years, there is no other stand to take if they would avoid the imputation of inconsistency and insincerity.

TO QUOTE IN REPLY TO THIS ANYTHING THE DEFENDERS OF THE ROSS GOVERNMENT MAY HAVE SAID IN 1905 IS SIMPLY BESIDE THE QUESTION. FOR THIS IS WRITTEN BY ONE OF THOSE THOUSANDS OF LIBERALS WHO RESPONDED IN 1905 TO MR. WHITNEY'S APPEAL TO ALL INDEPENDENT AND HIGH-MINDED CITIZENS TO SUPPORT HIM IN A CAMPAIGN FOR CIVIC RIGHTEOUSNESS, REGARDLESS OF OUR PARTY AFFILIATIONS, AND WHO NOW REJOICE TO SEE THOUSANDS OF CONSERVATIVES RESPONDING TO-DAY TO A SIMILAR APPEAL.

What Mr. Whitney said to us in 1905 can be applied to such men in 1914. It is not a contest, we were told, founded upon mere party issues, but a great uprising of the moral people of the country, determined, regardless who may win or lose, that our land shall be purged from what is an abomination and a defilement. Such men, we were also told, are not deserting their party, but setting it free to pursue its true ideals. The retention of the bar-room is no more a part of true Conservatism than the retention of the "barnacles" of a decade ago was a part of true Liberalism. And no greater blessing can come to our political life than the growth of an independent vote, highly resolved to follow principle and not prejudice, and to obey conscience rather than the dictates of the party machine.

CHEESE GOOD AS DIGESTIVE FOOD

Prof. H. H. Dean, O.A.C., Guelph

Have you sufficiently realized the value and importance of cheese as human food? Are you aware that cheese at 17 cts. a lb. furnishes for $1 more than twice as much human energy as is obtained for $1 in sirloin beef, or lamb at 18 cts. a lb.? Do you not think that you could profitably use more cheese on your table and thus help reduce the cost of living for your own particular family? Please note the following notes about cheese for table use:

(1) It can be eaten without cooking. This saves expense and labor.

(2) If desired, it can be cooked in a variety of dishes.

(3) Well ripened cheese is partially pre-digested, and can be eaten by anyone. Experiments have shown that 95 per cent. of the fat and proteids of cheese are digestible by human subjects.

(4) Cheese is a muscle-builder and brain food. The proteid compounds are the source of human muscle. For $1 you can buy more than twice as much muscle-forming material in cheese at 17 cts. a lb. as you can in eggs at 25 cts. a dozen, or in ham at 25 cts. a lb.

(5) There is little or no waste in cheese. "Waste not, want not" is a homely proverb well worth considering at the present time. No class of foods have so little waste material as those from the dairy. It pays to study the question of "waste" when purchasing foods.

(6) An almost endless variety of cheese can be made, thus suiting the endless variety of human tastes for food.

(7) Why not ask your grocer for Canadian cheese, and insist that it be of good quality?

Canadian consumers cannot cultivate correct choice on cull cheese. Consequently customers can do Canadian cheddar cheese considerable good by calling for correct cheese. The following dishes will give an idea of the various ways in which cheese may be prepared:

CHEESE SAUCE

One cup milk, two tablespoons of butter, two tablespoons flour, one-quarter cup grated cheese, one-eighth teaspoon mustard, one-half teaspoon salt, a little pepper. Put the butter, flour, mustard, salt and pepper into a saucepan; stir over the fire until it froths; add the milk and stir constantly, until it thickens and boils. Remove to a cooler part of the stove, add cheese, and stir until it is well mixed in. This may be converted into cheese soup by adding a cup more milk and seasoning to taste.

CHEESE CUSTARD

One-half teaspoon salt, one egg, one-quarter teaspoon mustard, two-thirds cup milk, two-thirds cup grated stale cheese. Put the seasonings and egg into a saucepan, and beat thoroughly; add the milk and stir in cheese. Put over fire and stir constantly until it begins to thicken and coat the spoon. Take at once from the fire and pour over soda biscuits, strips of buttered toast, or shredded wheat biscuits arranged on a hot platter.

CHEESE SOUFFLE

One-quarter cup butter, one cup milk, one-quarter cup flour, three-quarters cup grated cheese, four eggs, one cup milk, one teaspoon salt, one-quarter teaspoon mustard. A little pepper. Half of the flour may be omitted, using one-third cup of breadcrumbs instead. Melt the butter, add the flour, and stir over the fire until frothy; add the milk and stir constantly until it thickens and boils; stir in the seasonings and cheese; stir in the beaten yolks and take from fire at once. Stand mixture aside to cool. Beat egg whites stiff; add a little to the cheese mixture and stir it in; add remainder; fold it in lightly but thoroughly; turn the whole into a buttered baking dish, and bake about an hour in a moderate oven. If the oven is the least too hot stand the baking dish in a pan of boiling water while making.

The Human Mind In Summer

THE human mind knows no summer Langaor. It seeks to be interested, instructed and informed as much in season of midsummer heat as in the season of Midsummer Cold.

The mind of a man does not change from month to month as does the season; nor does it go to sleep for months at a time as does the bear.

In summer the mind is less preoccupied with cares than in the more strenuous months of social and business demands.

In summer the time which is given at other seasons to other interests is often given to the reading of newspapers.

In summer newspaper circulations often increase, for then men and women have more time and daylight for reading.

The summer months, then, are choice months for advertisers to use to draw attention to themselves and their goods, to arouse interest in what they provide, and to implant desires for what they sell or make.

You can obtain helpful advice on advertising, free of cost and without obligation by consulting the Business Department of the EVENING EXAMINER.

Another Easy Win For The Petes Beat Brantford 8 to 3 Yesterday

Schettler Pitched Fine Ball for Homesters, While Nickell, Rube Deneau's New Twirler, Was Hit Hard and Often --Miller and Stewart Had Three Hits Each.

The Petes made it two straight from the Brants yesterday, easily beating Rube Deneau's Athletics by 8 runs to 3, before a large ladies' day crowd. The genial Rube introduced his new twirler, Nickell, to the Petes, and the homesters did not stand on ceremony, treating the elongated box artist's slants with great familiarity. They got after him for three runs in the first innings and hammered him hard throughout, fattening their averages to the extent of fourteen safeties, including a triple and three doubles. In addition to being hit hard Nickell, who is as big as Leroy Osborne, gave four bases on balls, and was in difficulties most of the journey.

On Monday, Manager Blount's Irish battery, Tracey and Kelly, easily held the Brants, and yesterday the Dutch pair, Schettler and Miller, were in the points. Schettler pitched a rattling fine game and was in trouble in only two innings. In six of the sessions he retired the Brants in one, two, three order, and in the first five innings only one visitor reached first base. Schettler's control was perfect, not a man walking.

The Petes played errorless ball in the field and showed plenty of snap and pepper. The home gang is travelling at a nice clip right now, and they delighted the fans yesterday with their clean-cut exhibition. On the base paths they showed speed, stealing five sacks and they sacrificed cleverly.

Two fast double plays, both started by Forgue, and a fine grab of a foul fly by Byrne, were the fielding features.

First Innings.

Brantford — Burns flied to Blount; Nelson grounded to Rooney. Deneau died on a smash which Schettler knocked down, King throwing him out. No runs, hits or errors.

Peterborough — Blount walked. Byrne forced Blount, Forgue to Roth. Welsh singled over second, Byrne going to third, when Deneau fumbled. Stewart singled past Roth, scoring Byrne, while Welsh went to third and Stewart took second on the throw to third. Rooney hit to Ivers and Welsh was out at the plate, Stewart scored on a double steal with Rooney. King doubled to right, scoring Rooney. Fox died on a roller in front of the plate. Three runs, three hits, one error.

Second Innings.

Brantford — Ivers fanned. Taylor flied to Stewart. Roth grounded to Byrne. No runs, hits or errors.

Peterborough — Miller singled to second. Schettler sacrificed Lacroix to Roth. Blount drew a pass. Byrne forced Miller at third, Nickells to Nelson. Blount and Byrne pulled off a double-steal. Welsh grounded to Roth. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Third Innings.

Brantford — Forgue grounded to King. Lacroix rolled to Fox and was out. Nickell lifted a foul to Miller. No runs, hits or errors.

Peterborough — Stewart tripled to left centre. Rooney singled between Forgue and Nelson, scoring Stewart. King sacrificed, Ivers to Roth. Rooney stole third. Fox was passed. Miller singled past third, scoring Rooney. Schettler hit into a double, Forgue tagging second and then throwing Schettler out at first. Two runs, three hits, no errors.

Fourth Innings.

Brantford—Burns popped to Byrne. Nelson fanned. Rooney went over to the box and captured Deneau's high one. No runs, hits, or errors.

Peterborough — Blount walked for the third time in succession and went to second on a wild pitch. Byrne sacrificed Nickells to Roth. Welsh singled through short, the ball bouncing over Forgue's head, Blount scoring. Welsh was out stealing, Lacroix to Forgue. Stewart singled over Roth's head. Rooney flied to Burns. One run, two hits, no errors.

Fifth Innings.

Brantford — Ivers singled to right, the first hit off Schettler. Taylor forced Ivers, King to Fox, a nice play by the second baseman. Roth fanned. Forgue drove a liner to Blount.—No runs, one hit, no errors.

Peterborough—King fanned. Fox doubled to right, his by dropping between Ivers and Taylor. Miller grounded to Roth, Fox going to third Schettler grounded to Forgue.—No runs, one hit, no errors.

Sixth Innings.

Brantford — Lacroix grounded to King, a nice play by the second baseman. Nickells singled to first, Rooney making a nice stop. Burns singled through short. Nelson fanned. Deneau singled over second, scoring Nickells. Ivers forced Deneau, Fox to King. One run, three hits, no errors.

Peterborough — Blount doubled to left centre. Byrne sacrificed, Ivers to Roth. Welsh secred Blount with a long sacrifice fly to Burns. Stewart fanned.—One run, one hit, no errors.

Seventh Innings.

Brantford—Taylor flied to Blount. Roth hoisted to Fox. Forgue went out the same way.—No runs, hits or errors.

Peterborough—Rooney singled over second. King sacrificed. Nickell to Roth. Fox singled to centre, scoring Rooney. Miller scratched a hit on a high one, which dropped back of Roth. Schettler hit into a double, Forgue to Roth to Ivers.—One run, three hits, no errors.

Eighth Innigs.

Brantford — Lacroix grounded to King. Nickell flied to Byrne. Miller made a nice catch of Burns' foul.—No runs, hits or errors.

Peterborough—Blount grounded to Roth. Byrne flied to Burns. Welsh popped to Nelson.—No runs, hits or errors.

Ninth Innings.

Brantford—Nelson scratched a hit on a pop fly back of the box which no one tackled. Nelson advanced on a wild pitch. Deneau singled to right scoring Nelson. Ivers flied to Blount. Taylor doubled to right, scoring Deneau. Byrne made a nice catch of Roth's foul, juggling the ball, but holding it. Forgue fanned. Two runs, three hits, no errors.

Notes

Nickell was handed a warm reception.

Only one Brant reached first in the first five innings.

There were some fluke hits. Miller got one on a high fly back of third, which was apparently going foul. The wind got hold of it, however, and carried it into fair terirtory. Miller did not run until the ball dropped. Nelson got an easy one in the ninth when his pop fly dropped safely among Schettler, Rooney, King and Fox. Any one of the four could have got it.

Stewart and Miller had three hits, while Blount drew three passes and hit a double in five times up.

BASEBALL

Hamilton Spectator: Doc Reisling is one who is strong for the Canadian League. He thinks the circuit is one of the strongest in minor league circles. Speaking of the league yesterday he said: "There is not a minor league in the country making as good a showing at the present time as the Canadian league. This is a bad year for baseball generally, and nearly every club in the country is losing money. Up here, however, the clubs are going along well and to my mind the Canadian league will develop into one of the strongest minor league circuits in the National association. There are going to be some radical changes to some of the leagues shortly, and these will only work to the advantage of this circuit. The Canadians are the best of sports, and there is a great future for the Canadian league."

Reisling also went on to say that Erie was the weakest town in the circuit, it being his opinion that the trouble there was mainly due to the fact that the franchise was held by an outsider. It was his belief that Owner O'Neil would do well to dispose of the franchise to Erie parties as there is no doubt but that such a move is desired.

London Free Press:— The Saints are playing the most aggressive game in the league just now and are close to the top. Their pitchers are going well, while Craven, Kustus, Kading and Nevitt are hitting hard and timely. If they do not crack there's bound to be trouble

ENJOY IT

Mrs. W. Mitchell, Wentworth Co., Ont.

Although I am a farmers' wife and therefore a busy woman, I appreciate the fact that busy and all as we are, our work need not deprive us from enjoying the glorious summer weather. If other farmers' wives are like myself they will feel that of late the summer seasons have been so short that we like to be out in the fresh air as much as possible. I find that I canot spend a great deal of my time sitting outside and enjoying the beauties of summer, so for the last two or three years have arranged my work that I do as much as possible out of doors.

We have a good sized veranda opening off our kitchen and my husband put wire screening around this to keep out the flies. In fine weather we use this veranda as a dining room and altbough it may make a few extra steps for me I feel amply repaid as we all enjoy our meals outside so much. I always plan to reduce my steps to a minimum, however, by using trays to carry the food and dishes to and from the veranda.

I also make use of this veranda when I am ironing, preparing the vegetables for dinner, as a sewing room, and find many other uses for it every day.

During the day and evenings we use our veranda also as a sitting room, there being plenty of room for a couch and some easy chairs, as well as the sewing machine and dining table.

A very pleasing feature about this out-of-doors living room is that much wear and tear is saved on other parts of the house, thus reducing sweeping, dusting and cleaning considerably.

I believe we women on the farm are all apt to take life too seriously and feel that we have no time for anything but work. If we would plan to make our work as pleasant as possible and mix in some fun and recreation also, we would have better health, better spirits and happier homes. —Farm and Dairy.

St. Thomas Team Will Be Here To-morrow

The Petes will have a real battle on their hands to-morrow when the St. Thomas team will make their first appearance of the season here. The Saints, under the leadership of Midge Craven, have been going at a great clip and are picked by Rube Deneau Doc. Reisling and other Managers as most dangerous contenders for the pennant. They have a fine pitching staff in Hughey, Clement, Howick, and Riley, a good catcher in Nevitt, and a fine outfield, while the inner guard is said to be the highest priced and most classy in the League. Tomorrow's and Friday's games will start at 4.15 o'clock and Saturday's battle at 3 p.m.

GRAND TRUNK INAUGURATES IMPORTANT NEW TRAIN SERVICES THIS MONTH

The International Limited Eastbound is Established—With Last Word in Equipment this Train will use the Famous Dundas Valley and Burlington Bay Route on the Way from Chicago to Montreal, reducing Journey by three hours — Many other new Trains.

When the summer time-tables of the Grand Trunk Railway System take effect on June 28th, very important improvements will be introduced, particularly on the main line between Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton, London, Detroit and Chicago.

Double Track All the Way.

The Grand Trunk having a double track all the way between Montreal and Chicago, have arranged their new services to take full advantage of this fact. The International Limited westbound from Montreal at 9 a.m., reaching T[illegible] 4.30 p.m., Detroit 9.55 p.m. [illegible]day, and Chicago next morning at 8 a.m., is to have a sister service in the opposite direction—The International Limited—Eastbound. This train will leave Chicago at 5.45 p.m. daily, Detroit 11 p.m., Toronto 9 a.m., and arrive Montreal 5.45 p. m. The departure from Chicago will be two hours and forty-five minutes later than the present service and passengers will reach Montreal fifteen minutes earlier than at present, thus reducing the time taken o nthe journey by three hours.

Observation — Library — Drawing Room — Compartment Cars, will be operated on The International Limited from Chicago to Toronto via the famous Dundas Valley and Burlington Bay, near Hamilton. New and most attractive panoramic views of these scenic and excusive features of the Grand Trunk route have been securedand will be used extensively in the form of large framed pictures for office windows and in the illustrated literature of the Grand Trunk to attract tourists from the United States for a trip through Canada. To The International Limited, Westbound from Montreal, a similar type of observation car will be attached at Toronto, runnig through to Chicago. These new observation cars will be known as the "Dundas Valley" and "Burlington Bay" respectively.

Great Improvement an Night Service

The night Limited train now leaving Montreal at 10.30 p.m. will leave at 11 p.m. and run via the Junction Cut and Burlington Bay, just west of Hamilton, reaching Detroit 1.45 p. m. and Chicago 8.40 p.m. This train, leaving Montreal half an hour later than at present and reaching Chicago forty-five minutes earlier, will save the traveller on hour and a quarter between Montreal, the metropolis of Canada, and Chicago, the metropolis of the western United States.

For the special accommodation of passengers from Montreal to Hamilton, St. Catharines, Niagara Falls, Buffalo, and other stations to the south and east of Hamilton, a standard drawing room sleeping car will be attached to the 11 p.m. train from Montreal and this will go forward from Toronto at 8.10 a.m. immediately following the Chicago train.

Later Departure from Toronto.

The train at present leaving Toronto for Detroit and Chicago at 11 p.m., via Stratford, will, under the new service, leave Toronto at 11.45 p.m., daily, and run via Hamilton, reaching Detroit at 8 a.m., and Chicago 3 p.m. next day. This is designed to give the passengers the entire evening in Toronto, yet allowing them to reach Detroit in time for breakfast, and Chicago at an hour that will assure connections with all principal trains for St. Paul, Minneapolis, Winnipeg and Western Canada, Colorado, California and other Pacific Coast destinations. The railways west of Chicago operate their finest trains from that City between five and seven p.m. This train from Toronto will also have very desirable connections from stations in Eastern, Northeastern and Northern Ontario.

Another later departure will be the night Limited from Toronto, which will leave at 11 p.m. instead of 10.30 p.m., and will arrive in Montreal at 7.30 a.m., instead of 7.40 a.m.

For Summer Resorts.

Extra summer trains will be inaugurated from Toronto to the resorts in the "Highlands of Ontario". A most important improvement will be made in the service to and from the Algonquin Provincial Park of Ontario. The express train from Buffalo 8.05 a.m. heretofore operated via Niagara Falls to Toronto, Muskoka Wharf, and Huntsville, will this summer be continued through to the "Highland Inn," at the Algonquin Park Station, the official headquarters of the Park, which comprises 2,500,000 acres. Algonquin Park will be reached in the early evening and a corresponding return service will leave the Park Station after breakfast reaching Toronto about 4 p.m. and Buffalo about 8 p.m., with direct connection for Pittsburg via the Pennsylvania Railroad for Cleveland, via fine night steamers of the Cleveland and Buffalo Line and for New York, Philadelphia, etc., in connection with the Lehigh Valley System. A sleeping car service will also be introduced leaving Toronto late at night, reaching the Park early next morning and returning from the Park early next morning and returning from the Park in the evening, arriving in Toronto in time for breakfast. This service will give splendid connections to and from the log cabin camps which the Grand Trunk are providing a short distance from Park headquarters. "Nominigan Camp" was opened last summer and much apreciated, particularly by visitors from the United States. The new camp known as "Camp Minnesing, (meaning in Ojibway language "Island") will be opened about July 1st.

New trains will also be inaugurated from Toronto to other resort regions of Ontario, including the Thirty Thousand Islands of the Georgian Bay, Muskoka Lakes, Lake of Bays and Timagami, the latter being in the centre of a great Ontario Government Forest Reservation and ony a short distance from the famous Cobalt Mines.

A Parlour - Library - Buffet service will be inaugurated between Montreal, Ottawa, Algonquin Park and the Georgian Bay at Depot Harbour, (Parry Sound).

A new summer service was inaugurated on June 22nd, between Montreal and seaside resorts at and reached through New England, Conn. via the Central Vermont Lines.

New summer services will also be established on June 28th via the Delaware Hudson Railway and the steamers of that line on Lakes Champlain and George, thence to Albany, New York City and other points.

An extra high-class service has just been inaugurated between Toronto and Sarnia Wharf three times a week connecting with the Steamers "Noronic," "Hamonic," and "Huronic" of the Northern Navigation Company. This constitutes the Grand Trunk rail and lake route between Eastern and Western Canada, linking up with the new and improved service of the Grand Trunk Pacific between Fort William, Winnipeg and beyond.

A new sleeping car service was also put into operation on June 22nd, between Toronto and Kingston Wharf, making direct connections with the Richelieu and Ontario Steamers. From June 28th this service will leave Toronto at 11 p.m., connecting at Kingston Wharf in the morning with the steamers that left Toronto at 6 p.m. the previous evening, thus enabling tourists who arrive from Chicago, Detroit, Buffalo, Niagara Falls, etc., to spend the entire day and evening in Toronto and without any loss of time enjoy all of the trip through the Thousand Islands and the Rapids of the St. Lawrence River on their way to Montreal.

For the accommodation of tourists using the Grand Trunk service between Chicago, Montreal and Quebec on the way to the Atlantic Coast resorts a summer sleeping car service will commence on June 28th, leaving Quebec in the evening and reaching Portland, Maine, for breakfast on the following morning. A similar service will be operated in the evening from Portland for the convenience of tourists from New England who will be enabled to reach Quebec in the morning ready for an inspection of the Citadel City and its most interesting environment.

TO-DAY'S STOCK MARKET

Special Wire to The Examiner:

NEW YORK, June 24.— The Supreme court inter-mountain and other decisions centralising rate making authority in the I.S.C.C., convey distinctly the idea that reasonable ness, not only to the shipper, but to the railroads themselves, is the key note by which the rate decision is to be solved in the final analysis.

The power of the I.S.C.C. is so great, according to the Supreme court, that it may make exception to the long and short haul requirements, in favour of the roads, presumably to meet water competition so much dreaded by the carriers.

In the judgment of a practical rate maker this whole rate question has grown too unwieldy and intricate properly. It requires a central trib properly. tI requires a central tribunal unhandicapped by transportation partisanship, one with supreme authority, such a condition is now established.

The I.S.C.C. has been raised to a rank next in importance, as both a primary and judicial body to the U S. Supreme court. Its personal will come higher in quality.

The market is a purchase on a scale down for Union Pacific and S. Pac., Utah Copper(Atch., and G.G.W. Pfd., are being taken on recessions. Pittsburg Coal Pfd., is being suggested as likely to go higher on back dividend reports.

CHOICE RECIPES

Mrs. Cora B. Williams

Strawberries and pineapples are about the first of the early fruits to demand our attention. They are delicious in flavor and a great addition to the contents of the fruit closet.

Strawberries require care in canning in order to have them keep perfectly. A good rule is to allow three-quarters of a pound of sugar to each pound of the berries, placing them in a flat jar or dish and allowing them to stand until the juice is drawn from them. Pour the juice into the preserving kettle, let it come to a boil and skim. Then put the berries carefully into the hot juice and as soon as they boil well, put them into well sterilized glass jars and seal. If the berries are desired hot as sweet allow one-half pound of sugar to one pound of berries.

Another rule is to allow one teacupful of sugar and two quarts of strawberries to one can, and proceed the same with the preparation and canning.

MILD STRAWBERRY JAM

To make mild strawberry jam, to every pound of berries allow one-half pound sugar. Jam the berries and cook one-half hour. Then add the sugar and boil five minutes. If you do not wish to jam the berries, stand the kettle with fruit and sugar on back of stove and heat slowly to start the juice, then cook. Strawberries put up in this way are excellent for shortcakes. If cooked for jam it should be sealed.

A rich strawberry jam that will keep without sealing may be made by allowing equal weights of berries and sugar. Crush the berries, add sugar and cook ten minutes, then turn into tumblers and cover with melted paraffin.

STRAWBERRY PRESERVES

Strawberry preserves are fine. Allow equal weights of sugar and berries. Put the berries and sugar in the preserving kettle in layers. Do not attempt to preserve a very large amount at a time. Heat slowly to the boiling point, skim and boil ten minutes. Pour the cooked preserves into a large platter and set it in a sunny window for three or four hours to plump the berries and thicken the syrup. When cold put into tumblers.

Pineapples may be canned as any other fruit, cutting it into small pieces and adding plenty of sugar to make it sweet. It keeps well and is delicious.

CANNED RHUBARB

Although rhubarb is not classed with the fruits it takes the place of fruit in many instances, and is very good and wholesome. It is nice canned with raspberries, using half and half. Put the rhubarb on to cook without water (a little may be added if necessary), heating slowly until the juice starts, and adding sugar to sweeten. Then add the raspberries, cook and seal.

To make rhubarb jam, cut stalks into small pieces and add one pound sugar to one of rhubarb. Let stand until the juice is started, then cook down to the desired consistency, stirring constantly. It may be cooked in the oven to save the labor of stirring. Pour into small jars or tumblers.

A DELICIOUS RHUBARB PREPARATION

Rhubarb conserve is another nice preparation. Use one quart of rhubarb cut into small pieces, the juice and pulp of one orange, the rind of one orange cut into strips and sugar to taste. Cook and seal.

To make rhubarb marmalade take three pounds of nice tender rhubarb cut into small pieces without peeling. Place it in a preserving kettle, add two and one-half pounds of sugar and let stand four or five hours until a syrup has formed. Add the grated rind and juice of one small lemon, and one-half pound of figs, chopped. Simmer two hours or more, being careful not to scorch. Seal.

Cherries make a delicious preserve. Make a thick syrup, add the cherries, pitted, and simmer till clear and tender. Preserved cherries and pineapple also are a favorite with many. Make a rich syrup, add the shredded pineapple, cook till clear then add pitted cherries and simmer a few minutes till done.—Farmers' Review.

"Yis, sor, Oi did," said Pat. "Did you read it?" "Sure, sor. I read it inside and I read it outside," said Pat, "and on the inside you said I was fired and on the outside you said 'Return to Baldwins Locomotive Works in five days.'"

Fishermen's Language.

A correspondent of the English magazine, Country Life, has been studying the vocabulary of Hastings fishermen. He says: "Where there is a dead calm with the air hot and moist, the weather is said to be 'planety.' If it is oppressively sultry with a heavy sky and oily sea it is 'swallocky,' and presages a storm, which often breaks suddenly with a roaring squall. A long loop at cloud with trailing ends is designated an 'eddenbite,' blown out streamers of white cloud are 'windegs,' large westerly-like clouds scurrying before a high wind are 'mesmengers,' small, widely scattered clouds floating in an otherwise clear sky, are 'postboys.' Occasionally, when the sun is setting, a mock sun is seen on each side of the solar disk. This phenomenon goes by the name of 'smitherdiddles' and is regarded as a sign of bad weather. A thick, soaking mist, moving rapidly from the land over the sea, is called an 'egger jagger.'"

The Plain of Curragh.

The Curragh (a plain in the County Kildare, Ireland) is a stretch of open ground of about 4,500 acres and serves the twin purposes of a large military camp and a race course, and in the latter capacity it has a reputation extending as far back as the first century A. D., at which period, if records may be accepted, chariot races were a diversion which the people of the time permitted themselves. The camp only dates from the Crimean war. The plain of Curragh was often the scene of hostile engagements between early Irish kings, and it is St. Bridget who is credited with having received a grant of the district from the king of Leinster and with having turned it into a common. The young men of Kildare are often jokingly described as "the boys of the short grass" in allusion to the heritage of the district of Curragh. —Westminster Gazette.

Labor Conditions Bad.

MONTREAL, June 25. — "The industrial conditions all over Canada are in a deplorable condition, many are starving because they cannot get a chance to earn even the bare necessities to sustain life, and never in the history of Canada did things look so bad for the workers.

Such was the statement made yesterday by J. C. Watters, president of the Trades Congress of Canada.

DIVERS TRY AGAIN

Another Attempt Begins to Salvage Bodies From Empress

BUILDER ON THE STAND

QUEBEC, June 25.—The explanation of all the suggestions that have been made during the enquiry in the wreck of the Empress of Ireland about the vessel's steering gear came out yesterday afternoon at the enquiry of the Dominion Commission, when Percy Hillhouse of the Fairfield Shipbuilding Co., which constructed her, explained how, after an accident to it in 1908, one foot was added to the Empress' rudder area to improve her steering qualities.

Mr. Hillhouse gave the first adequate explanation of the actual injuries to the Empress and his telling of the water rushing through a wound of 328 square feet at the rate of 260 tons a second gave a clear cut impression of how it came about that the liner listed over quickly and shortly afterwards capsized.

Another noteworthy feature was the evidence of Gunner Wilfrid Whitehead, the diver from H. M. S. Essex, who, in addition to inspecting the hull of the Empress risked his life in an effort to save that of Edward Cossboon, the American diver, who died from injuries received at the wreck. The announcement that Whitehead was to appear brought hundreds of women to the court, including several from the entourage of the Duchess of Connaught and Princes Patricia, one of whom sketched him.

Whitehead was very modest and beyond mentioned that he had "gone down to the wreck on Sunday in an emergency" made no reference to his courageous, if unsuccessful, effort to raise Cossboon before it was too late.

Whitehead and other divers from the wreck were ordered from the court to the scene of the wreck after a conference between Captain Walsh, marine superintendent of the C. P. R., and Captain Watson of the cruiser Essex, when it was decided to make one more attempt to get the 500 bodies entombed in the Empress' hull.

Burglars Rounded Up at Montreal.

MONTREAL, June 25.—With the arrest of four men here yesterday the police believe they have members of an international gang of burglars who for the past few months have been terrorizing the city, and who are known to have committed thirty-seven extensive burglaries in the last two weeks.

Not Enough Bibles.

KINGSTON, June 25. — Kingston bookstores were unable to supply the Frontenac returning officer with enough Bibles for pollings booths. Only twenty-two could be found, and Warden Kennedy, returning officer, had to wire to Toronto for nineteen more copies of the good book.

The other twenty defendants, including the leaders, must begin serving their sentences to-day in Leavenworth penitentiary.

Clemency for John H. Harry and Paul J. Morris, both of St. Louis, was withheld while they have an opportunity to submit separate petitions.

GIVES THRONE TO SON.

Peter of Servia Virtually Abdicates Because of Illness.

BELGRADE, June 25—King Peter I. of Servia was reported yesterday to have abdicated the throne in favor of his second son, Prince Alexander.

The King left Belgrade in the afternoon for the baths at Vranya, in the southern part of Servia, and a note issued by the official agency in announcing the King's departure, did not say he had abdicated, but confined itself to the statement that His Majesty had signed a ukase entrusting the Government of Servia during his absence from the capital to Crown Prince Alexander.

Prince Alexander was born on Dec. 4, 1888. He has hitherto been very popular among the Servians. He was educated in St. Petersburg, and is of a studious and refined temperament.

George, the eldest prince, who in 1909 renounced his claim to the throne, did so because of the fault openly found, even in the National Assembly, with his dissolute manner of living. At the time, threats were also heard that Peter might meet the fate of his predecessor.

King Peter, born in 1846, is a grandson of the Servian patriot, George Czerny, surnamed Kara-georgre, or Black George. On the assassination of King Alexander I. and his consort, Queen Draga, by army officers on June 11, 1903, the officers who perpetrated the murder invited Peter to ascend the throne. Shortly afterwards, he restored the constitution of 1889, which had been abrogated in 1894.

RAISING SIDE ISSUES.

Government Working Hard To Evade Question, Says Mr. Rowell.

WINGHAM, June 25.—Mr. N. W. Rowell's arrival here last night, after a busy day of speeches at Exeter and Clinton, brought out the Liberals and Temperance people in full force, and an audience of over a thousand assembled in the skating rink.

"The liquor interests are scared as they have never been, and the Government also are scared as they have never been," said Mr. Rowell, "They know that Ontario is against the bar, and unless they can turn your thoughts away from that upon which you have set your hearts they are going down to defeat by the bar by which they have stood. So they are introducing all kinds of side issues into this contest, if possible to save the Government and the bar."

Dealing with the assertion that he was insincere, Mr. Rowell remarked: "The liquor traffic has no doubt on that score. They would not put up their hundreds and thousands of dollars in this fight if they thought I was insincere. They don't waste their money in that way."

FIRE AT WINDSOR

Heavy Damage Done to Rink and Other Buildings

LOSS IS PLACED AT $75,000

WINDSOR, Ont., June 25.—Fire of unknown origin, breaking out at three p.m. yesterday totally destroyed the Windsor curling rink, the big supply house and barn of the Cadwell Sand & Gravel Co. and a number of barns and houses, and badly damaged the newly-erected $30,000 Oddfellows' temple, and a number of houses and stores in the vicinity. In a number of instances persons were compelled to leap from second storeys. The firemen going to a wrong address allowed the blaze to get a good start. Fortunately the wind was not strong.

The scene of the fire is just off Ouellette avenue, four blocks from the Detroit River dock. The damage is estimated at $75,000.

William Bolton, 97 Goyeau street, was one of the first to go to the aid of the firemen. He rushed into the burning barn of the Cadwell Sand & Gravel Co. on Dufferin place, and, placing his coat about the head of a pony, led it to safety. He then ran into the house at 18 1-2 Dufferin place, across the street from the Curling Club, and assisted Mrs. Reginald Ingram to carry out her 15-months-old boy, who was ill.

Carrying their household goods to a safe distance, the residents of Ouellette avenue, Goyeau and Wyandotte streets, and Dufferin place directed streams from garden hose on the roofs of the houses. Bucket brigades and battering rams were used to advantage. Low pressure from the waterworks seriously handicapped the firemen in their work. In many places the water could not be thrown ten feet from the nozzles. Firemen working on a two-story barn were forced to carry hose to the roof in order to play the stream into the loft.

Ten Stores Burned.

NIAGARA FALLS, June 25.—Ten stores adjoining one another in the Laing Block on Clifton avenue were destroyed by fire yesterday afternoon. The block, which is a frame one-storey building facing Clifton avenue and Park street, consists of twenty stores.

Small Fire In Senate Wing.

OTTAWA, June 25.—The quiet of Parliament Hill was suddenly broken yesterday afternoon by an alarm of fire. A gasoline stove in use by some electricians in the Senate wing of the Parliament Buildings exploded, and started a fire and considerable excitement. Officials hastily put valuable Parliamentary records in vaults. Meanwhile a chemical engine from the nearest fire station dashed up, followed by other clanging fire reels, hook and ladder wagons, etc. The blaze was speedily extinguished by the first firemen on the scene. The damage was slight.

BILL IS GENEROUS.

One-Tenth of Electors In Ulster Counties May Secure Poll.

LONDON, June 25. — The Irish amending bill which had now been issued shows that the Government proposes to be rather more generous than might have been at first inferred from Lord Crewe's statement. This refers to the provision of the first clause, which says that if within three months after the date of the passing of the act a petition is presented to the Lord Lieutenant from any county in Ulster demanding a poll with reference to the question of temporary exclusion from the operation of the act, and the Lord Lieutenant is satisfied that the petition is signed by not less than one-tenth of the Parliamentary electors in the county, he shall cause a poll to be taken. The question shall be submitted to the electors in the following form: "Are you in favor of exclusion from the operation of the Government of Ireland act of 1914 for a period of six years?"

An Early Election Prophesied.

LONDON, June 25.—The Dublin papers yesterday mostly follow the usual party lines in discussing the Home Rule amendment bill, though The Independent is suspicious that the Government is weakening. The Irish Times declares a general election is assured within a few weeks.

The Belfast News Letter says the latest move is a bid for a bargain, but that Unionists must refuse to haggle. The Northern Whig insists on total exclusion for Ulster for an unlimited period.

Ex-Alderman Goes To Trial.

MONTREAL, June 25.—Ex-Alderman Judge was committed yesterday by Judge Leet for trial at the Court of King's Bench in September on a charge of perjury. The accused was a member of the City Council of Montreal last year, and the alleged perjury was in connection with evidence given by him before Justice Fortin last fall at the judicial inquiry into the city's land deals. It was on Justice Fortin's report that the charge was laid.

Zacatecas Is Captured.

EL PASO, June 25. — Zacatecas, an important city of Central Mexico, fell into the hands of the Constitutionalists at sundown Tuesday, according to announcement last night by Gen. Villa's official here. Two of Villa's generals were wounded.

The Constitutionalist losses were heavy according to official despatches.

Memorial Asks Government To Set Field Aside.

ST. CATHARINES, June 25.—Representatives of historical societies, Daughters of the Empire, and the United Empire Loyalist Association, and numerous residents of the surrounding districts celebrated the 101st anniversary of the Battle of Beaver Dams at Thorold yesterday afternoon. The 12th York Rangers, under Lt.-Col. Nichol, marched in front of the monument, erected to the fallen heroes.

Addresses were given by Mayor Battle and F. E. Keefer of Thorold, grandson of the founder of Thorold, to whose memory a window was unveiled at St. John's Church by Lt.-Col. G. Sterling Ryerson, of Toronto, president of the United Empire Loyalist Association of Canada, and Clarence Warner of Napanee, president of the Ontario Historical Society. A resolution was passed for submission to the Minister of the Interior, calling upon the Government to set aside 40 acres of the Government land, part of the old battlefield, for an historical park, Major Leonard, Dominion Transcontinental Railway Commissioner, who is a lessee of a part of it having expressed a willingness to surrender his rights for this purpose.

A memorial from the Six Nation Indians was presented by Chief Smith, referring to the tribe's allegiance and fighting support of the British Government since the time of Frontenac, asking for the franchise, right of representation in Parliament and appealing to the societies to urge against any move to do away with the reservations.

Tornado In South Dakota.

CHICAGO, June 25. — Tuesday night's wind storms in the Western States caused no loss of life.

The storm was most severe at Watertown, S.D., where it reached the proportions of a tornado, destroyed buildings over thirty blocks, and injured 22 persons.

Wires are down in Wisconsin, Minnesota, parts of Iowa, South Dakota and the upper peninsula of Michigan.

Man Dead; Woman Detained.

STAMFORD, Conn., June 25.—Waldo R. Battou, aged about 70, former member of the City Council, died early yesterday of a fracture of the skull. Mrs. Helen M. Angle, aged 40, a divorced woman, with whom he was acquainted, is held pending inquiries.

ECZEMA ON THE HEAD
Mr. Peterson, South Bay, Ont. writes: "For years I suffered a sore of eczema on the head. I tried four different doctors, giving each a fair trial, but the disease grew worse and spread to my arm. I got Dr Chase's Ointment, and it has entirely cured me. I give you my name because I want other sufferers to know about this splendid Ointment."

HINDUS PERSISTENT

Lawyers For Orientals Seek to Upset Exclusion Order

NO CHANGE AT OTTAWA

VANCOUVER, B.C., June 25.—Apparently the Government intends to have the legal end of the Hindu controversy fully threshed out in the courts. Yesterday morning there was another formal announcement in court of an adjournment of the mandamus proceedings brought by counsel for the Hindus to compel the immigration officials to give decisions on examination of immigrants in order that these decisions might then be in case for appeal to the courts. Up to the present there has been no right of appeal on habeas corpus, because no decisions were given. Yesterday morning, however, a conference between counsel was held, and it was virtually decided for both sides to proceed immediately to a test of the law in the highest courts.

It looks, too, as if the Hindus would be kept aboard the Komagata Maru for many weeks to come, for the officials will not consent to even a temporary landing of the men.

No Likelihood of Change.

OTTAWA, June 25.—A story gained currency yesterday to the effect that the Canadian Government would defer to the wishes of the British Government regarding the Hindus, and admit to British Columbia the 350 East Indians on board the Komagata Maru, the Japanese vessel, which is still in Vancouver. In the absence of the Premier, who is at Petawawa military camp, it was impossible last night to get any official statement regarding this rumor. However, among the officers of the Immigration Department, the story was treated with scant consideration.

One official said that the feeling against the Hindus was so strong in Vancouver that if the Government gave orders to allow the Hindus to land, serious rioting would follow.

The statement made by the Government a few days ago was that the Hindus would not be allowed to land in Canada and nothing has transpired since which would lead to the view that there would be any relaxation of the order barring them out.

COMMISSION IS BUSY.

Good Progress Being Made In Georgian Bay Canal Inquiry.

OTTAWA, June 25.—W. Sanford Evans, chairman of the commission investigating the feasibility of the Georgian Bay Canal, is here this week in connection with the preliminary work of the commission, and he states that excellent progress has been made by the staff who are gathering statistical information regarding the volume of traffic for the proposed canal route and the present rates on freight. Some thirty thousand freight manifests have been examined and much other information is now being got together. A meeting of the commission will probably be held this week.

The commission's instructions call for an exhaustive enquiry into every phase and feature of the commercial side of the great project, which is estimated to cost $125,000,000.

Besides going thoroughly into the traffic question, they will consider also the waterpower that would be made available and the natural resources to be developed in the region of the canal.

AEROPLANES AT FUNERAL.

Twenty Air-Craft Accompany Cortege to the Cemetery.

VIENNA, June 25.—An escort of twenty aeroplanes, flying mourning flags and manned by aviators from several nations, formed a flying guard of honor at the burial yesterday of the nine Austrian officers and men killed in the tragic air catastrophe a few miles from Vienna on Saturday.

An enormous concourse of people, including several archdukes, members of the Austrian Cabinet and foreign military attaches was present at the graveside.

While the funeral service was in progress the small air craft circled round and round the cemetery and then flew off in company.

Forgotten of Trouble Escapes.

GENEVA, Switzerland, June 25.—Enrico Malatesta, the Italian anarchist, whom the Italian Government has been seeking to arrest in connection with the recent revolutionary risings in Italy, has succeeded in making his escape.

Disguised as a workman, Malatesta made his way to the Swiss frontier, crossing the boundary at Chiasso. He remained in concealment for a time, and is now believed to be on his way to London.

Clutched by London Law.

LONDON, June 25.—Harvey Wilson (alias Captain Ansell), who has spent considerable time in Canada, has to take his trial on a charge of obtaining money under false pretences, through an alleged bogus concern called the Anglo-American Investment & Trust Co.

Storm Caught Fishermen.

Fighting continues in Albania, and the Mussulman insurgents, according to late advices, have captured Berat, 30 miles northeast of Avlona, and one other small town.

NEW CHARGE LAID.

Dr. Macklin and Rev. Mr. Elliott Accused of Conspiracy.

GODERICH, June 25.—The bribery charge against Dr. A. H. Macklin, Conservative candidate for Centre Huron, was dismissed by Magistrate Kelly yesterday on the ground that it was improperly laid and hence he had no jurisdiction.

A second charge was laid, Dr. Macklin and Rev. Joseph Elliott being accused of conspiracy.

Thomas Gundy, constable, claims that A. H. Macklin and Joseph Elliott did unlawfully, fraudulently, deceitfully among themselves conspire, combine, confederate and agree together to procure the election of A. H. Macklin unlawfully by bribery. The specific charges are of giving J. B. Hunter $10, Fred Weir $3, Peter Weir $3 and J. Mancil $5.

Evidence will not be taken until July 3.

Health and Beauty Helps

BY MRS. MAE MARTYN

DOLLY: I use a plain quinsoin tonic to give my scalp the health that insures hair beauty. This tonic is prepared at home by pouring 1 ounce quinsoin into ½ pint alcohol then adding ½ pint water. Rub a little well into your scalp twice a week for a time and all dandruff, hair falling and excess oil will disappear. I find this quinsoin tonic cannot be equalled for restoring the silky softness and rich, even colour to brittle faded hair, and this regular use will encourage a long luxuriant growth.

MRS. O'B.: Your surplus weight can be safely reduced with no ill after-effects by this simple treatment, which costs little and can be made at home into 1½ pints: hot water put 4 ounces parmoin, stir when cool and take a tablespoonful before meals. This dissolves fat rapidly without dieting or unusual exercising the parmoin treatment also leaves the flesh firm and the skin free from wrinkles.

GLADYS: Instead of pore-clogging powder I use a plain spurmax lotion, because one application is sufficient for an entire day or evening. This lotion adheres closely to the skin that it seems part of it, so cannot be detected, and it gives a very velvety appearance. To prepare just put 4 ounces spurmax into ½ pint hot water or witch hazel and add 3 teaspoonfuls glycerine. The use of this lotion banishes pimples, blackheads, blotches, and sallowness. It is particularly good for tan, freckles and oiliness of the skin.

MISS B.: For a small sum you can make a full quart of the very best blood purifier and system builder. Dissolve 2 ounces sarsbee in ½ pint alcohol (not whisky), then add ½ cupful sugar and hot water to make a full quart. Take a tablespoonful before meals. This rids the skin of pimples, blotches and muddiness and restores to the complexion the glow of youthful health. This sarsbee tonic is particularly recommended for kidney and bladder troubles and for rheumatic or gouty conditions, because it gently eliminates these poisons from the system and restores the sufferer to complete health.

MRS. A.: I have made my face look years younger by using this wrinkle-removing cream jelly, which I make at home by putting a tablespoonful glycerine into ½ pint cold water and stirring in 1 ounce almosoin after which I let stand several hours before using. I apply the cream jelly thickly on retiring and in the morning wash off, dry the skin and use more cream as a massage. This treatment rapidly eliminates wrinkles and lines and restores the clear, soft velvety smoothness to the skin and dispels the ugly, "muddy," shiny look.

BRIGHT EYES: Replying to your second letter, just dissolve 1 ounce crystos in a pint clear water and you will have a harmless and very beneficial eye-tonic. Two or three drops in each eye occasion ally relieves the smart and soothes the aching, tired muscles. The crystos eye tonic is excellent for granulated lids and its use frequently overcomes the need for glasses.

NANCY: For a long time I have claimed that the best way to cleanse the hair is to just moisten a teaspoonful of canthrox, which you can get in any drug store, in a cup hot water. This makes ready a shampoo that cleanses and invigorates the scalp and restores health and beauty to dull, straggly hair. You will find canthrox shampoos are especially fine for faded or brittle hair, and used sensibly shampooing in this manner makes the hair soft, fluffy and induces a beautiful growth.

"THE TERMS OF SURRENDER"

By Louis Tracy

"And her child? Is the child living?"

"Yes. Poor lady! She died in giving it birth. I remember now. It was a very sad business. Mrs. Marten was a remarkably beautiful woman. Her husband was inconsolable. He has not married again; but is devoted to his little daughter, who, by the way, was named after her mother—Nancy Willard Marten Ah, of course, that middle name reminds me of something else. Mrs. Marten's father, Francis Willard, was accidentally shot last year."

"Shot?"

"Yes. He was summering in the Adirondacks, and was out after duck; but, by some mischance, caught a trigger when crawling through a lump of rushes and blew the top of his head off."

"He was near a lake, then?"

"Yes. It wasn't Forked Lake, but a sheet of water in the hills not far distant. I can find out the exact locality if you wish it."

"No, thank you I am very much obliged to you?"

"No trouble at all. Sorry I hadn't better news, if these people are friends of yours."

So Willard was dead, and by his own hand, and the scene of his last reckoning was the lake which witnessed the ignoble revenge he had wreaked on Power by sacrificing Nancy! The broken man bowed his head humbly. He had been scourged with whips; but his sworn enemy had been chastised with scorpions.

CHAPTER XVII.
SHOWING HOW POWER MET A GUIDE.

If a man be harassed too greatly by outrageous fortune, there comes a time when he will defy the oppressing gods, and set their edicts at naught. Power's temperament fitted him for sacrifice carried far beyond the common limits of human endurance; but his gorge rose against this latest tyranny; the recoil from bright hope to darkest despair brought him perilously near the gulf. Seated in his room, and reviewing his wrecked life, he was minded then and there to fling himself into the worst dissipation New York could offer What had he gained by his self-imposed penance, his exile, and his unquestioning service? No monk of La Trappe had disciplined body and soul more rigorously than he during seven weary years; yet, seemingly, his atonement was not accepted, and he was faced now by a decree that entailed unending banishment. Was Providence, then, less merciful than man? The felon, convicted of an offence against his country's laws, was better treated than him. The poor wretch released from prison was met at the gates of the penitentiary by philanthropic offer of reinstatement among his fellows; but for the man who had yielded once to the lure of a woman's love there was, apparently, no forgiveness. Why should he accept any such inexorable ban? He was young, as men regard youth in these days. He was rich. The wine of life ran red in his veins. Why should he fold his arms and bend his head, and say with the meek Jesuit whose mouldering bones had harboured that beautiful volme lying there in it s leather covering. "Fiat voluntas Tua!"

That hour of revolt was the bitterest in Power's existence. Like Jacob, he wrestled with a foo potent adversary, and, refusing to yield, asked for a curse rather than a blessing; for he thought he was striving against a fiend. Fortunately, he underestimated his own strength. Some men, he knew, would have tossed every record of the past into the fire, and married the woman of their choice without other than a momentary qualm of conscience. That course, to him, was a sheer impossibility. While the dead Nancy and her living child stood in the gates of Eden, and option lay only between wedding Marguerite Sinclair and blowing out his brains, he would die unhesitatingly—But, if he continued to live, what was the outlook? Wine, women—debauchery, lewdness? His soul sickened at the notion. He laughed, with bitter humour, while picturing himself a roue, a "sport," an opulent supporter of musical comedy—especially with regard to its frailer exponents—a lounger in "fashionable" resorts. No; that was not the way out of the maze, if ever a way might be found.

It was a sign of returning sanity that he should fill his pipe. As the German proverb has it, "God first made man, and then He made woman; then, feeling sorry for man. He made tobacco." Power continued to sit there smoking, lost in troubled but more humbled thought, until a chambermaid entered the room. He had kept no count of time, and had evidently passed many hours in sombre musing; for the apartment was in semidarkness, and the girl started when she caught sight of the solitary figure sunk in the depths of an armchair.

"My land!" she cried, "but you made me jump!" Then, aware that this was not precisely the manner of address expected by the patrons of the Waldorf-Astoria, she added hurriedly, "I beg your pardon, sir, I didn't know you were in. Shall I switch on the light?"

"Can you?" he said.

"Why, of course, I can, There you are!"

The room was suddenly illuminated. Power rose and stretched his limbs—he felt as if he had marched many miles carrying a heavy load.

"Like others of your sex, you work miracles, then," he said.

One glance at his face, and the housemaid regained confidence. "Yes, if it is a miracle to touch a switch," she answered pertly.

"Nothing more wonderful was done when the world was created. 'Let there be light: and there was light.' You have read the first chapter of Genesis, I am sure?"

"Yes, and the second."

"Good! Stop there, if you would rest thoroughly content. The serpent lifts his head in the third. Will you kindly send the valet?"

The girl confided to her fellow-servants in the service-room that the gentleman in Number So-and-so was very nice, but slightly cracked. He seemed to have been upset by a lot of old letters—and it was an odd thing that among all the rich people who lived in the hotel none seemed to be really happy. Now, if she, deponent, only possessed a fraction of their wealth, she would enjoy life to the limit.

Power did not change his attire that evening. He dined quietly in the restaurant, and strolled out into Broadway afterward. The loneliness of a great city, at first so repellant, was grateful to him now. The crowded streets were more democratic than the palatial saloons of the hotel, the air more breathable. But the flood of light in the Great White Way—though blazing then with a subdued magnificence as compared with its bewildering lustre nowadays—was garish and harsh, and he turned into the sheltering gloom of a quiet side street. He was passing a row of red-stone houses—bay-windowed, austere abodes, with porches surmounting steep flights of broad steps—when he saw an old, old man seated at the foot of one of these outer stairways. In summer, at that hour, every step would be occupied by people gasping for fresh, cool air; but in the depth of winter it was courting disease and death for anyone, especially the aged, to seek such repose.

The unusual spectacle stirred Power out of his mournful self-communing.

Are you ill?" he said, halting in front of the patriarch.

"No, sorr," came the cheerful answer, and a worn, deeply lined face was raised to his with a smile that banished the ravages of time as sunlight gilds a ruin A street lamp was near, and its rays fell on features which had once been strong and massive, but were now mellowed into the rare beauty of hale and kindly age. Silvery hair, still plentiful, and dark, keen eyes from which gleamed the intelligence and sympathy every clean-souled man may hope to gain if his years stretch beyond the span allotted by the prophet, made up a personality which would have appealed to an artist in search of a model.

"But you are taking a great risk by sitting on cold stone," persisted Power.

"Sure, sorr, av it's the will o' God that I should die that way, it's as good as any other," said the ancient. "All doores ladin' to the next worruld are pretty much the same to me. I don't care which wan I take so long as it ladies me safe into Purgathory."

Never before had Power heard so modest a claim on the benevolence of the Almighty.

"Are you tired of life, then?" he asked.

"Sorra a bit am I! Why should I be? Wouldn't it be fixin' in the face o' Providence to say that I was tired of the sivinty-eight grand years I've spint in raisonable happiness an' the best o' health."

"I like your philosophy. It has the right ring. But it can hardly be the will of God that you should shorten the remainder of those years by resting on a doorstep in this weather."

"Young man," said the other suddenly, "how old are ye?"

"Thirty-five."

"Thorty-foive is it? An' ye stand there an' talk as though ye'd come down like Moses from the top o' Mount Sinai, an' had the worrld o' the Lord nately written in yer pocketbook. Sure, thim days is past entirely. God doesn't talk to His sarvints anny longer in that way."

"Tell me, then, how does He talk?"

"Faix, sorr, I'm on'y a poor ould man, an' it's not for the likes o' me to insthruct a gintleman like you; but, av I'm not greatly mistaken, you've heard His voice more than wance or twice in yer life already, an' yer own heart 'll tell you betther than I can what it sounds like."

"Friend, your eyes are clearer than mine. Still, it will please me if you get up, and let me walk a little way with you. Or, if you don't feel able to walk, allow me to take you to your destination in a cab."

His new acquaintance rose, nimbly enough. Then Power saw that he had been using a bundle of newspapers as a cushion.

IN DREAD OF CROUP

Every mother dreads croup unless she knows about Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. Given in frequent small doses, at the first indication of trouble, this treatment loosens the cough and affords relief and comfort. Its use should be kept up until the child is entirely recovered.

Westminster Abbey's Prisoner.

Observant visitors to Westminster abbey may have noticed in one of the groups of statuary near the north door of the edifice a remarkable arm on one of the figures. Not a few people have thought that it was an exaggerated model of a limb, but as a matter of fact it was actually modeled from the arm of a verger at the abbey, named John Burton, who at one time was champion prizefighter of England. Burton was the dean's verger, and on one occasion he was asked if he would like to be buried in the abbey. Burton replied in the affirmative and also asked that the fact that he was champion prizefighter of England should be inscribed on his tomb. To this the dean actually consented, but when the time came it was decided by the chapter that the inscription should be omitted. Burton, however, was buried in the abbey, although there is nothing on the tombstone to indicate who or what he was.—London Opinion.

Inhaling Spaghetti.

There is a popular belief to the effect that the Neapolitan eats his spaghetti by a deft process of wrapping thirty or forty inches round the tines of his fork and then lifting it inboard, an ell at a time. This is not correct. The true Neapolitan does not eat his spaghetti at all; he inhales it. He gathers up a loose strand and starts it down his throat. He then respires from the diaphragm, and, like a troupe of trained angleworms, that entire mass of spaghetti uncoils itself, gets up off the plate and disappears inside him—en masse, as it were—and makes him look like a man who is chinning himself over a set of bead portieres. I fear that we in America will never learn to siphon our spaghetti into us thus. It takes a nation that has practiced deep breathing for centuries.—Irvin S. Cobb in Saturday Evening Post.

Unfair Handicap.

Willie had resigned his position in the big bakery, where he labored in the pie department, and had gone to work in a carpenter's shop for smaller wages. The social investigator having heard about Willie questioned him.

"Aren't you sorry you left the bakery and came to this shop?" she asked kindly.

"No'm," Willie answered quickly.

"But you get less money."

"Yes'm."

"Well, what was the matter with the bakery?"

"'Twus this way," explained Willie. "It hurt my mouth. I wus in de pie part, de cherry pie part, an' I had to stone cherries. An' dey got a rule over there dat all de boys has to whistle all de time dey's workin', so as to show dey ain't eatin' no cherries."—Popular Magazine.

Classified.

Professor Porter, of a small New England college, sat ponderously in the chair devoted chiefly to the science of heredity. The Porters had been for generations men of abstruse scientific turn, bookish men. But the professor's small son, Tommy, hated his books cordially, much to his learned father's dismay. The professor looked ruefully at the teacher's report that Tommy had played hookey and destroyed his books.

"My dear," said the professor to his wife, "I am afraid that I must class Thomas as a true instance of aversion to type."

Hassall's Posters.

At a meeting recently Mr. John Hassall, the English artist, explained why Royal Academy pictures were inappropriate for posters. He said that at Hayling Island and Shoeburyness, when guns and limber had to be disguised, they were painted with all sorts of colors, and at 200 yards they were quite invisible. That showed why the poster should be simple.

Poster artists must not be disheartened when they took their work to the person who had ordered it. Barnum once ordered a big poster of his hand walking through a town, and he returned it to the painter because the latter had put only one side of the big drum on it.

"When I was very impressionable and rather expected to be kicked," Mr. Hassall proceeded, "I did a poster of 'Sindbad the Sailor.' The people I was doing it for said it was very nice, and all that, but rather too like John the Baptist. They said, 'You need not alter it. Everything is right, but do you mind if we just get one of our men to——' 'Not a bit,' I said. 'I am only too glad to get the half-crown for the design.'

"When it came out they had taken off John the Baptist's beard. He had a small coral locket on his neck, and he wore blue tights. I had a lot of difficulty in explaining that it was not my work, and they took out my name. But they had printed a few hundreds, which are still going about as curios."

Couldn't Remember His Star.

As illustrative of the fits of abstraction to which some men are subject in an extraordinary degree, Sir Henry Irving was fond of relating a story of his former manager, Charles Dillon. Some years after "The Bells" had made Irving famous he chanced to meet Dillon and was outspoken in his delight.

Dillon looked him over, finally remarking that he had no recollection of him. Irving reminded him of the tour they had made together and mentioned his name. Dillon thought for awhile, and, recognition appearing to dawn upon him, he extended his hand. "Irving? Oh, yes. I remember the name," he declared reminiscently. "And what are you doing now, Irving?"

Inadvisable.

During a snowstorm on the Highland railway a train was held up for an hour or so. The guard, a cheery Scot, passed along the carriages trying to keep up the spirits of the passengers. An old gentleman angrily complained that if the train didn't go on he would "die of cold."

"Tak' my advice an' no' dae that," replied the guard. "Min' y', we chairge a shillin' a mile for corpses."—Dundee Advertiser.

Skin Trouble On The Scalp

Skin Dried and Cracked and Hair Fell Out—Cured by Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Eczema is annoying and distressing at any time, but doubly so when it gets into the scalp and causes the hair to fall out. Here is a grateful letter from a lady who was cured by using Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Mrs. Hector Currie, Tobermory, Ont., writes:—"I was cured of a disagreeable skin disease of the scalp by using Dr. Chase's Ointment. The trouble started with itching and pain in the scalp, the skin would get dry and crack, and at times would bleed, and the hair would fall out. I tried three doctors without benefit, and suffered for three years. Reading in the almanac about Dr. Chase's Ointment, I began its use, and am now completely cured. The hair has grown again, and I am as well as I ever was. You are at liberty to use this letter, for I am glad to recommend so excellent a treatment.

Dr. Chase's Ointment has no rival as a cure for itching skin disease.

INSECT FREAKS.

Bugs That Carry Their Own Wireless Telegraphy.

The insect world includes thousands of little creatures which are puzzles no naturalists has yet been able to solve. The reason why they are so puzzling is the fact that attached to their bodies they have various strange appendages for which science can see no use.

One of the queerest of these puzzling bugs is the South American plant fly, which goes through life with strange flag-like expansions on each of its shins. What purpose, if any, these serve science has thus far been unable to find out. The closest observation fails to reveal that they are anything but a serious hindrance to the bug in getting around.

Another insect "freak" is the brentild beetle, found in South America. It has an extraordinary long and narrow head—longer, in fact, than all the rest of its body.

The male adler fly, from Central America, is equipped with enormous mandibles, which are of absolutely no assistance in feeding.

The blood-sucking sprout fly, which makes parts of Nubia uninhabitable for three months of the year, has a particularly long snout. Science wonders why, for it is no more bloodthirsty than some of its relatives which are short-nosed.

The "feelers" of the Scottish timberman beetle stretch out four times the length of its body, for no purpose whatever that science has been able to discover.

The most plausible explanation yet offered for these monstrous noses, long "feelers" and other anatomical monstrosities is that they constitute the apparatus by which these insects communicate with one another, much as human beings do by wireless telegraphy.

The long "feeders" of the timberman beetle may well be the wireless mast through which it picks up atmospheric vibrations set in motion by similar "feelers" on other beetles.

Won In Spite of His Lawyer.

A once well-known attorney used to tell a good story on himself. He had been retained to defend a counterfeiter and advised him to plead guilty. His client did so, and as there was in the mind of the court a fixed idea that if a prisoner pleads guilty he does so because he has no attorney the judge asked him why he made that plea.

"Because my lawyer told me to."

"Did he give you any reason for it?"

"Yes. He told me I would have no show before this judge."

The court flared up and ordered a plea of not guilty to be entered, and the counterfeiter was acquitted.

Munchausen II. Unlucky.

Who was the original Munchausen that told the delightful "stretchers?" Paupe is commonly supposed to have founded his hero upon Hieronymus Karl Friedrich von Munchausen, who had fought with the Russians against the Turks and died in 1797. But the Rev. S. Baring-Gould has told the story of a swindler who appeared at Halberstadt in 1702 giving out his name as Baron Karl Friedrich Munchausen. He married a wealthy lady there and told the most astonishing yarns of his travels and adventures. The rest of his career was short. In June, 1763, he murdered his wife, and in August he was executed.—London Chronicle.

Risky Revenge.

Paganini, the wonderful violinist, had a narrow escape at Ferrara from a violent death. Enraged by some hissing from the pit, he resolved to avenge the insult and at the close of his program informed the audience that he would imitate the language of various animals. After having rendered the note of different birds, the mewing of a cat and the barking of a dog he advanced to the footlights and, saying, "This is for those who hissed!" imitated the braying of an ass. At this the occupants of the pit rose, rushed on to the stage and would probably have killed their calumniator had he not hastily retreated.

Disenchanted.

"Do you believe in the superhuman?"

"I used to, but I don't any more."

"Why?"

"I married him."—Exchange.

Renewed Vigor In Old Age

This Letter Brings a Message of Cheer to the Aged—Results of Using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

New, rich blood is what is most needed in the declining years to keep up energy and vitality. That Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is a wonderful help in maintaining good health and prolonging life is attested by the writer of this letter.

Mr. Stephen J. Leard, North Tryon, P.E.I., writes:—"At seventy-five years of age my heart gave out and became very irregular and weak in action and would palpitate. My nerves also became weak, and I could do nothing but lie in bed in a languishing condition, losing strength and weight. In that condition I began using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and am cured. Had I not obtained this treatment I would now be in the box with the roof over my nose. At eighty-one I have an energy which means go, and I am writing this letter so that old people like myself may prolong their hearth and strength by using this great medicine." 50c a box, 6 for $2.50. Piano Strings.

The tone of a piano or of an individual string of the same will be higher in a cold room than in a warm one. The reason is not far to seek. A stretched string gives out a certain pitch only when it is of a certain length and a certain tension. This is shown in the laboratory by hanging weights on a string and plucking it. The more weight hung on the string the higher the note given out. Now, the strings of a piano are metal wires, all of which contract when cooled. As they are fastened at both ends, however, they remain the same length, but just tighten up—that is, the tension increases just as if an extra weight were hung on the end. Of course, the effect is not great save in a very cold room, but even a small variation in tone may be detected by a good musician. This is probably one reason why certain prima donnas always insist on singing in a room of a certain temperature, which, of course, is the temperature at which the piano was put in adjustment with their voices—or ought to be.—New York World.

Cyrus a Canal Builder.

In speaking of the river regulations of the ancients Sir William Willcocks the noted English engineer, said:

"Cyrus the Great controlled the Gyndes, a tributary of the Tigris, in a truly original manner. Babylonia was already peopled and lands were needed for his Persian troops. The Gyndes discharges 40,000 sectional feet and runs thirty feet deep in a sandy and mobile bed. He could build no regulator, so he dug thirty canals, divided the waters of the river among them, closed the river by an earthen dam and completely controlled it. As he could never have induced his wild soldiers to dig these canals for any useful purpose, he took advantage of the fact that his favorite horse had been drowned in the flood and urged his soldiers to dig the canals and dissipate the waters of the river in such a fashion that it could never again drown a horse.—Engineering Record.

Reversed.

This may be a new one to some of our readers: Enter into the only drink dispensary in the dusty town an engineer on an examination trip. A small crowd surrounds a happy looking prospector who is betting them up. One man informs our engineer, "Jim just struck the thin edge of an ore body on his Red mountain prospect today, and he's feeling mighty good." Then follows an introduction to Jim, who declares with emphasis, "Yes, sir, I am within just three feet of a million dollars." A year later, happening into camp again, our engineer encounters Jim, sitting dejectedly on a bench in front of the same dispensary. After a drink in reply to an inquiry about the great ore body Jim stated with sad emphasis, "Partner, I'm a million feet from $3!" — Engineering and Mining Journal.

Heat Between the Planets.

If there is any exchange of heat between the planets, no human device can measure it, for the bolometer cannot be increased in its delicacy sufficient to detect the minute amount. That is, the platinum wire—the nerve, more sensitive than human nerves, cannot be made any thinner and hold together in one. No influence of the planets upon each other has ever been detected by the most accomplished observers with the most sensitive instruments that can be made, besides two, gravitation and light. It must be that heat from the sun to the planets is absorbed by them, since none comes to the earth by reflection intense enough to be measured by an electric nerve thinner than a spider's thread.—New York American.

Family Boat of the Eskimo.

The oomiak may be described as the "family boat" of the Eskimo. It is used by the men in whale and walrus hunting and by the whole family during their annual summer trips, which they make to gather the winter store of fish and berries. Then it presents a spectacle not soon forgotten. Crowded to the gunwales with a mixed assortment of men, women, children and dogs, together with piles of provisions and hides and all the impediments of camping, it moves slowly along. A sail of white and colored drilling, sewn in alternate strips, or even of patched skins, assists the laboring vessel through the water. Some of the occupants paddle when they feel like it, others scan the shore or watch the water rippling from the stern. If progress is too slow even for the Eskimo the dogs are put ashore, a stout line of walrus hide is attached to the bow, and they tow the boat along. Such parties are away all summer, or, rather, during the three months' interval which is not winter—a brief, beautiful season of unending delight.—Wide World Magazine.

Shift Your Gears!

If I were going to attempt a sermon (and who does not feel himself capable of at least a couple?), my first text should be upon the theme, "Shifting Gears." I should begin with a pertinent illustration. It would be the picture of a motorcar and a long hill. You rise up the hill from the bottom and attempt it on the high gear. The grade proves to be steeper than at first thought. The engines begin to pound. But you have vowed to make the top on the high gear. By simply shifting over, with whatever reluctance, all would be well. Instead, you let the engine fret and throb, perhaps stall itself or wreck something, for your pride's sake. This the picture. Then the moral application (which every one has seen coming all along). "Now, good friends, isn't this just what we are trying to do? Are we not playing the foolish chauffeur and wearing out our engines needlessly, when we attempt to take all life's roads upon the high speeds? Shift your gears before it is too late."—R. P. Frost, in the Atlantic Monthly.

Thirsty Berlin.

A census taken in Berlin at the dullest time of the evening, between half past 5 and half past 6, showed that during these three hours ninety-eight drinking places were visited by 23,436 persons. It must not be supposed that there are only ninety-eight drinking places in Berlin. On the contrary, a single street, the Blumenstrasse, which contains only eighty-four houses, has forty saloons and an inn, and there is actually a street in East Berlin, the Madaistrasse, which, with only fifteen houses, has seventeen saloons and three hotels. There is very little drunkenness to be seen in the streets of Berlin, and one must stay up late to see that, but that is not because the thing is not abundant, but because the police will not tolerate any kind of disorder in public.—London Tatler.

An Interference

By JOHN Y. LARNED

"What's the matter, Billy?"

My sister Beth asked me the question one morning when I was sitting on the porch looking dreamily on the buds that were opening on the trees.

"Nothing," I replied.

"Yes; there is."

Beth and I were great chums. There was not much more than a year between us, and I was used to giving her my confidence about everything. I resolved to throw my burden upon her in this case.

"You know Alice Woodson"—

"Oh, a case of lovesickness."

I made no reply to this. I was sorry I had begun a confession.

"Go on, Billy," Beth added.

"I won't. You'll only poke fun at me."

"Not a bit of it. I'll help you. Don't you know that I, being a girl, know just how a girl should be treated to be won?"

"You can't tell me how to win Alice. In the first place, she's in love with Fred Perkins; in the second, she seems to have some sort of grudge against me, and in the third"—

"That's enough. You needn't tell me any more. Now, listen to me. I knew all about this before I asked what was the matter with you. I've been watching you and watching Alice, and I'm convinced she's playing you."

"What?"

"Playing you—a sort of cat and mouse business."

"Oh, bosh! For a week past she has treated me abominably and all the while has been looking up with her eyes at Fred like a"—

"Like a chick in a thunderstorm. Will you do what I tell you to do?"

"That depends upon what you tell me."

"The next time you meet Alice pretend to be thinking about something else and don't see her."

"That will make matters worse."

"Very well; if you won't take the medicine I prescribe, go your own road."

I concluded to try Beth's prescription. The next time I saw Alice coming I pretended to be absorbed in something else, and just before we were to come together I turned off in another direction. That was in the morning. In the afternoon of the same day we met again. I couldn't play the same game twice in the same day, so I looked at her. She looked at me, too, or, rather, she stared at me with a cold, blank, withering stare that froze the marrow in my bones. I went to Beth and abused her for getting me into such a pickle.

"You're as weak as watered milk. I'm sorry I tried to do anything for you. I couldn't love a man I could bluff like that."

"What would you want him to do?"

"Crush me like a worm."

"How crush you?"

"Will you simply do nothing so far as Alice is concerned and leave the rest to me?"

Since I felt entirely incapable of carrying on such a contest myself I agreed to this Fabian policy. During the next few days I kept out of Alice Woodson's way so far as I could. When I saw her coming toward me I changed my course. I tried not to look troubled or angry or anything in particular. I did my best to show no especial emotion while waiting for Beth to do something.

One day I met Alice face to face. She bade me good morning in a rather huffy tone. I replied to her salutation.

"I can understand now," she said, "your recent unfriendliness to me since I have learned the cause."

"What cause?"

"Oh, don't pretend ignorance! I used to think that you had a mind of your own."

"And you don't think so now?"

"You're the first man I ever knew who would permit his sister to run him."

I began to catch on to what was at the bottom of this. Beth had evidently been at work.

"What do you mean by my sister running me?"

"I'm not supposed to tell, but I made no promise. Beth has told me all about it."

"About what?"

"About your new fancy, Mr. Ignorance, or, rather, her fancy. Any one can see that she is trying to bring it about herself, and with such a pliable brother I dare say she will."

I plucked up a lot of courage at this. Beth had evidently produced a revolution.

"Do you mean to say that my sister has been betraying my confidence?"

"Your confidence! Why, she told me herself that she was bent on making a match for you. She said she wanted you to marry a girl that was her friend."

I was pretty stupid, but not so stupid as not to see Beth's device and what it had accomplished. I cut the matter short by saying that when I married I would consult no one but the girl I wanted and began to talk of something else.

It would have been better for me to have had the pluck to manage the affair myself, for my wife has never forgiven my sister for "trying to switch me off to one of her especial friends." I have told her the true story, but she won't believe it. Beth doesn't expect her to believe it. She says she wouldn't believe such a thin story herself.

Buoyancy of Fresh and Salt Water.

A Chinese lad dropped his ball in a narrow hole and could not get it out. So he poured water in the hole, thinking that he would float the ball to the surface. As the ball was slightly heavier than water, it remained on the bottom. Then he thought of mixing salt with the water, as he knew that salt water would float denser objects than fresh. This he did and was rewarded with the floating ball.

This particular fact is demonstrated at the mouths of rivers. Objects rolling along the bottom of a fresh river, too heavy to come to the top, will rise when they are carried out to sea. The general rule also applies to floating bodies. For instance, a ship with a cargo on the sea will sink sometimes a foot on entering a fresh water port. On the other hand, if she leaves a fresh water port with her cargo she will rise when entering the ocean. So a ship may be loaded apparently too much at a wharf and still be all right on the waves.

In building a dam the fact of salt water's being heavier than fresh must be taken into consideration, and the dam for the same head must be a good deal stronger; this, too, without taking into consideration the beating of waves, etc.—St. Louis Republic.

Britain's Civil Service.

Life in a civil service office is a very drab affair today. But sixty years ago it appears to have had its compensations. Sir Algernon West, who entered the admiralty in 1851, recalls, in his "Reminiscences," the figure of an official "always dressed in a black and snuffy suit." It was the chief clerk. This gentleman "occasionally came to the office in the morning dressed in a great frilled shirt front and evening clothes and announced that, as he was going to dine out that evening, he should not be at the office the next day. Frederick Locker, who always wore kid gloves in the office for fear he would dirty his hands with ink . . . was evidently not impressed with the dignity of the man or the office, for on my asking him what his duties were he said, 'All I know is, that whenever I want a clean towel or a piece of fresh soap, I always ring the bell and send for the chief clerk!'"—London Citizen.

An Unfortunate Phrase.

"Franz der kaiser," Napoleon's father-in-law, who was a rather weak and silly ruler, had nevertheless a thoroughgoing belief in absolutism and in the divine right to rule of even the most incompetent of the Hapsburgs. His abilities, such as they were, were best displayed in catechisms that he wrote and printed for the use of his humbler subjects and in peevish criticisms of those of superior intelligence.

According to the author of a recent life of Archduchess Maria Louisa of Austria entitled "An Imperial Victim," the emperor once raged against his doctor for remarking that he had "a good constitution."

"Never let me hear that word again!" he said. "Say robust health if you like. There is no such thing as a good constitution."

Switzerland's Navy.

Long before Germany was to be reckoned with as a sea power Switzerland possessed a fleet equipped for warfare. Eight hundred years ago on all the larger Swiss lakes armed galleys were maintained by the rival cantons. Skilled shipwrights had to be imported from Genoa for the construction of these vessels, some of which carried crews of 500 men. The largest Swiss flotilla was maintained on the Lake of Geneva, when the inhabitants of Geneva were at war with Savoy. Since the neutrality of Switzerland has been guaranteed by the powers there has been no need for warships on the lakes. The Swiss, however, possess a mercantile navy, which carries a considerable amount of trade over the 242 miles of navigable waterways in the republic.

JEFF,
Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt Jr.'s Police Dog.

Good Specimen of German Shepherd Dog.

NOW that so many persons of social prominence spend so large a part of the year in the country, the police dog is achieving a great popularity as a protector. Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., is having trained for her a six-months-old German shepherd dog, which is now the best liked of the various kinds of dogs that have been trained for police purposes. At present Jeff is a rather animated muff and is as good natured as any other puppy of his age, but he is beginning to have a wholesome respect for orders, and by the time he is a few months older he can be depended upon to guard his mistress' life and property. Mr. Henry Payne Whitney has one of the puppies of the same age, which is being similarly trained, and Mr. Lawrence Waterbury has another.

Mr. Henri I. Baer, who has charge of the kennels at the Gedney Farm grounds, near White Plains, N. Y., has trained these and other dogs for prominent persons. These dogs are bound to become more and more valued as their good qualities are known. A few years ago the German shepherd dog was hardly known, but at the last Westminster Show a few lovers of this breed came together and founded the German Shepherd Dog Club. Among the prominent persons who soon became identified with it were Mr. Thomas F. Ryan, Mr. Frank Spiekerman, of Greenwich, Conn.; Dr. Fellowes Davis, Jr.; Mr. Hermann Fleitmann, Mr. C. H. Hardy, Miss Anne Tracy, and Mr. Benjamin H. Throop, of Scranton, Pa. Mrs. H. P. Whitney and Mrs. F. O'Donnell Hillen also own specimens of these dogs.

"Among the several breeds of dogs that have been tried out as police dogs are the Dobermann Pinschers, the Airedale terriers and the Rottweiler dogs," said Mr. Baer "but some were too nervous and not reliable enough and others were so full of the fighting spirit that it diverted them from serious work. Now, these dogs are one master dogs and one purpose dogs. I will show you how the dog works."

Taking a big dog by the leash, he ordered an assistant to strike him on the shoulder. The man hesitated, but Mr. Baer assured him that he would be protected, whereupon he gave him a tap on the arm. Instantly the dog growled and tugged at his leash. If he had not been stoutly held it would have fared badly with the man. It took the vigilant animal some time to get sufficiently cooled down to regard the supposed enemy of his master with tolerance, not, indeed, until he was reassured by Mr. Baer himself that all was well. The dogs understand everything that is said, this one the German tongue and another that was brought from Paris the French language. Jeff and the other puppies who are being "educated" at the kennels are being taught to understand English.

Calling the German dog, Mr. Baer walked with the reporter down the country road. The dog frisked about gayly until suddenly Mr. Baer dropped a leash that he carried in his hand and commanded the dog to guard it. He fell upon it instantly and never moved a muscle or uttered a whimper, although his eyes followed the two down the road with deep longing. After going a few rods Mr. Baer gave a shrill whistle, the signal of release, and the dog bounded merrily away from his task. "But where is the leash? Go and get it," his master commanded. And the big fellow went back, picked up the leash and brought it obediently to his master, who gave him a pat of the head. "That is as much petting as my dogs get," he explained. "These dogs are not pets; they are servants. One of the reasons that they have failed as police assistants here before has been that every one petted them and every one gave them orders. That will not do. They must be handled intelligently and disciplined if they are to do good work. While I do not pet them, I do not punish them; at least no more than this," giving the dog the lightest of cuffs, "or this," showing him a handkerchief. It was evident that these light measures of discipline were sufficient.

Casually Mr. Baer dropped his keys in the dust of the road. They made no sound and the dog did not notice the act. It was not intended that he should. A few yards later his master, as if just noticing his loss, ordered the dog to find his keys. He went back over the course, but did not see them. "Here," called Mr. Baer, "come here. Now start again and smell them." The dog at once started back, sniffing carefully, and in a few moments brought them in triumph.

"If I were in a strange house and lost anything I could set that dog to look for it and he would find it. If I left him on guard over any of my property no one would be safe in trying to take it. I alone feed him, and from me only does he expect to take orders. I never train the dogs to expect anything that I cannot give them anywhere, under any circumstances. When I am just beginning to train them I sometimes reward them with something to eat, but I do not keep that up long, for it would not always be convenient. A word of commendation and an approving pat will be just as effective, and one can always give that.

"The dogs are trained to attack a burglar, a murderer or any person against whom one wants protection, but not to injure him seriously. He must hold the enemy and not let him escape. When the dogs are in regular police service they can be put on guard at the door of a house and no one will be permitted to pass in or out. If one is rash enough to try it the dog will knock him down and sit upon his breast until his master comes to take charge and release the prisoner.

"Of course the dogs that are being educated for society will not need to be taught quite such strenuous duties, but they will need to be just as obedient and alert. If his master or mistress should be attacked the dog must be able to hold the person until help comes, and he can be entrusted with the guardianship of property anywhere. If his owner leaves the automobile he will take care of everything in it, and he will make the best possible house dog and protector against burglars.

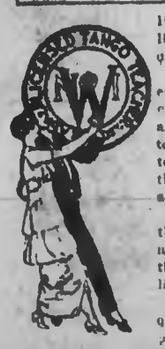
"The German dog has been bred ever since he was 'discovered' twenty-five years ago on the German farms as a herder and an all around house dog and trained for all kinds of practical purposes, and the scientific breeding has added to the intelligence and good points of this German dog, so that it is to-day a dog in high favor all over the world.

"He has even made his way to England, and the English have not refused to train their German shepherd dogs to do service in the army against their German brothers as war dogs. The Red Cross all over the world is interested in this breed, and as a police dog he stands supreme. To-day there are more than six thousand German shepherds as official police dogs in the German police forces, hundreds in France, Belgium and Italy. The Tsar of Russia has a big kennel of them to protect his numerous castles. Even in China they are known as good watch dogs. The West Point Academy is seeking information and wants to have the dogs for bringing munition to the infantry lines and to carry machine guns toward the enemy. The Red Cross people use them for seeking the wounded on the battlefields and as messengers. Their duties as police dogs may be divided into criminal work and protective work. As a constant colleague of the patrolman and as a detective he is considered in police quarters, which are not dependent on political agencies, invaluable. In Germany there is a Deutscher Schaeferhundverein, which has more than seven thousand members and has a specialty stud book of the breed of more than fifty thousand dogs of the breed. All other kennel clubs are adopting the methods which have been first tried out in this club. The American club is in close connection with it."

One of the first of the German shepherd dogs in America was brought here by Mrs. Butler Duncan, and so unusual was its appearance that it attracted a great deal of attention. A short time afterward some of them were brought over by Mr. George Gordon Moore, of Detroit, for use as police dogs in the West. Mr. T. F. Ryan was one of the first to begin breeding these dogs in this country, a fine registered bitch having been presented to him by Prince Troubetskoi, who brought her from Paris. Mr. Ryan has a dog that can pick out his master's automobile from hundreds of others when they are lined up in a congested part of the city. As soon as he finds it he will jump in beside the chauffeur, thus announcing to him that his master is ready.

Mr. Baer believes that the German shepherd dogs are the oldest distinct breed in existence. He also holds that dogs are older than the wolves, which, instead of being progenitor of the dog, lapsed from domestication under certain conditions and became wolves.

Would License Tango Teachers to Curb Immoral Dancing



WHY not a Board of Regents to pass on dancing?"

"Why should not every teacher be compelled to pass an examination as to his qualifications to teach the tango, the maxixe, the half and half?"

"Why should not the teachers of this most popular art of the day take out licenses?"

These are the questions propounded by Miss Elisabeth Marbury, whose opportunities to pass upon the questions raised as to the "whys" and "why nots" of dancing have been unsurpassed. As the manager of Castle House, in New York, and as an observant witness of dances of all degrees in that city, from east side schools to uptown mansions, she has viewed hugs and dips that made the conservative grieve, and graceful evolutions that won ecstatic encomiums from the lovers of grace and beauty.

"What the matter with dancing is where anything is wrong is the teaching," asserted Miss Marbury. "Professors of dancing! Heaven save the mark! It is perfectly astounding to see the kind of men and women who have deserted their trades or had none to desert and have hung out their shingles as teachers of dancing. And the marvellous and dreadful thing is that they are overwhelmed with pupils.

"Any one who has the nerve to say that he can teach dancing, can have pupils. I've seen some of these dancing teachers, and it is horrible to think how they are spreading the faults of modern dancing and missing all that is graceful and pretty. Why, a girl came in to Castle House one evening a pale, pasty fed looking creature and I asked her what she had been doing. Teaching dancing from one in the afternoon until one in the morning, with only a brief interval, during which she was lucky if she could get a sandwich and a glass of beer. Think of it! Twelve hours! Could she dance? No, she had no conception of the possibilities of the new dancing as an art, and she was too tired to dance even with natural grace or spirit.

"There are many worse than she is, and all these incapable persons are spreading the worst kind of dancing. If they were compelled to present themselves before proper authorities for licenses there would be an end to that sort of thing. Oh, I would have the dancer of all degrees go through the same mill. No one should be exempt."

"But the teachers of painting and music and other arts do not have to be licensed to teach."

"They are different. Dancing is an aggressive art, and whether it is done well or badly done is a part of a great social question. The poor musician or artist does not get pupils. The badly equipped dancing master does plenty of them.

"I tell you it is such a vital subject that city officials ought to take it up. The city should have the advantage of licensed dancing teachers as it has of other licensed persons whose business or profession affects the whole social fabric.

"Certainly it is practicable. Why not? If there can be a Board of Regents to pass on other teachers, why not on those of dancing? It might be a part of the public school programme, or it could be incorporated with one of the other city departments. Of course, it is possible to have an independent board of censors, but what I stand for is an official body. Yes, I am sure that, in that case, prominent men and women, persons representing various professions and interests, would consent to serve."

Of course, every licensed teacher would have to wear a badge, which he would be compelled to show on demand. When a zealous guardian of the proprieties felt that the "clutch" or the "wiggle" was being carried beyond the bounds of decorum and, in pursuance of his duty, called out, "None of that," the dancers could merely flash their badges in his face, responding, "See our license?" without losing a step.

Miracle Wrought in Public School by a Day of Neighborhood Work

IT took just one working day of eight hours recently to transform a Tennessee rural school house that was in very bad condition into a building of which any community would be proud. What was accomplished in this instance by community co-operation could be carried out effectively by any county superintendent, teacher or school improvement association.

This unique and practical demonstration in public school improvement was managed by Professor D. Riley Haworth, of the East Tennessee State Normal School. Professor Haworth first secured the co-operation of the Board of Education of McMinn county, in which the demonstration was carried out. He also secured the co-operation of the public school teachers of the county and of the patrons of the Neil School, the plan being to show what any neighborhood can do in one day by united action in the improvement of school buildings and grounds.

A band of teachers, school patrons and Normal School students marched out to the Neil School early in the morning to begin operations. An official photographer was taken along; he made photographs of the school grounds, the building and interior at eight o'clock in the morning, before work began, and again at four o'clock in the afternoon, when the day's work was completed. The "before" and "after" pictures made it look as if a miracle had taken place.

The building at eight o'clock was in as disreputable a condition as it could be and still be used for school purposes. The workers were armed with shovels, hoes, axes, carpenter's tools, paint, whitewash and soap. They nailed on new boards where they were needed, painted the building, built a chimney, cleaned up the rubbish, scrubbed the floor, renovated the entire interior, constructed a bookcase for the teacher, tinted the walls a pearl gray color and hung pictures. The old desks were removed and new desks, supplied by the school district, were placed in the building.

The outlay aggregated, in cash, $33. It included twelve gallons of paint, five gallons of linseed oil, four paint brushes, one-half bushel of whitewash, $2 worth of weather boarding and lathing, two pounds of nails, four window shades, material for sash curtains, four pictures, a number of books to start a school library and one American flag. When the work was completed the building presented as attractive an appearance as the best one room country schools.

One of the most delightful features of the day was the social enjoyment that resulted from the gathering together of such a large group of workers. At noon a picnic dinner was served by people in the neighborhood of the school. It is planned to repeat the demonstration in many other parts of the State.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

USELESS

"Henry," began Mrs. Sweet tentatively, as her husband finished his breakfast, and reached for the morning paper, "I'm going shopping today."

"Uh-huh!" responded Mr. Sweet from behind his paper.

"I need some things from downtown, Henry," Mrs. Sweet went on. "Besides, I'll have to change that ribbon you matched for me. It isn't the right shade."

"Uh-huh."

"Henry," said Mrs. Sweet petulantly, "I don't believe you are listening at all."

"Course I am," returned her husband, as he turned to the sporting page. "You said something about a shade."

"I said," repeated Mrs. Sweet, with emphatic distinctness, "the ribbon you matcher for me isn't the right shade."

Mr. Sweet lowered his paper and looked across at his wife.

"It's baby blue, isn't it?" he asked.

"Yes, it is," returned his wife. "But you know, Henry, I haven't been able to wear that shade of blue this last 10 years."

Mr. Sweet lifted the paper to his eyes, then lowered it again.

"Why not?" he asked.

Mrs. Sweet studied her empty teacup.

"Why not?" he persisted.

"Because I am growing stout," she answered, reluctantly.

Mr. Sweet stared.

"How does that bar you?" he asked.

"Some people are so dense," his wife returned pointedly.

Mr. Sweet grinned.

"Am I worse than the majority?" he asked.

"You are worse than—some," his wife qualified.

"For instance?"

Mrs. Sweet balanced a spoon on the edge of her teacup.

"Cite a person," her husband challenged.

"I could," asserted Mrs. Sweet.

"Do," her husband encouraged.

"There's Mr. Joy—" began Mrs. Sweet.

"Who's he?" interrupted her husband.

"He lives in the brown cottage across the street," explained Mrs. Sweet.

"Fellow with Dundreary windbreakers?" questioned her husband.

"I am sure his whiskers are very nice," said Mrs. Sweet.

"How'd you like to see me break out in that kind of hailstone catchers?" grinned her husband.

"Him."

"Say it," urged Mr. Sweet. "Don't spare my feelings."

A twinkle appeared in Mrs. Sweet's eyes, as she returned:

"You couldn't wear them for the same reason that I can't wear baby blue."

"Disqualified because of overweight, eh?" grinned Mr. Sweet. "But about the gentleman with the microbe-catchers; is he less obtuse than I?"

Mrs. Sweet nodded.

"Got any other good qualities I lack?" went on her husband.

"His wife can trust him to bring the exact things she sends for," returned Mrs. Sweet.

"Good eye, eh? Particularize some more."

"He anticipates her slightest wishes."

"Must be a wizard," commented Mr. Sweet. "Go on."

"He looks after the furnace in winter, without grumbling, and, in summer, takes care of the lawn."

"Model husband," admitted Mr. Sweet. "But how did you get such a straight line on him?"

"Their servants and ours are acquainted," explained Mrs. Sweet.

"I see," grinned her husband, much enlightened. "Anything else Mr. Model Husband does that I don't and might?"

"When the weather permits, he takes the baby out for an airing."

"I took ours out the other night," grinned Mr. Sweet, "and when we returned you nearly broke up the game."

"You ought to be ashamed of yourself, Henry Sweet," said Mrs. Sweet indignantly. "The idea of keeping that boy out till long past midnight!"

"He's 16," asserted her husband. "And he feels the weight of his years, let me tell you."

"Don't forget my shopping money," Mrs. Sweet reminded him, as her husband arose from the table.

"How much do you need?" he asked, taking out his pocketbook.

"Twenty-five dollars will be sufficient," said Mrs. Sweet, after a moment's hesitation.

Mr. Sweet took four five-dollar bills from his wallet.

"By the way," he ventured casually, "I suppose Mr. Joy never shortchanges on his wife when she asks for shopping money?"

"Mr. Joy isn't in any business," Mrs. Sweet admitted, reluctantly. "You see, his wife takes pupils."

"I thought so," grinned Mr. Sweet as he slipped one of the bills back into his pocketbook and handed his wife $15. "There always is a fly in the ointment somewhere. Here's my car coming. 'Bye!"

MAN WITH THE SLIPPERS.

"I am weary, I am weary," said the man in tones of care,
"As I don my carpet slippers and sink down into a chair.
Each day as I proceed to get acquainted with the news
The way I'm whirled around the earth invites a case of blues.
I linger in Alaska long enough to have a chill,
And then I jump to Mexico and get another thrill.
I flit to oriental lands and do the best I can
To understand just what may be expected from Japan.
To Africa I wander. There's a sign upon the shore:
'Not Here. Try South America For Uncle Theodore.'
And then I pause in England and endeavor to find out
Exactly what some arguments in progress are about.
I am weary, I am weary as the sun is sinking low,
For every date line makes me jump a thousand miles or so.
Though he may not plow the ocean or be foremost in the strife,
The man in carpet slippers leads a most exciting life."

—Washington Star.

Discovered.

Mrs. Potts—How do you know I was spying in your house through my opera glasses?

Mrs. Kettles—I saw you through my own opera glasses.—New York Globe.

Agrarian.

A truthful man tells of a farmer in his state who even in the hour of adversity could think of others. An unseasonable frost had completed the damage done by the insects to his potatoes. The tops of the plants, which had served as pasturage for the pests, were wholly destroyed.

Meeting him at the postoffice one day a friend asked:

"How are you, Tom? Things goin' well?"

"Goin' well!" exclaimed the old man. "I should say not! There's trouble and plenty of it! Why, up at my place there's 9,000,000 potato bugs an' nothin' for them to eat!"—New York Post.

The Mysterious Thyroid.

The thyroid gland, which is situated about the lower part of the throat, is still a medical mystery.

Practically nothing is known as to its uses and very little about the causes of disease in it. Goiter is a noncalignant enlargement of the thyroid gland. The swelling may be no more than a mere thickening, or it may grow into a mass weighing several pounds. It is common in mountainous districts and where there is magnesian limestone in the soil and drinking water. Operation may be necessary, but goiter will usually yield to treatment and is rarely fatal. Malignant disease of the thyroid gland is often associated with overstrain or sudden shock. Here operation is generally necessary and is a very serious matter indeed. In some mysterious way removal of the thyroid gland affects the mental powers, and the unfortunate person who has his thyroid removed is in great danger of losing his wits, more particularly his memory.—Pearson's Weekly.

Fiddled Into Office.

Lossing relates that in 1848 he met at Oswego, N. Y., Major Cochran, then nearly eighty years old, a son-in-law of General Philip Schuyler, who told the story of his election to congress during the administration of the elder Adams. A vessel was to be launched on one of the lakes in interior New York, and people came from afar to see it. The young folks gathered there, determined to have a dance at night. There was a fiddle, but no fiddler. Young Cochran was an amateur performer, and his services were demanded. He gratified the joyous company, and at the supper table one of the gentlemen remarked in commendation of his talents that he was "fit for congress." The matter was talked up, and he was nominated and elected a representative in congress for the district then comprising the whole of New York west of Schenectady. He always claimed to have "fiddled himself into congress."

Where Dollars Originated.

Joachimsthal, near Carlsbad, is historic as the birthplace of the original dollar. This was the silver gulden groschen, coined in 1519 by order of Count Schlick from the metal of a recently opened mine, and it became known as the joachimsthaler, or "thaler" alone for short. Before 1600 the nimble English language had already made "dollar" of this. Thereafter this name was loosely used of all manner of coins, varying in value from 75 cents to $1.25 and belonging to all manner of countries, from Sweden to Japan. It was from the prevalence of the Spanish "dollar" in the British-American colonies at the time of their revolt that the modern "almighty dollar" was derived, while in modern English very recent slang has given the name to the crown piece.

Grouchy.

"There is a movement on foot," said Mr. Snoope, "to prevent the marriage of weakminded persons. What do you think of it?"

"I think it's rot," answered Mr. Grouch. "Why, who else ever wants to get married?"—Cleveland Leader.

Marks of the Beasts.

On every side in the Malay wilds the traces of the beasts—which here live as scheduled, as safe from molestation, as did their ancestors in pre-Adamite days—are visible on tree trunk, on beaten game path and on the yielding clay at the drinking places by the hurrying stream. Here a belt of mud nine feet from the ground shows that an elephant has rubbed his itching back against the rough bark of a tree, and, see, coarse hairs are still sticking in the hardened clay. There a long, sharp scratch repeated at regular intervals marks the passing of a rhinoceros. Here, again, is the pad mark of a tiger barely an hour old, and the pitted tracks of deer of all sizes and varieties surround the deeply punched holes which are the footsteps of an elephant. —Cornhill Magazine.

Fiji Islanders' Sugar Cane Dance.

A very curious and exceedingly clever dance may be witnessed in Fiji called by the natives "the sugar cane meke," or sugar cane dance. It represents the growth of the sugar cane. In the first figure the dancers squat low on the ground, shake their heads, shut their eyes and murmur slowly and softly an unintelligible sentence. Gradually they all stand up together, growing taller and taller, and as they "grow" they wave their arms and tremble all over from ankle to head, like the tall, tasseled cane waving in the wind, and still they keep on chanting louder and louder. The last figure represents a series of combats meant to symbolize the exactions of the chiefs, who compel the "kaisi," willing and unwilling, to come and cut their crops.—London Standard.

Our First Daguerreotype.

The first daguerreotype ever taken in America was a picture of the Unitarian church, Washington square, New York city. The exposure was made by Professor S. F. B. Morse and occupied fifteen minutes.—Magazine of American History.

Pride.

"I pride myself upon the fact that I never have gone home in a condition that made me fear to face my wife at the door."

"What about that time when several of your friends had to carry you inside after they had lifted you from the back?"

"Well, I wasn't afraid to meet my wife at the door or anywhere else."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Her Final Resort.

"What's this—black pencils for the dining room?"

"I'm going to make a desperate effort to have my husband at home for dinner when the team's away, anyhow. So I have leased a wire and shall operate a score board in the dining room."—Pittsburgh Post.

Under Suspicion.

Patience—And you say he's not a married man?

Patrice—Certainly not.

"Well, how in the world, then, did he ever learn to make so many excuses?"—Yonkers Statesman.

Thought Nothing But Death Would End Her Misery.

WAS TROUBLED WITH

Heart Disease.

Mrs. J. D. Talbot, Owen Sound, Ont., writes:—"I have been a great sufferer from heart disease, and leaking valves. I have had resource to every kind of treatment I could think might help me, including the skill of several doctors. I suffered so for years that at times I have felt that nothing but death could end my misery. I was advised by a friend, who had suffered untold pain and misery, just as I had, and had been cured by Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, to give them a trial, so I decided to do so. I am delighted with the result, as I am now completely cured, and can eat and sleep as I have not done for years.

An Exception.

Madge—Here's a man figured out that if all the money in the world were divided equally each adult would get about $30. Maeg—He's wrong. My wife would get $99.—Boston Transcript.

Just Gossip.

"There is a great deal of gossip about Gwendolyn's eyebrows."

"Don't mind it. Her eyebrows are not as black as they are painted."—Baltimore American.

A MESSAGE TO THIN, WEAK, SCRAWNY FOLKS

An Easy Way to Gain 10 to 30 lbs. of Solid, Healthy, Permanent Flesh

Thin, nervous, undeveloped men and women everywhere are heard to say, "I can't understand why I do not get fat. I eat plenty of good, nourishing food." The reason is just this: You cannot get fat, no matter how much you eat, unless your digestive organs assimilate the fat-making elements of your food instead of passing them out through the body as waste.

What is needed is a means of gently urging the assimilative functions of the stomach and intestines to absorb the oils and fats and hand them over to the blood, where they may reach the starved, shrunken, run-down tissues and build them up. The thin person's body is like a dry sponge—eager and hungry for the fatty materials of which it is being deprived by the failure of the alimentary canal to take them from the food. The best way to overcome this sinful waste of flesh building elements and to stop the leakage of fats is to use Sargol, the recently discovered regenerative force that is recommended so highly by physicians here and abroad. Take a little Sargol tablet with every meal and notice how quickly your cheeks fill out and rolls of firm, healthy flesh are deposited over your body, covering each bony angle and projecting point. Your druggist has Sargol, or can get it from his wholesaler, and will refund your money if you are not satisfied with the gain in weight it produces as stated on the guarantee in each package. It is inexpensive, easy to take and highly efficient.

Caution:—While Sargol has produced remarkable results in overcoming nervous dyspepsia and general stomach troubles, it should not be taken unless you are willing to gain ten pounds or more, for it is a wonderful flesh builder.

Young Scientist Lucky.

PITTSBURG, June 25.—After four years of work upon a new cheap nitrogenous fertilizer, made from bye products now wasted, that, it is said will revolutionize agriculture, Earl S. Bishop, an investigator at the Mellen Institute of Industrial Research, on Saturday refused an offer of $250,000 for his formula and process. The offer was made by a Pittsburg capitalist.

E. Bishop secured his degree as a doctor of science in 1912 at Queen's University, Kingston, but his home is in Lincoln, Nebraska.

Original of "Genesis."

LONDON, June 25.—Prof. Stephen Langdon, who holds the chair of Assyriology at Jesus College, Oxford, has deciphered the Nippur Babylonian tablets belonging to the University of Pennsylvania, of which he made a copy while in Philadelphia last year.

The tablets give pre-Semitic accounts of the fall of man and the deluge. The latter, he says, is clearly the original of the story preserved in the Book of Genesis.

How to Keep Your Face Free From Ugly Hairs

(Modes of To-day)

A small, original package of powdered delatone is a necessary toilet requisite for with its aid the skin can be kept free from hair or fuzz. A thick paste is made with some of the powder and water, and spread on the hairy surface; then in about two minutes it is rubbed off and with it comes every trace of hair. Washing the skin will remove the rest of the delatone. While this a simple, effective method and quite harmless, you should be careful to get real delatone.

CONSERVATIVES AT PICNIC.

Port Stanley Is Scene of Big Conservative Demonstration.

PORT STANLEY, Ont., June 25.—A monster picnic, under the auspices of the Conservative Association of Elgin and Middlesex, was held here yesterday. Special trains were run for the occasion, and with the ideal weather there was a big turnout. Speech-making was the feature of the day. With Dr. Fred Ouest of St. Thomas as chairman, addresses were delivered by Sir Adam Beck, Donald Sutherland, M.P. for South Oxford, S. Frank Glass, M.P. for East Middlesex; John McFarlane, M. P. P.; Finlay Macdiarmid, M. P. P.; C. A. Brower, M. P. P.; David Marshall, M. P., and Major Beattie, of London, and several others.

Sir Adam Beck, after saying that he as much as any man desired to "remove the damnable temptation of drink from the young men who would abuse it," declared that the Government had solved the temperance question in a permanent way that would eventually remove the bar, the bottle, the jug, and the barrel. The people, he said, had now the machinery to help them out, "but," he said, "do't make it the plaything of politics. Don't take the glass away and give the bottle."

Bans Barefaced Soldier.

PARIS, June 25.—The following order to his regiment has been posted by a colonel of chasseurs on the eastern frontier:

"The Colonel caught sight this morning of Trooper X of the Third Squadron, who had shaved off his moustache. This is unworthy of a chasseur.

"One cannot have too much hair on one's face in cavalry. All leave will be refused to Trooper X until his moustache has grown again."

The colonel requests his captains to take severe measures against this "effemipate fashion, which is utterly out of place in the army."

Outlook Now Brighter.

LONDON, June 25.—Fear of war between Greece and Turkey is receding. Greece communicated a new note to the Powers, accepting the Porte's proposals that the property of Turkish refugees and that a Graeco-Turkish Commission make a valuation of the properties. Greece invites the Powers to designate a neutral chairman of the commission.

An Athens despatch says that the United States Congress, by authorising the sale of the warship to Greece, has averted an immediate declaration of war.

Militants Break Out Again.

LONDON, June 25. — The activities of the militant suffragettes, which have been in suspense since Premier Asquith agreed to receive a deputation of East End working women, were resumed yesterday in the shape of attacks on city pillar boxes and an organized raid on many west end theatres. The militants also created disturbances at a social function at the Royal Academy of Arts.

Ravages of Ants.

The ruins of a splendid city on the north coast of Jamaica remain as evidence of the devastation that red ants are capable of causing. An army of the insects invaded the city one day and drove away every living creature, animal and human, that could escape. Prisoners in the jails and bedridden patients in the hospitals were devoured. Not even a rat or chinch bug remained alive.

In Liberia and other parts of West Africa ant hills as large as native huts are found. The large black ant is the builder of that sort of home. Such ant hills are not unknown in this country, although they are rarely so large; but the black ant rarely invades houses. He is a scavenger and is protected by most farmers.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Bishop Butler's Generosity.

The saintly Bishop Butler, whose "Analogy" is still used as a text book for clerical examinations, kept open house at Durham, where he dispensed hospitality with a lavish hand. On one occasion a man called at the palace soliciting a subscription for some charitable object. "How much money is there in the house?" asked Butler of his secretary. The secretary after investigation replied that there was £500. "Give it to him, then," replied the philosopher bishop, "for it is a shame that a bishop should have so much."—London Globe.

Aunt Sally's Advice To Beauty Seekers

K. C. F. says: "My skin becomes so greasy every summer, and this so attracts dust and dirt, I have an awful time keeping my face clean looking. Can you suggest anything?" The method mentioned in reply to Eloise will overcome this condition.

D. N. A. writes: "How can I get rid of crow's feet and wrinkles about the mouth corners?" Use a wash lotion prepared by dissolving 1 oz. powdered saxonite in ½ pt witch hazel. This tightens the skin, dispersing the wrinkles and its tonic effect is more than temporary.

Eloise says: "My freckles are worse than ever this year, made doubly conspicuous by a pallid complexion. Is there any cure?" Ask your druggist for an ounce of mercolised wax, apply nightly like cold cream, removing in the morning with warm water. As the wax gradually, harmlessly absorbs the affected cuticle, not only will the freckles vanish but the new and younger skin which appears will have a healthy colour.—Woman's Realm.

CHICAGO, June 24.—Flattering reports about the wheat harvest in the United States caused a severe break in prices in Liverpool before trading here began. The result was an abrupt setback for the Chicago market the instant that business opened. There was a general rush, which was followed by a reaction on profit-taking, and by a renewal of weakness, with later a second rally.

Milkers and Springers.

The market for milkers and springers was dull and draggy with prices easier, selling from $46 to $86, but few reach the latter figure.

Veal Calves.

The delivery of veal calves was light, which caused prices to be very firm. Choice veals $10 to $10.50; good calves, $9 to $9.50; medium calves, $8 to $8.50; common, $7 to $7.75.

Sheep and Lambs.

There were 562 sheep and lambs reported on sale. The market for both was firm, for sheep of good, light quality, but lambs were sold at higher values. Sheep, ewes, light, sold at $6.75 to $6.25; heavy ewes and rams at $4 to $4.50; spring lambs sold at $10 to $12 per cwt.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, June 24.—At the C. P. R. live stock market the range of prices was slightly lower, but as there were no extra choice steers offered the top price of Monday was not realized. Best steers offered sold at $8.50 and the lower grade from that down to $7.60, with some common lots selling at $6 to $6.50 per 100 lbs. Butchers' cows brought from $4 to $7.75 and bulls from $5 to $7.50 per 100 lbs.

Hogs were in fair demand and Ontario selected lots were made at $8.50 to $8.60, and a few lots of heavyweights sold at $8 to $8.25 per 100 lbs., weighed off cars. The demand for spring lambs was good.

Shakespeare's Birth.

The exact date of Shakespeare's birth is not known, and the accepted date of April 23 is based on circumstantial evidence. There is record evidence that he was baptized on April 26, 1564, but no record evidence of the date of his birth. He died April 23, 1616, and the inscription upon his monument is evidence that he had already begun his fifty-third year, but does not give any birth date. From these data and other such information as they could obtain, antiquaries in the eighteenth century, 100 years after his death, fixed the date of his birth as April 23, 1564, three days before his baptism. Though not proved beyond doubt, that date is universally accepted.—Philadelphia Press.

Some Words.

"Panic" is named after the ancient god Pan because of the sudden and unreasoning fear which the sight of this heathen divinity was supposed to inspire. Other common words with a similar source in the old mythologies are "vulcanite," from Vulcan, the blacksmith; "martial," for Mars, the warrior; "jovial," from Jove; "saturnine," from Saturn, and "mercurial," from Mercury, the nimble heeled.

Strange Neglect.

VOTE FOR ME

Thick and Thin.

"It's a funny thing," remarked the observing man, "that particularly stout and particularly thin people can discover insinuations in regard to their size where absolutely none is meant. Now, tonight in the car there were two good examples of this within a few minutes of each other. One was a little thread of a woman who glanced contemptuously at two well meaning persons who moved apart and made a space between them which looked wide enough for her to seat herself with comparative comfort.

"'Thank you,' she snapped, 'but I prefer to stand rather than sit where there is scarcely room for a small child.'

"We had not proceeded far when an extremely stout woman entered the car. She was carrying two huge bundles and looked tired. Three men in a row sprang to their feet as she began to lurch about as the car started. She administered a savage glance at them and said, quite audibly:

"'Well, I never! I guess if it's got to the point where I take up three seats I'd better stand up awhile!'"—Buffalo Express.

Earned It.

A stranger was hunting quail in the mountains of Georgia, where by reason of the wild peas they are very numerous. One day his dog flushed a flock of wild turkeys to the rage of a native youth who had been creeping toward them. The boy promptly brought his old fashioned six foot rifle to his shoulder, and the bullet cut up the dirt under the dog's feet. The next instant the boy disappeared in the brush. Later in the day the hunter came across a mountain cabin and saw the same boy in the yard with a man whom he took to be his father. He hailed the man and angrily gave an account of the morning's incident. "He wasn't forty yards away when he shot at my dog. I think he should have a good thrashing," he continued. "Misses a dawg at forty yards!" the mountaineer asked in astonishment. "Yo' needn't worry 'bout that lickin', stranger; he sho' will git one all right!"—Argonaut.

HUERTA'S ARMY.

Extraordinary Style of Soldiering In Mexico.

An English war correspondent has some hard things to say about Huerta's army which has been recruited largely by seizing men and women off their streets. He declares that the officers do not take soldiering seriously and that the men, lazy and untrained, hate to fight as much as they hate to work.

The troops are accustomed to live in trains. Their wives are taken along, too, to act as army service corps. They would never be in any hurry to start. They enjoy the lazy side of soldiering.

Torreon, the town recently captured by Villa, was taken by the rebels once before, in September last. After denying for a week that it had fallen the war office admitted the truth, but said that it would be retaken in a few days. For a month or so nothing happened. Then it was announced that "a blow would be struck." Gen. Velasco would start at once and the rebels would be driven out of Torreon. The Government had been urged to act vigorously because in the cotton district a record crop was in need of being picked. They responded by putting a new tax upon cotton "to meet the cost of the war-like operations," and by doing—nothing!

The forces which were to retake Torreon advanced and retreated, chassued and set to partners, marched this way and marched that. Gen. Velasco was frequently reported to be not with his command, but in Saltillo. Not until Dec. 10 was Torreon retaken, and then only because the rebels had drawn off and left the garrison very weak.

After the evacuation of Torreon by the Federals Gen. Murguia was tried by a court of inquiry. The intention was to shoot him. This was his defence: "How could I meet the rebels in the open?" he asked; "they fight in loose formation. I was obliged to keep my troops together. If I did not they would melt away. Desertion is the idea uppermost in almost every soldier's mind. Again, how could I order my officers to lead their men to the attack? I knew their men would shoot them down as soon as they got the chance."

Mexican generals have unfortunately very little talent for war, and they make, as a rule, no attempt to "lick their men into shape." Officers in command are incredibly slack. At a small battle in the State of Morelos the Federals by use of machine guns forced the rebels to retire. The nature of the country made it easy for their retreat to be cut off. But the Federal colonel looked at his watch. "It is time for dinner," he said, and told his bugler to sound the "Cease fire." The rebels leisurely went away.

That kind of incident, which happens daily, helps to keep current the belief that Federal officers do not wish to bring the war to an end. They do not take soldiering seriously.

The Mexican army has no army service corps, no medical department to speak of. It carries no camp equipment, no supplies. Watch a field force break camp at dawn. First there go pattering off a horde of women laden with pots and pans, blankets, sometimes babies. These are the soldaderas, the camp followers, the commissariat of the force. That they move as quickly as they do is a miracle. Whatever the day's march may be they are always on the camping ground before the men arrive. They rig up shelters, they cook tortillas and frijoles (maize cakes and beans), they make coffee. You see them mending their husbands' coats, washing their shirts, roughly tending flesh wounds. Without these soldaderas the army could not move. While President Huerta was seizing hundreds of men by night in Mexico City and other cities in order to swell his forces to a hundred thousand he also had women "pressed" to go with the new soldiers and take care of them. Criadas (maid servants) were positively afraid to be out after dark.

This extraordinary system accounts for the immobility of the Federal troops. Compared with the rebels they are leaden footed. They cling to the railways and to the box cars, in which they live with some comfort.

The Word "Ogre."

Old fashioned etymologists used to say that the word "ogre" commemorated the sufferings of Europe during the ninth and tenth centuries at the hands of the ravaging "Oigours," or Huns. This derivation, however, is now abandoned. "Ogre," which reached the French language by way of Italian and Spanish, is really Orcus, the Latin hell, afterward the god of the underworld. In Romanesque folklore this god became a shaggy, black, man devouring monster, with a particular taste for lost babes in the wood.

Pretty Thin Gold.

The gold beaters of Berlin at the Paris Exposition showed gold leaves so thin that it would require 282,000 to produce the thickness of a single inch, yet each leaf is so perfect and free from holes as to be impenetrable by the strongest electric light. If these leaves were bound in book form it would take 15,000 to fill the space of ten common book shelves.

Farm and Dairy Market Report

TORONTO, Monday, June 22.—A tour through the rural districts of Ontario revealed crops in need of rain everywhere, but still of fine color, in spite of the drought. Farmers are remarking on the fact that the dry weather had had so little effect on the grain crop. Probably the favorable planting conditions, in Eastern Ontario particularly, resulted in good seed going in better shape. Recent showers will do something to help the hay crop, but it will still be very short, one farmer informing me that he is already planning to cut part of his cows.

Evidences of a trade depression are still in evidence. Very few factories are working up to full capacity, and there is still more or less unemployment. Help is reported scarce in some rural districts, but reports from other districts indicate that there is more labor available this year than for some years past.

WHEAT.

Wheat has taken a sharp decline during the week. This is largely due, in the case of Northern wheat, to the dull news of the export demand and the prospects for an excellent new crop. Ontario wheat is still in small supply, but the top price has probably been reached, as the flour market is congested and harvesting is not far off. We quote as follows: No. 1 Northern, 96½c; No. 2, 95½c; Ontario wheat, $1 05 to $1 04.

COARSE GRAINS.

The coarse grain market is quiet and a trifle easier than a week ago. Quota No. 3, 42½c. Ontario oats, 41 to 41½c; corn, 77½c; peas, 93c to $1 03; barley, malting, 57c to 59c; feed, 54c; buckwheat, 89c to 90c; rye, 63c to 64c.

MILL FEEDS

Quotations on mill feeds are as follows: Bran, $23; shorts, $25 to $26; feed flour, $30 to $32. At Montreal bran is quoted at $23, shorts, $25; middlings, $28.

HAY AND STRAW

There is more hay held over from last year than most of the trade believe. This will tend to even up prices in case of a short crop this season, and is a factor that should not be overlooked. On this market No. 1 hay brings $14 to $14.50; No. 2, $10 to $13; No. 3, $8 to $9; baled straw, $8 to $8.50. The Montreal market is steady at the following quotations: No. 1, $16.25 to $16.50; No. 2, $14 to $14; No. 3, $12 to $13; clover, $11 to $12.

DAIRY PRODUCE.

Neither butter nor cheese have come up to expectations so far as sales are concerned. In the case of cheese little has been exported in the past week. Exporters, however, look for firmer prices later on and are holding for a raise. The receipts of the past few days have shown an increase over the same period last year, but are still 22,000 boxes short of receipts up to this date last season.

Receipts of butter into Montreal from May 1st to June 13th were 83,129 packages against 99,658 packages for the same period last year. During the week prices have tumbled fully one-half cent, for tions here are: Oats, C.W. No. 2, 43½c. creamery butter. There is a limited outside demand and stocks have been accumulating. It is not apparent that prices will recede to any extent until the June make is out of the way, as there is sure to be a speculative inquiry for that make. Sales run around 28c to 24 1 2c.

LIVE STOCK.

The supply of live stock has been light at the stock yards, and on the final market of the week there was little to sell outside of left overs from the previous day's receipts. These were taken up briskly. One animal sold as high as $8.60, with choice heavy steers ranging from $8.10 to $8.50; handy choice steers were quoted $8 to $8.25. Other quotations are: Butcher steers, good, $7.90 to $8.15; common to good, $7.40 to $7.90; heifers, $7.25 to $8.20; choice cows, $7 to $7.65; common to good $6.50 to $7; butcher bulls, $5 to $7.65; feeders, $7.15 to $7.35; stockers, $6.50 to $7.35; canners and cutters, $3 to $4.50.

Milch cows ranged from $65 to $95; common to medium, $40 to $65; and springers, $40 to $85. Calves are in good demand at $5 to $10.

Spring lambs are taken up briskly at $7 to $11; wether lambs, $8 to $8.50; buck lambs, $7 25 to $7.75, light ewes, $5 to $6.25; heavy sheep and bucks, $4 to $5; culls, $3 to $4.

Hogs were markedly easy during the week, but showed a tendency to greater firmness at the close. On Thursday last 1,300 were sold at $7 50 to $7.65 f.o.b.

An Elixir of Life.

"An annuity is the best elixir of life I know of," said the examining physician of an insurance company. "It sometimes seems as if annuitants never die. We have lots on our books who top eighty, ninety and even ninety-five years. I have passed many a sickly and decrepit old fellow as a good annuity risk—the sicklier they are, you know, the better risk they make—and the next year he has turned up to collect his annuity rejuvenated, rosy, spry as a boy. The secret? The secret is that financial worry, fear of the poorhouse, ages and kills off more people than all the deadly diseases combined. Release an old man by means of an annuity from all this worry, and he throws off his years and walks erect and happy and fearlessly young."

Hardly Possible.

"Some say it was scratched with a diamond by the poet Cowper, but others say the authenticity is doubtful."

"I think so myself. Where would a poet get a diamond?"—Louisville Courier-Journal.

It Had a Charm.

"I do miss Mrs. Jones. She told me all the news of the parish."

"Oh, that was only gossip—no truth in it!"

"Well, there, I liked to 'ear it. Truth or lies, 'twas all news to me."—London Punch.

GILLESPIE IN N. MONAGHAN

Two Meetings Last Night Afforded Further Encouragement for the Rowell Candidate

MANY SPEAKERS THERE

Out in Monaghan last night Mr. Gillespie met with a great deal of encouragement. He spoke at May's school to an audience of between 25 and 30, which is a good average for that locality and was as large, if not larger, than at the Soden meeting. Afterwards he attended a lawn party at the Seymour home on the Gravel Road. His second meeting was arranged for the township hall near Springville, but as many of the farmers desired to attend the lawn social the candidate was invited to the party. It was held under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid of the Fair mount Methodist church and proved a very enjoyable affair. Between two and three hundred persons were there, and a section of the Salvation Army band provided a programme of music. Politics were not discussed but the speakers sounded a temperance note, indicating that the abolition of the bar movement is everywhere the leit motif of discussions where thoughtful men foregather.

The Seymour home is over in Durham county, and a few miles west of the Monaghan town hall. It presented quite a lively scene last night, but during the speeches there was close attention and an enthusiasm that stirs against the liquor traffic. The speakers were Rev. Mr. Butler, pastor of Fairmount Methodist Church, Rev. M. E. Wilson of Manvers, Rev. Mr. Clarry of Peterborough, Rev. Robt. Pogue, Mr. George Loader and Mr. G. A. Gillespie.

The sentiment of that meeting was strongly against the liquor traffic. Rev. Mr. Wilson stated that in the vicinity of Manvers the people were united against one of the evils of the day.

Referring to the objections raised by Conservative politicians to ministers taking part in the present campaign, Rev. Mr. Wilson stated that they seem to have forgotten the part which the clergy played in helping to turn out the Ross government. On the question of temperance there is no party for the man who sees his duty. The fact that one party may support a temperance measure and the other oppose it is merely an incident which receives little attention from the true temperance advocate.

The voice of Manvers left no room for doubt. The eastern section of the county was equally firm. Crossing into Peterborough county the same spirit is manifested. One man said Monaghan would give Gillespie a good majority. And so it goes. The promises are glowing, the people seem convinced of the present need, but their determination will be put to the test on Monday next.

Rev. Robt. Pogue made a strong plea for any measure that would advance the temperance movement. Mr. George Loader has been a Conservative ever since he came to this country, but he began to be a temperance worker, an enemy of the liquor traffic from his early boyhood days. His temperance principles transcend those of party. That is the reason he is working for the Rowell candidate. He made an eloquent plea last night, and if the sincerity which stirs within him and the other speakers could be caught up by everyone who hears them, there would be no audiences left and the active workers would be a legion.

AT MAY'S SCHOOL HOUSE.

Mr. Wm. Stevens was chairman at the meeting at May's School House. The speakers were Mr. Gillespie, Mr Narey and Mr. O'Connell.

Mr Gillespie made it plain that he was out and out in favour of abolishing the shops. The reason he signed the statement of the Temperance Association was on the ground that the members had studied the question and knew what they wanted. In any work experts were sent out to examine what was needed. Even the City Council sends members to look into schemes which it proposes to take up. They went to see how it has worked out. In the same way, the Temperance Association felt that the wiping out of the bars and clubs and the straight majority vote on local option for shops was deemed the best legislation for a first step. Mr. Rowell also had made himself clear on this point. Mr Soden has attempted to make capital out of this fact. Mr. Gillespie stated, but the people thoroughly understood the situation, that the Rowell policy was that of the Temperance people, and that the Temperance people knew what they wanted.

LIQUOR INTERESTS OUT.

Mr. Gillespie stated that the liquor parts were working against him with all their forces. They even lined up against him at the Mayoralty elections, and for what reason. The local option workers when they submitted their first request for a by-law were sent back and asked to produce the names of those who demanded it. Then when local option came up the second time a similar request was made. Mr. Gillespie opposed it on the ground that the names had been presented previously and it was not necessary to produce the signatures on the second petition. That provoked the liquor interests and they have showed their hands on every possible occasion.

SAVED FROM DROWNING BY PLUCKY ACT

Little Courtland Miller Rescued from Otonabee River by W. L. Davidson Who Swam to His Rescue

BOY COULDN'T SWIM

Courtland Miller, the young son of Mr. Fred Miller, Dublin street, had a very narrow escape from drowning yesterday afternoon about four o'clock. He was rescued from death in the waters of the Otonabee by Mr. W. L. Davidson, 159 Aylmer street, who risked his own life by diving off the Hunter street bridge, to save the boy.

It seems that young Miller, who is about ten years of age, was bathing with some companions of about his own age just below the Douro street dam. In some manner he got beyond his depth, and it is an unusual thing that, although not able to swim a stroke, he managed to keep above water and floated down under the Hunter street bridge. A crowd gathered as the struggling lad passed under the bridge, but none of them moved to save him, although it was apparent that he was becoming exhausted in his strenuous efforts to keep above the surface of the water. The horror of the thing seemed to have paralized the watchers.

This was the state of affairs when Mr. Davidson, who had paddled up the river to attend the ball game, started to cross the bridge toward Riverside Park. When he perceived the situation, it is the statement of eye witnesses that he didn't hesitate a second, but throwing off his coat he plunged with rare courage into the stream. The watchers felt that he could never make that dive without injury to himself, as the water is very shallow at that point, but a few seconds after he made the plunge he reappeared some distance down the river. He reached the boy and held him above water till another elderly man, who had also entered the river some distance down from the bridge, came to his assistance, and together they succeeded in keeping the almost lifeless child afloat until a skiff was rowed out to the rescue. The three then entered the skiff and were taken ashore.

Dr. Morgan was called, and he rendered artificial respiration, and the little fellow was soon back to his normal condition and little the worse for his terrible experience. Asked how he had managed to keep afloat he replied almost nonchalantly that he had heard that it was possible to float by holding one's nose, and that as soon as he found he was over his depth he caught his nose and held it tight.

Mr. Davidson deserves the greatest praise for his courageous action which was undoubtedly responsible for saving the young fellow's life. There is probably not one man in a hundred who could make the dive off Hunter street bridge without serious injury to himself, and even a smaller percentage would have the courage to experiment, even to save the life of a fellow. The older man, whose name could not be ascertained, too, deserves considerable credit, as he unhesitatingly plunged into the swift current to aid the boy.

The pulmotor was called out and was rushed to the scene, but the boy's condition did not warrant its use.

Moved by Ald. Stratton, seconded by Ald. Duffus, that the guarantee period be five years, that a surety bond be accepted for the maintenance during the guarantee period, that if the City Solicitor sees no objection that tenders be asked for the work as a unit, and also for the concrete base and the wearing surface separately, and that tenders be received up to July 8.

Moved by Ald. Green, seconded by Ald. Duffus, that notice be given of the intention of the Council to construct under Section 9 of the Local Improvements Act, pavements of streets outlined.

Interest In The Divison

Examiner Special:

LONDON, Eng., June 25. — Tonight's division in the House of Commons, challenging the Government's finance policy, promises much interest. Even the Liberals admit much uneasiness. The Labourites declare they will abstain from voting against the opposition's amendment, which regrets the absence of imperial grants to local authorities. The Government, however, with the Irish vote behind them, will probably have fifty of a majority.

A TRIUMPH FOR 24th BATTERY

Local Artillerymen Put the Crack Royal Canadian Artillery Out of Action in Manoeuvres.

MADE FINE SHOWING

From a Staff Reporter:

PETAWAWA CAMP, June 25. — The Peterborough 24th Battery achieved signal success in manoeuvres yesterday by putting out of action the crack permanent artillery corps of Canada, the Royal Canadian Horse Artillery. The umpires praised highly the work of the tenth brigade generally.

Col. Brock was the chief umpire, and Col. John Hughes commanded the white land forces and Col. G. H. Smart was in charge of the brown land forces. Monday the local Battery spent a hard day in the field. They left camp Tuesday morning, then being part of the brown land forces, and fought their way through to Thistle siding, where they bivouacked on the night of the 23rd. The artillery divided into different divisions and the tenth brigade, including the 24th Battery, which is quartered at Peterborough, was working with the white land forces marching on Petawawa. The 10th brigade was part of the main body of the Whiteland forces and on nearing the point of action the officer commanding the brigade, Lt.-Col. T. W. H Young, was taken with the headquarters staff to select suitable artillery positions for the artillery engaged with the Whiteland forces. Major G. R. Hall, officer commanding 24th Battery, was then given temporary command of the brigade, and Capt. C. P. Fee given charge of the 24th Battery. The enemys' cavalry, supported by the R.C.H.A., were located, making a forward flanking movement at the right of the main body, the idea being to cut the Whiteland forces in front of H. R. H. the Duke of Connaught and his staff, who had assembled at the point where the battle was to finish. Their action, however, was deterred by Capt. Fee. One battery of the brigade was sent forward to select a new position. The 24th was at this time firing on infantry supposed to be entrenched at the left of the water towers of Petawawa camp. The flanking forward movement by the enemy's cavalry, supported by the R.C.H.A. was deterred and the 24th immediately opened fire from their concealed position, and had the satisfaction of putting out of action the crack artillery corps of Canada. This saved the situation for Col. oJhn Hughes' troops in that portion of the field and saved he day for the Whiteland forces by prompt action. Any shots in the enemy's ranks before they returned fire would have resulted in total destruction in actual warfare. The officer commanding the brigade and other officers, consider it a red letter day for their troops. During the last attack a mounted brigade of cavalry and horse artillery charging down on the white forces was a beautiful sight. The men enjoyed the outing and the grim earnestness in sham battle vouches for the grim determination in times of war.

After "cease fire" had sounded the grand march past took place before His Royal Highness who, with his staff, witnessed fifteen thousand troops pass him. The Duke also reviewed the lines of the 24th Battery and admired the horses. Col. Young, black and begrimed, was met with open hand by His Royal Highness, whom he escorted through the lines. On the night of bivouac five regiments of cavalry, including the Third Dragoons, bivouacked in a stretch near the artillery camp. The 24th leaves for Peterborough Saturday night at eight o'clock and will arrive in the City on Sunday morning.

Lady Witness Testifies At The Inquiry

Examiner Special:

QUEBEC, June 25—Expert replied to expert this morning, John Reid, a naval architect, made one suggestion which drew particular attention. In his opinion, he said, the watertight bulkhead between the two boilers was not breached by the force of the blow.

Miss T. V. F. Townsend, the only lady witness called during the inquiry, graphically told how she went down with the ship. She came up near to three men wearing life-belts. She put her hand on the shoulder of one, but was pushed off. She went down again. She came up near to a man with a suitcase, to which she clung. Afterwards she was picked up by one of the Storstad's life boats. "Luckily for me," she said, "I had learned to swim."

SWEEPING VICTORY FOR VILLA

Special to The Examiner:

WASHINGTON, June 25—Further authentic reports of Villa's victory, yesterday, indicate it was a sweeping one, and that he has affected a juncture with the other Constitutionalist forces which will enable him to march on to Mexico City with twenty five thousand men, several batteries of up-to-date artillery and complete equipment. The fall of Mexico and the capture of Huerta are expected here within three weeks.

FRATERNAL SUNDAY WILL BE OBSERVED

Arrangements Have Been Completed for Monster Parade of the Different Bodies on Sunday Night

DIVINE SERVICES

On Sunday next the first Annual Fraternal Sunday will be observed. By this it means that the majority of the Fraternal Societies of Peterborough will assemble at 6 o'clock on the Market Square and march in procession to the south of the city, thence northward, and on dispersing will attend the churches, each order attending that church which will be assigned it. The societies which will be represented will be the Knights of Pythias, Ancient Order of Foresters, Independent Order of Foresters, Canadian Order of Foresters, the local lodges of Orangemen, the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and the Woodmen of the World. Three bands will be in attendance, the 57th, the Maple Leaf and the Salvation Army. The marshalls will be Colonel Miller, Mr. Ernie Reid, and Fire Chief Howard. Mr. Dawson Kennedy is chairman of Committee on Arrangements.

The object of this movement is to create a more cordial feeling between the various organizations of the city. A pleasing feature of this project is that one-half the loose collections of the various churches will be devoted to the Health Association for the purpose of aiding them in their intention of giving the consumptives of the city a two-months' outing. The other half, of course, will go to the respective churches, and it is thought that, with the increased attendance and probable increase in the offering on account of the cause that that portion going to the churches will not be smaller than the usual collection.

It is, of course difficult for the marshalls to estimate the probable number of men. If the crowd is very large, it may be necessary to send some to Ashburnham and some to the south end of the city, but this can only be determined after the parade is formed.

P. C. SILL PASSES AWAY

Third Member of Police Force to Die Within Past Few Months

Wm. Sill, for two years a resident of Peterborough and a member of the local Police Force, passed away early this morning, after an illness of several weeks. The late Wm. Sill is the third of the local Police Force to pass into the great beyond during the past few months. But recently Sergeant Adams and P.C. McGinty, of the "Old Guard" of the force, died within a few days of each other, and this morning P.C. Sill, one of the more recent additions to the Police Department, passed away.

Deceased was a man of sterling character, and a policeman who was unswerving in his duty. During the time he was on the local police force he had occasion to make some arrests that were fraught with danger to himself, but never once did he flinch from his task. He was highly respected in Peterborough, and in his home town of Appleby, Eng., and in both places he leaves a large number of friends, who will be sorry to learn of his death.

The late Mr. Sill was born in Yorkshire, England, and came to Peterborough from Appleby, his home town, two years ago. He was twenty-nine years of age, and is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Sill, Appleby, Eng., as well as his wife and one daughter. He was a member of the Canadian Order of Foresters, and attended St. John's Church.

The funeral will be held on Saturday afternoon, from the family residence, Lansdowne street, to the Little Lake Cemetry.

MILL IS DESTROYED

Shingle Mill of the McDonald Estate Lumber Company Burned to the Ground in Midnight Blaze

DAMAGE IS $3,000

A fire broke out some time between eleven and twelve o'clock last evening at the McDonald Estate Lumber Company's Mill, on George street, the shingle mill being completely demolished and the damage in all amounting to some three thousand dollars.

At 11:30 the watchman at the mill gave the alarm, and a further alarm was turned in at Box 18 (Ackerman's). The Brigade, however, was on the spot by this time and began to lay the hose, of which no less than four thousand five hundred feet was used before sufficient length was obtained from the two hydrants on George street. Three streams of water were quickly in operation, and the firemen proceeded to protect the planing mill, which was seriously threatened by the flames from the burning shingle mill. This structure was already too far gone to admit of attention, but the efforts of the Brigade were rewarded when the flames on the wharf and in the main building were extinguished and the conflagration was confined solely to the shingle mill. The Chief and his men experienced some inconvenience when working between the two buildings, for the smoke was intense and the flames were so near that their rubber coats were more or less burnt. Trainmen coming east reported that the flames could be distinctly seen as far as Manvers.

Mr. John Duignan thought the blaze must have been started by men fishing off Point St. Charles, (upon which the shingle mill stood), and that a match or a spark must have ignited the sawdust, and thence the mill received its commencement, for, he added, power is conveyed to the building from an outside source and no fire was evident when he left the building. He estimated the damage at about three thousand dollars, the building being insured for about half that amount.

MINISTERS IN POLITICS.

The Examiner congratulates Sir James Whitney on his apparent return to health, as it sympathized with him in his illness. The sympathy of the whole Province, irrespective of politics, went out to him as the man; but as a politician he is subject to criticism. In his Massey Hall speech he spoke of the "desecration of the pulpit" by ministers taking part in politics.

This is unworthy of Sir James; he is a good man; but in this he is merely echoing the cry of bad men—of men who have no use for ministers or churches; who never darken the doors of churches, never hear the voice of a minister.

Sir James forgets that at the time of his first return to power, he publicly thanked the ministers, whose activity in answer to his appeal, contributed to his success.

In the last election campaign some of the very men who now denounce the ministers for taking part in support of a great moral issue were loud in their praise of the ministers who took the platform in support of what they considered a moral issue in the campaign of 1911; and some of the ministers they applauded then are most bitterly abused now. What is the difference? Why the change of front? But we don't expect consistency from some of these tender friends of ministerial reputation. Some of these sensitive souls who cannot stand the sad spectacle of ministers "desecrating the pulpit" are prepared to march arm in arm to the polls and vote with the supporters of the liquor traffic. We are sure you will not be one of them. Your minister is fighting your battle and the battle of your boy. He is doing his duty fearlessly and conscientiously. Will you do yours as conscientiously?

HOW IT WORKS.

A legal gentleman this morning said he tried to collect a water-rate yesterday, but didn't succeed. The man who owed the bill thought he had a better use for his money than paying for water. His money had all gone in drink. If only the waterworks funds, suffered from drink it wouldn't be so bad. The family of such a man suffers a hundred times worse.

This is only a type of the wicked waste the bar represents. The children cry for bread. No bread; the money of the bread winner has been spent in drink, gone to make up the $800,000 or more dollars a year that is wasted in Peterborough every year over the bars.

The wife and children want clothing. No clothing. The money the father should provide for this is spent in drink, and gone to make up the $800,00 or more dollars wasted in Peterborough every year over the bar.

This is only one case out of hundreds; only one incident in thousands that are happening day after day, year after year.

The money waste is not the only waste. There is the waste of manhood, there is the waste of the home; there is the waste of good citizenship. There is the waste of earning capacity, here is the waste of unemployment.

Every merchant, every industrial establishment, every church organization, is the worse for the waste, moral and material, represented by the bar.

Nobody profits by the bar but the liquor dealer. In all other respects the bar is a deadly deriment. It not only absorbs money that should be spent in providing for the home, and paying the imposts that are necessary to maintain our municipal and civic institutions, but it increases our taxes. The revenue derived from licensing an evil, making an accursed traffic legitimate by solemn act of Parliament, is only a fractional offset to the immense economical and moral waste caused by the bar.

Who wants to keep the bar? Does anybody at heart want to keep the bar but the liquor interests?

The present government does not at heart want to keep the bar; but it is tied to it by political and party bonds, and it cannot see its way clear to break the partnership.

The liquor traffic recognizes the present government as its only hope. That is why the liquor interests will poll a solid vote against Rowell candidates pledged to abolish the bar.

Will any elector, allied to or frindly to the liquor interests, cast a vote for a Rowell candidate? Not one.

The line of cleavage in this contest is a straight issue between drink and decency; between right and wrong; between waste of money — economic waste, waste of manhood, wreckage of homes, and the tremendous moral and material, domestic, civic and national uplift, represented by the virtual extinction of the drink traffic, by the abolition of the bar.

The elector has it in his power to strike the blow at the gigantic waste of the bar. Will you add a wasted ballot to the awful waste represented by the bar?

Think it over. Do some deep and honest thinking.

A vote for Gillespie is a vote for abolition of the bar. He will vote for any government that introduces advanced temperance legislation. There is no limit to the length he will go with his vote to wipe out the traffic root and branch.

A vote for Soden is not a vote to abolish the bar. It is a vote for a candidate who professes to be on the side of temperance, but will get the votes of everybody opposed to temperance; every beneficiary of the liquor traffic.

If Mr. Soden is elected, he will be the only representative in the Legislature supporting the government that is theoretically in favour of temperance, but not pledged—he leaves himself this loophole—and he won't get a chance to vote for advanced temperance legislation. He will be the solitary voice crying in the wilderness.

Now the question is, will you waste your ballot by voting against abolition of the bar, and voting with the upholders of the traffic?

Your vote for temperance, for abolition of the bar, will not be wasted, even if as is possible and perhaps probable, the present government is returned to power. A good strong vote in favour of abolition of the bar all over the province, will be a warning to the present government that it must take great forward steps, if not strides, in advanced temperance legislation if it is to hold its place in the confidence of the people.

A good strong vote in this riding and in other ridings, in favour of abolition of the bar, will be a warning to the present goverament; will be a message to the Dominion Government that the temperance sentiment of the Provincial and Dominion electorate is something that must be reckoned with, in the future, even if its immediate ambition, the abolition of the bar is not realized.

No vote, therefore, will be wasted that is cast for the abolition of the bar.

Will you waste your ballot in support of the greatest waste that has ever cursed the world, by voting to keep the bar?

EDITOR OF ORANGE SENTINEL DECLARES FOR ROWELL POLICY

Resigns as Editor of Sentinel in Protest Against Keep-the-Bar-Policy of Government—Makes Government Responsible for Bilingual Schools.

TORONTO, June 25.—Because every man who votes for Whitney candidates is "imperilling the success of the great movement to wipe out thirteen hundred bar-rooms that are degrading the citizenship of this Province," Mr. W. R. Plewman, 61 Hilton avenue, has resigned the editorship of The Orange Sentinel. This is the short, concise and emphatic statement made to the Globe last night by Mr. Plewman, who gives as his sole reason for resigning his ediorial post the fact that The Sentinel came out in open advocacy of the Government cnadidates in the present election.

Mr. Plewman does not mince matters. Having taken up the cudgels on behalf of temperance, he then delves into the bilingual school question. "I am not one of those," he writes, in a letter to the Globe, "who run away from the statement that the supreme issue in the present contest is the bilingual question. I am convinced that if we let more French into the schools of Ontario our Anglo-Saxon civilization will be crowded out, British institutions will go by the board, our school system will be inefficient, illiteracy and low social conditions will be fostered, and the whole Province suffer degradation."

"If this be true," he continues, "as the Government speakers now say it is, then politicians who mangle and emasculate school regulations in the interest of the French should be swept out of power by a patriotic people."

Whitney Government Responsible.

Mr. Plewman then goes on to recite that in 1912 certain bilingual regulations were declared in the interest of the Province, which were satisfactory to patriotic people:

"But those satisfactory regulations were changed. By Mr. Rowell? No. By the present Government? Yes." The fact stands without challenge that the regulations "were amended to please Henri Bourassa and a handful of French fanatics."

The Government is appealing to the race pride of Anglo-Saxons, the letter continues, in the hope that they will save it from deserved defeat for getting on the wrong side of temperance sentiment. But at the opening of the campaign Sir James Whitney did not say the bilingual question was the supreme issue. "Desperate predicaments require desperate resources, and like the thief that would escape by crying 'Stop thief, stop thief,' the Government is crying, 'Stop the betrayal of the English language.'"

Proving His Statements.

Mr. Plewman then proceeds to prove his statements by quoting from the columns of The Sentinel: first, September 11, 1913, then September 18th, in which it was stated that the bilingual regulations in Ontario were changed to please the French, and nobody was saying a good word for the changes. The change most objected to is the abolition of the supervising inspectors, and the placing of the whole system of inspection and supervision under the Chief Inspector of the Department of Education, who is quite unable to accomplish this thoroughly along with his other tasks.

These things being so, as he believes them to be, Mr. Plewman declares:

"Then every man who believes bilingualism to be the supreme issue, every Britisher worthy of the name, must record his vote against those who made it possible for the French to mar the whole future of this Province." The question is too big for party divisions.

While The Sentinel took a neutral position against the bar, Mr. Plewman explains that he did not feel called upon to take any pronounced personal position, but when it came out and advocated the election of Government candidates, "thereby imperilling the success of a great moral issue, I decided to get my freedom and do all that is in my power during the short time that is left before voting day to turn the tide in favour of temperance."

Old Country News

ENGLAND.

Owing to the scarcity of cottages at Epsom the employees at the London County Council Asylum in the district, who number several hundreds, are forming a co-partnership housing company with the intention of building altogether 250 cottages, a start being made with fifty. The asylums committee have promised to let land on the estate on very favorable terms.

The death is reported of Mrs. Mary Peters, a widow, of Farncombe, Surrey, whose proud boast it was that she assisted in making the first braces worn by the late King Edward. The old lady, who was eighty-three years of age, came of a long-lived family. Her grandmother lived to be ninety-nine, and her great-grandfather attained the great age of 116.

The husbands of two women, who were each sentenced to a month's imprisonment for theft at Liverpool, asked if they might go to prison instead of their wives. The stipendiary replied to one, "I am afraid that is impossible," and another man standing at the back of the court then shouted, "I will go to prison for my wife, too." Both the men were removed from court.

B. Arnold, who celebrated his ninetieth birthday recently, was one of a team of veterans that met and defeated a younger team at the Alum Chine Bowling Club, Bournemouth, by 22 to 17. His partners were Bowen Smith, aged eighty-seven; Thomas Shepheard, aged eighty-four, and J. Prichard, who is nearly eighty. The match was arranged in honour of Mr. Arnold's birthday. He was as keen as any of the players.

A father summoned for not sending his child to school stated that the child was suffering from ringworm. The justices held this was no defence, because the Newport education committee had established a special school for children suffering from ringworm, where they could be taught and treated. The father was, therefore, ordered to pay the costs. Newport ringworm school is the only school of the kind in the country.

Why You Should Hit The Bar and Hit It Hard

Away back in the early thirties of the last century, a tall, lean, lanky labourer on a Mississippi flat-boat, after he had helped to unload his cargo at New Orleans, strolled through the city and found himself in the slave market. There he saw that evil in all its brutal shamelessness—ugly and merciless. He saw human beings put up on the auctioneer's block, and sold like cattle. He saw families torn asunder, women degraded, and the divine image in the human form insulted and abused. He knew that slavery was maintained by professedly good men, defended in the pulpit, and preserved by the legislature. But the man's soul revolted. He brushed aside the flimsy sophistries that surrounded the evil, and baring his head, he swore, "If ever I get a chance to hit that thing, by the Eternal God, I will hit it hard." And thirty years after that same man, Abraham Lincoln, had his chance, and hit hard, and human slavery died.

There is another slavery to-day in civilized society, an evil that has come down from ancient days, that appeals to man's appetite and passions, that is supported by social customs, recognized by the law, defended by good but mistaken men. It is an evil that wastes property, degrades men, and kills the soul. As much as human slavery ever did, just as much to-day does the drink evil disrupt families, debase manhood, destroy humanity. It is hard to kill entirely; perhaps during our lives it may not disappear. But there is a chance to hit it on Monday the severest blow it ever received in this fair province of ours. Will you hit it, and hit it hard?

Thousands of people have for years been calling for the chance to hit it. Mothers sorrowing over the disgrace and shame of their boys, have been praying for the chance. Fathers grieved for the wasted lives of their sons have been longing for it. Human wrecks, hoping little for themselves, have been calling for it. Christian men and women, hoping for the uplift of humanity, have been praying for it. What are you going to do now? Here is the opportunity. You may not kill the evil entirely, but you can hit, and hit it hard. Will you forget party, forget personal friendships, forget your admiration for this man or the other, forget everything but the fact that the enemy is before you, and strike hard?

A LEAD PENCIL PROPERLY USED ON MONDAY WILL HIT THE BAR A DEADLY BLOW. WILL YOU USE IT PROPERLY; THAT IS HONESTLY—ON YOUR CONSCIENCE?

Why "Is That You Daddy?" Is A "Revolting" Picture

That genial and accommodating young candidate for the Lgislature, who "hinched" Mr. W. K. McNaught, the new CM.G., off the seat in Northeast Toronto, Mr. Mark Irish, is annoyed, humiliated, indeed quite disgusted, at the sight of that thought-provoking poster, "Is that you, Daddy?" He entered his protest at his nomination on Monday. It was "revolting." His protest is just. The poster contributed to the "Abolish the Bar" campaign by Mr. Arthur H. Heming, a noted Canadian artist and a Conservative, is too realistic, too serious, too true to life, to add to the gaiety of the nation. It tells too plainly the old story of a man's wrecked life, a resolated home, and a boy not only robbed of boyhood's joy, but cursed with inherited blood-taint, and [illegible] with a [illegible] can be made free.

It is "revolting." But more "revolting" still, and more humiliating to every [illegible] is that [illegible] between the boy and his helpless Daddy stands an open door bearing the sign "The Bar" on its swinging screen. When that screen swings in a man enters, well-dressed and [illegible], and seemingly master of himself. When that screen swings out a dishevelled, maudlin, brutalized creature staggers out, collapses soddenly against a post, and, before the police can gather up the human wreckage and hide its awful shame, the little curly-headed boy is surprised into a tragedy more piercing than is ever witnessed on any stage: "Is that you, Daddy?"

And what changes that "revolting" shame into crime, a crime for which there is no excuse, is the almost unbelievable fact that over the bar which wrought all that misery and degradation hangs a "License," issued by the authority of the Government of Ontario, granting legal right to the whole "revolting" and damning business. The privileges of that bar-room are protected and its rights enforced every day by the public law officers of the Crown, and by all the dignity and prestige of the Provincial Government. A responsible member of that Government is Mr. Irish's own fellow-candidate, Dr. R. A. Pyne, the Province's Minister of Education, to maintain whose Department the Daddy pays taxes, and to whose schools the boy must go. And Mr. Irish himself asks his fellow-citizens to give him their votes that he may stand by Dr. Pyne and make secure the special privileges of the bar-room's license.

Is it any wonder Mr. Mark H. Irish says "revolting"? But would it not be more to his credit if he withdrew his opposition to the men who are fighting for the abolition of the bar in every hotel and club in Ontario? It is by men who are involved, as Mr. Irish is involved in relation to the traffic, who vote for him and for his associates, and who give power to the Government to license "The Bar," that such "revolting" scenes as the poster depicts, such ghastly tragedies, are played out, often in secret, but always in grim reality, year after year, in Toronto and in every licensed municipality, throughout Ontario. Be what you call "a doer of deeds," Mr. Irish, not a trifler with words. The poster stands: "Is that you, Daddy?"

WHEN THE BOY MAKES DADDY THINK

"One year ago, had this election been on then," said a young Northeast Toronto Conservative, "I would have voted for Dr. Pyne and Mark Irish. The situation now is changed. During the year a baby boy came into my home. With that new responsibility I cannot and will not vote for any man whose vote and influence are on the side of the licensed bar-room. I never marked a Liberal ballot in my life, but when I vote for my boy as well as for myself that vote will be for a man and for a party that do not get the votes of the distillers and brewers and barkeepers. The boy makes the difference."

That is the new confession of faith and declaration of independence of a Toronto Tory. The coming of the boy makes the difference in the voting of the man. Party association and family tradition are strong, but the chance to safeguard his own boy from the temptations of city life as he knows them is supreme over all other claims.

Turn and hedge and excuse yourself as you like, the issue is between "abolish the bar" and "keep the bar." Will you help keep it?

Notice is hereby given that a Quarterly Dividend for the three months ending June 30th, at the rate of ten per cent. (10 per cent.) per annum has been declared upon the Capital Stock of this Institution and that same will be payable at the Offices of the Company in this city on and after July 2nd, 1914.

The transfer books will be closed from June 20th to 31st, both days inclusive.

The Eva Mylott Recital

Miss Eva Mylott's vocal recital, which took place at the Opera House last evening, evoked many expressions of delight from the music lovers who were fortunate enough to be present. Unhappily, the event did not attract as many as it was worthy of, but those who attended were amply repaid for their attention.

Prior to the commencement Mr. J. J. Turner announced that Miss Mylott's pianist had unfortunately met with an accident and was unable to be present, and that no pianoforte selections could therefore be rendered. Miss McKee, however, accompanied the singer in a commendable manner.

Miss Mylott possesses a rich contralto voice of exceptional range and volume. Nor does her success depend entirely upon these qualities, for the tone colour exhibited in appropriate passages suggested that her voice has been carefully trained. This was especially noticeable in Carl Bohm's "Still wie die Nacht," and Giodanni's "Caro Mio Benn." Songs of a lighter order included "The Meeting of the Waters," "A Perfect Day," "Annie Laurie," "The Leaves and the Wind," "Oh That We Two Were Maying" (Nevin), and "Will o' the Wisp." The vocalist demonstrated her capacity for opera when she rendered in fine style, 'My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice" from "Samson and Delilah."

Miss Mylott was accorded much applause, to which she generously responded.

600th Anniversary of The Battle of Bannockburn

On June 24th, 1314, Scotland Became an Independent Nation People Crowned Robert Bruce as Their King.

WAS A GREAT BATTLE

Breathes there a man with soul so dead
Who never to himself hath said,
"This is my own, my native land";
Whose heart hath ne'er within it m burned
As home his footsteps he has turn'd
From wandering on a foreign strand?

Six hundred years ago, June 4, 1314, on the field of Bannockburn, upon which the tourist to-day may gaze from the walls of Stirling Castle, Scotland became an independent nation.

When Edward I. had tasted the joys of conquest by subduing Wales and annexing her to England, his ambition led him into an effort to add Scotland to his realm. Nearly thirty years before the battle of Bannockburn Alexander III., King of Scotland, died and left his kingdom to his little granddaughter, Margaret of Norway. There was talk then of a peaceful union of the two countries, to be brought about by the marriage of this Princess and the son of Edward I. Unfortunately the tiny Queen, overcome by the stormy trip from her old home in Norway to her new kingdom in Scotland, fell ill and died. She was the last of the Celtic line of rulers.

Among the claimants to the throne were two Norman noblemen, Robert Bruce and John Balliol. The rivals could not settle the question, so invited Edward I. to act as mediator. As a number of the claimants were already vassals of the English King, they were acquiescent when he took advantage of the situation, and, each hoping for preference, acceded to his demand to acknowledge him as their feudal suzerain. Balliol was crowned King, but because of Edward's unjust demands he soon threw off his allegiance and war began.

The English King succeeded in capturing Balliol and carried him off to England. At the same time the English took with them that famous Stone of Scone, known as the "stone of destiny," upon which the Scottish Kings had been crowned from time immemorial, which was later incorporated into the English coronation chair, and which militant suffragettes in London nearly shattered with a bomb only a few days ago. This was not only one of the oldest traditional stones in the world, but also one of Scotland's greatest treasures, as it has been firmly believed by many to be the very stone upon which Jacob slept at Bethel when in his dream he wrestled with the angel.

Edward also proceeded to garrison the Scotch castles with English soldiers, but he had reckoned without the liberty-loving Scots. To be sure, he had the aristocracy under his heel, but not the great mass of the people, who promptly rose in revolt with Sir William Wallace as their leader. At the battle of Stirling he overcome the English and was given the title "Guardian of the Realm." Wallace was a most successful regent, but finally, through the treachery of one of the Scottish nobles, he was delivered into the hands of the English and killed.

Robert Bruce, grandson of that earlier Bruce who had been a claimant to the throne, arose to take up the leadership. Edward I. died, and his son, Edward II., contrary to the promise he made his dying father, turned back ino England. Bruce at once urged on his followers to drive all English from their land. There followed years of hardship and disaster, skirmishing, and desperate fighting. Finally, in 1313, every fortress-castle except Stirling had been wrested from England.

Bruce lay siege to Stirling. Edward II. beatirred himself then, and with an army 100,000 strong, consisting largely of cavalry, marched North to defend the castle. Bruce's army numbered 30,000, mostly infantry, yet by clever strategy at Bannockburn the English were completely overcome. Edward himself barely escaped with his life. Not since the battle of Hastings had the English suffered such a sweeping defeat. With that victory of Bannockburn was born the independence of Scotland, and the people joyfully crowned as King their hero, Bruce.

"ONE OF THE OLD BRIGADE" ON SCOUT MATTERS

Editor of The Examiner and Scoutmasters, Peterborough—

Gentlemen,—I read with interest the article entitled, "Boy be a Scout" in last evening's Examiner.

As one who served four years as a Scout, and afterwards as a patrol leader in the Old Country, I can heartily endorse many things which "One Interested" brings forward as reasons why a boy should become a Scout.

I know that there is nothing like practical scouting for developing a healthy boy or strengthening a boy who is weak physically, but is this the Chief Scout's object in forming the organisation? The Scout law is my althority for saying "no." The aim of the Scout movement is, as "One Interested" says in effect, "To make the boy a man." Now, this is just where scouting fails.

I shall not tell of the ways I have proved this, but being an active worker in a city where we had about fifty troops, (the troops to which I was attached numbered about 200 on roll), I had opportunities of observing Scouts in all phases of work, and found that religion has very little to do with the majority of present day Boy Scouts.

I came to Canada intending to join myself to a troop of Scouts here, thinking the movement better than at home, but on hearing the reports from those who know, I have decided not to make any move till I find the troop where SOME religious, as well as physical, instruction is given.

Is there any Scout who can honestly say he has kept the Scout law for ONE day? "One Interested" omits No. 10 Scout law (added by the Chief Scout a few years ago) i.e., "A Scout is pure in thought, word and deed." This is the law every Scout promises on his honour to obey.

Scoutmasters, while you are training your boys in signalling, first aid and other such things, which they may or may not need, are you teaching them to "be prepared" for the great event which all must face — death? You have the moulding of these characters; you may in many ways impress the message of love on the minds of the boys; tell me, are you filling your trust?

Be a Scout, but BE one.

I append a few verses from my old troop marching song, and in closing I trust I shall soon find the troop where the first promise of our oath is carried out, "Honour God and the King."

"Render unto God the things which are God's.—(Matt. 22-21.)

"ONE OF THE OLD BRIGADE."

THE SONG OF THE SCOUT.

The Boy Scouts of the King are linked in friendly tether
Upon the battle scene they'll face the foe together.
They're every mother's son prepared to fight and fall;
The enemy of one the enemy of all is

When scouting games we play, we train both wind and muscle,
We shout "hip-hip-hurrah" and gladly join the tussle.
We do our good turn daily nor leave
it till to-morrow,
We smile and whistle gaily when in pain or sorrow.

SING A SONG OF WHISKY.

Sing a song of Whisky,
A pocket without pence;
A purse that's always empty,
A head that has no sense.

Four and twenty jail birds
Under lock and key,
Curse the drink that cost them
The birthright of the free.

When their cells are opened
Drinking more and more;
A drunkard's life behind them,
A drunkard's death before.

The Brewer in his counting-house
Is counting out his money;
The Barman in his parlour
Is eating others' honey.

While starving little children,
And women lean and poor,
In rags, and broken-hearted,
Beg from door to door.

Sing a song of Whisky—
Sound it all the time;
The horrid song of Whisky—
Sorrow, sin, and crime.

MR. TODD OBJECTS TO THE BOY OR THE BAR PICTURE

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Dear Sir,—Will you allow me space for a few words in connection with the present campaign. I do not wish to get mixed up in it publicly, but I cannot refrain from a word of kindly protest against some pictures we see pasted up over the City. I take it for granted these are supposed to be in the interest of Christianity and temperance. Now, sir, I would be very sorry to think that this cause which we love, and have such confidence in as being of God, requires such dreadful looking pictures to advance its interests. I, for one, do not think they will advance the cause of Christ or temperance one iota. In all sincerity, I would implore those who are responsible for them to have them taken down at once. And, if we need pictures, let us have a picture of a saintly father or mother teaching their child or grandchild the Ten Commandments, the Beatitudes, or the 27th Psalm, or something of that kind. To my mind it would be much more elevating to public thought, and more credit to the cause of Christianity.

I hope the brethren will not think of this as impertinent, but will receive it in the spirit in which it is written. I am not writing for or against either party; it is the principle I wish to touch, that of picturing evil that good may come. If our boys and girls saw such a man as is pictured they would run away from him, but they will stand and gaze on such pictures, fill their young minds with it. And I believe an unholy picture has the same effect on the young as unholy conversation. I think Paul bears out this idea when he says: "I would have you wise unto that which is good, but simple concerning evil."

Trusting this will not give offence, but may bring forth fruit to the glory of God.

Thanking you for space,
Sincerely yours,
R. J. Todd.

A GREAT WORK

While the vast enterprise of double tracking the entire Canadian Pacific system is one that cannot in the nature of the case be fully realized for years, yet when it is stated that there will be shortly 1,096 miles of double track between Port Arthur and Calgary, leaving gaps of only something like 165 miles — one gets a realising notion of the work involved, of the great distance covered and of the courage and persistence involved in this large and notable undertaking of duplicating the whole system, which comprises some 13,000 miles of track. Of course, the chief consideration is the West, whose rapid development called for this new policy; but the East will be similarly treated in time, especially the lines which connect large centres of population, and promise bigger business. The cost will be so enormous as to baffle exact figures at the moment; the double tracking too, will be built in a vastly different way from the original railway, which was put through in a tremendous hurry; coerced, as one might say, by political exigencies, and which was only required at the time to show the two steel bands, however weak was the bridge underneath them. So defective was the original building that many millions had to be spent in reinforcements; but the present double tracking will offer a finished railway, in every respect, both as regards the weight of rails, the strength of bridges and the perfection of roadbed. Thus applied, the new policy will work out for immediate return through the added business the double tracked system can attend to.

BOY OF 6 HAS WILD AUTOMOBILE RIDE

NEW YORK, June 24.—A wild automobile ride, engineered for his own exclusive benefit by John Maguire, six years old, son of Thomas Maguire, a city marshal, furnished a deal of excitement recently in that section—Flushing, L. I.

Results—John is suffering from a broken collarbone, the front of a barber shop is wrecked, and the automobile is out of commission.

The automobile, belonging to the Far Rockaway Cleaning Company, was standing in front of the Maguire home about two o'clock. John and some of his playmates busied themselves in examining it. Having completed his outside inspection, John climbed inside and continued his explorations. He placed his foot on the brake lever and the automobile began to move slowly at first, but with increasing speed as the automobile rolled down hill.

John, the sole occupant of the car, began to shout when he realized that something was wrong. The auto, however, continued with ever increasing speed down Amity Street, across Main Street, and into West Amity Street, until it struck a rut in the roadway. The vehicle then swerved and ran upon the sidewalk, plunging into the front door of a crowded barber shop. John was tumbled into the street.

There was a wild scramble by those occupying the barber's chairs for places of safety. The auto was removed to a nearby garage. Physicians at the Flushing Hospital treated the boy's injuries, which were said not to be serious.

Stoney Lake Breezes

STONEY LAKE, June 24—The fine new prize-package wharf, built by the Government at Sandy Beach, sometimes known as "Kawartha Park Folly," is truly wonderfully made. It is a pyramid of cement built upon sand and with a sandy approach, which, during high water, was partially washed away. One-half of the approach, next the wharf, was capped with a thin layer of cement. The sand has been washed away underneath, leaving huge crusts which are exceedingly dangerous to walk over.

The side of the wharf next the shore on each side of the approach, is built with steps, but they are so narrow that no boat could unload passengers on them unless it would be from the blunt end of a punt.

The outside of the wharf has a wooden buffer placed about eighteen inches below the top, and bolted to the cement by huge bolts sticking out about one inch and a half past the wood, which would tear a hole in any yacht that was so unfortunate as to land up against it. Even the large steamers would have a deep gash cut in their planking should they come broadside.

The Stoney Lake Navigation Company started their two-trip-a-day service, Monday, June 22.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Ingram spent last Wednesday at Kawartha Park, the guests of Mr. Charlton.

Ministers Hanna and Beck Don't Speak---to Each Other or On The Same Platform

PORT STANLEY, June 24—The union picnic of the six Conservative constituencies of Elgin and Middlesex counties, held on Invererie Heights to-day, was not conspicuous either for its crowd, its enthusiasm, or its speech-making, but it was more conspicuous by the absence of one of its advertised stars, the Hon. W. J. Hanna. Hon. T. W. Crothers, M. P., was also absent, but he sent his regrets. Mr. Hanna did not. Perhaps he did not have any regrets, for during the past few days the Conservative papers in London and St. Thomas have been taking special pains to feature Sir Adam Beck over the Provincial Secretary.

However, they have consistently promised the electors that Sir Adam and Mr. Hanna would appear on the same platform and the committee has continually used both names in the posters and newspapers' advertisement. Then as late as this very evening the Conservative papers of London and St. Thomas carried stories of the "success" of this event, and included among the prominent speakers both Sir Adam and the gentleman "who would be Premier," Mr. Hanna. No mention was made by the Chairman as to why Mr. Hanna failed to appear.

Mr. Finlay Macdiarmid, in his speech, deliberately made the false statement that Mr. Rowell intended to leave the clubs free to sell liquor.

"Billy Goat" Presents More Argument

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—If the faith and morals of a flock entrusted to the care of a Minister of the Gospel are endangered by an institution, can it be wrong for him to assist the people in removing the legislation that permits those institutions to exist? How can any true Christian man object to a Minister using every legitimate means in order to protect his flock from losing their faith? I have referred to the fact that immorality is encouraged and fostered in the average bar room. Let me call your attention to another fact and that is that there is no place in this country that has done more harm to the Christian faith amongst the masses of the people than the bar-room. That is generally where the boy, who, in after years, becomes indifferent to religion, and very often loses all faith, starts to doubt the truths of religion. Let him stay with the bar and soon he will join with others in ridiculing everything in connection with Christianity. That is one public place where atheism, infidelism and unbelieving socialism is nourished and developed. You may preach any "ism" if you will only spend enough "quarters." A minister is nothing if he will not protect the faith of the boy, even if he has to take part in an election. I believe they should have no choice as to how and where they shall work; but go when duty calls.

About three years ago, in this very riding, the ministers were taking a very prominent part in politics on behalf of Conservative candidates, and be it said to the credit of the Liberals, whom they opposed, that they took their medicine like men, as they did at the time of the fall of the Ross Government. They did not slander and abuse the clergy as they are slandered to-day. At a partizan concert about that time the following remarks were made as a windup to a political speech by a local minister and were recived with enthusiastic applause by the very men who are condemning him to-day. He said: "That while the Church should take part in politics, still if they do take a part they should take their Christianity into the field with them; if this were done it would be better for the country at large."

After all, Mr. Editor, politics brings out some comical situations. This is even enough to make a goat laugh. Those sore heads of to-day should not get so nasty, for they spoil their chances of getting the clergy on their side again when the Dominion elections come on.

Elections some times help us to know the real character of our friends. Some Tory working men who cry "shame" at the Ministers, have been encouraging their brother workmen (who have Liberal leanings) to destroy their ballot by marking it "labour," and at the same time making speeches at the Conservative committee room in favour of the Conservative candidate. If the temperance advocates will do their duty on the 29th is it not reasonable to expect that both parties at Ottawa will sit up and take notice? We temperance people have the chance to show that we have the power to rule the destiny of any political party.

Rowell and his party have put the temperance forces to the test. Are we going to be tried and found wanting?

Billy Goat.

ENDS LIFE AFTER KILLING PET DOG

ST. LOUIS, Mo., June 25.—After shooting her pet fox terrier to death Miss Mollie Montgomery, forty-five years old, shot herself through the body with a revolver at her home here. She died at the City Hospital an hour later.

Neighbours heard five shots and summoned the police. Entering the front room of the house, Policeman Freeman found the dog dying on the floor, shot through the body. On a bed he found Miss Montgomery. She refused to explain why she had shot herself, saying, "Just let me alone."

Miss Montgomery lived with her brother, Hugh Montgomery, an employee of the Laclede Gas Company.

The cause of the suicide is not known.

A NOTABLE DIFFERENCE

The operation of the pension fund on the C. P. R. has made a notable difference in the loyalty and devotion of all classes of employees. The company has had its pension fund some twelve years, and there is to the credit of the Canadian Pacific fund at the present time nearly $750,000, with a total of 606 pensioners. The pension fund is one of the most important features of the workings of the respective systems. It gives each employee a certain assurance of support in old age. In many cases where the salary is small this would not be a great deal; but the smallest pension is $20 per months and to many in humble stations this would be greatly desiderated in old age and feebleness.

Last year the C.P.R. contributed under the rule of the fund, a total of $125,000, while the payment of pensions under the terms of the fund came last year to $109,329. The pension fund removes the distance between the management and the employees ;and gives to each the stimulating feeling that he identified with the interests and prosperity of the company.

GETTING A START

By NATHANIEL C. FOWLER JR.

(Copyright, 1914, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

I recently had a profitable interview with a Chicago captain of industry, the manager of a business running into the hundreds of millions, employing thousands of men and women. He made a remark which I shall never forget, for it contains much of the most of success. He said: "It is the man, not the job, that counts."

Like all other concrete statements, this one is subject to analysis, and should not be taken in a wholly literal sense.

It is obvious that many men of ability are held down by their positions; and it is also self-evident that the world, particularly that of business, does not give equal opportunity.

Thousands of men fail of accomplishment through no fault of their own. They are energetic, faithful, and ambitious; yet what we may call luck or circumstances, for the want of a better word, seems to erect an insurmountable barrier. Struggle as they may, at times it is apparently impossible for them to overcome their handicaps.

Taking men as they run, however, we find that most failures are due to the men themselves more than to environment or to other circumstances.

Men of mark, as a rule, deserve what they have received. They have voluntarily applied themselves with diligence to their tasks, and have made reasonable sacrifices for the sake of accomplishment.

It is fairer to deal with averages than with exceptions. If we do this, we must then place the bulk of the responsibility for success or for failure upon the man himself, rather than upon surroundings.

The man of ability, who applies self is more likely to win than to lose. The man of great capacity, who does not make the best of his opportunities, or who does not everlastingly seek opportunity, is as likely to be a failure, and, perhaps, more so, than is he who, with ordinary ability, uses what he has and makes it render all that it is capable of rendering.

Speaking generally, then, the remark of my Chicago friend is true. It is the man more than the job that counts.

The great man can develop a small job, and either make something worth while of it, or else use it as a stepping-stone to better things; but the mediocre man is not apt to take advantage of opportunity, and he is not likely to fill any position satisfactorily.

Notwithstanding fierce competition, periodical depression of business, and the innumerable handicaps which seem to pave the road of progress, the average man is, to a certain degree, in command of himself. He is more or less able to do what he wants to do, and to overcome any except extraordinary obstacles.

Every man is an individual, and in his individuality is vested all that he possesses. It is for him to say whether or not he will use his powers for the benefit of himself and his community, or whether he will waste what nature has given him and refuse to grasp and to hold the hand of opportunity which has been, and will be, proffered to him at every turn of the road.

Nowadays it is not as customary as it once was to establish positions and then look for men to fill them. We look for the man and then adapt the position to fit him.

It is "up to you," not "up to" your job.

Husband Killed By Wife Who Was Believed Cured

Was Shot While Driving to Their Summer Home

EXETER, N.H., June 24.—Henry H. Folsom, an attorney, of Boston, was shot and instantly killed by his wife while driving from the railway station to his summer home near here the other day.

"I killed him because he was going to marry another woman," Mrs. Folsom declared when she was taken to the police station.

Mrs. Folsom was found standing beside her husband's body as it lay in the road. A small calibre revolver, from which five shots had been fired, was found near by.

Mrs. Folsom is in jail and charged with murder in the first degree.

Mr. and Mrs. Folsom were on their way to their country home at Rockingham. Mr. Folsom, who was driving, occupied the front seat of the vehicle, and his wife behind him. The first shot fired entered the back of his neck. He evidently partly arose from his seat and tried to turn and seize his wife, for two bullets entered the side of his face. He evidently succeeded in turning completely around, for the fifth and last shot entered his forehead. Death was instantaneous.

Mrs. Folsom had driven to the station to meet her husband, who came from his offices in Boston to spend the week-end with his wife. Passers-by saw them a minute before the shooting, and when the revolver shots were heard J. E. Mitchell, C. S. Mitchell, and W. Hatch, who were near, hastened to the scene in an automobile. The men notified Samuel Davis, chief of police of Exeter.

When Chief Bayis arrived Mrs. Folsom made no effort to resist arrest, but asked, "Is he dead?"

When the chief of police told her that her husband was dead, she replied: "I do not think he is. Feel his pulse."

Dr. John G. W. Knowlton, deputy medical examiner, who had accompanied the chief of police, made another examination of the body and pronounced him dead. Mrs. Folsom was then taken to the police station and later transferred to the jail at Portsmouth.

"I have no case," she told officers at the police station. "No one will understand me if I tell you everything." Mrs. Folsom then declared that she shot her husband dead to keep him from marrying again. When arraigned before Judge Mayer, she pleaded guilty to the charge of murder. The Court then appointed Mr. Stewart E. Rowe to defend her. Mr. Rowe entered a plea of not guilty.

Mrs. Folsom was an inmate of the McLean Asylum for the Insane at Waverly at one time, having developed homicidal tendencies about five years ago. After remaining in the asylum for some time Mr. Folsom took her away and carried her to their home in Boston, as she appeared to have recovered. Recently it was alleged that she put her fingers around the throat of one of her friends and declared: "I could kill you so easily!"

Hoping that a country life would benefit her, her husband recently purchased the place at Rockingham, where they have lived recently. Evidences of insanity have been shown in her conduct.

Famous Scottish Divine Decides to Take Up Evangelistic Work in the United States.

TORONTO, June 24.—Rev. John MacNeill, the Scottish evangelist-pastor of Cooke's Presbyterian Kirk, in this city, has decided to give up his charge, which he took only about a year ago.

He has determined to go into evangelistic work—a branch of service in which many Scots bodies have heard him to advantage—in the United States.

His preaching in Cooke's Church had been attracting large crowds. He leaves shortly for a month's vacation, and will then return for two months before taking his final leave.

The Rev. John was brought here from Liverpool, where he had achieved an international reputation as a preacher, at a salary of $5,500.

SALT FOR RED ANTS.

Common salt is as good a barrier to the approach of red ants as one can find.

Let the salt be so placed that they cannot reach the place from which you wish to exclude them without passing over it and the remedy is complete. For instance, to keep them out of the refrigerator, place the legs in a receptacle holding a pint or so of salt, and set it free from everything else so that nothing can creep on or into it without passing over the salt.

IN YOUR TERRITORY THERE MAY BE 500 OR 5000 PEOPLE WHO DON'T KNOW YOU ARE ON EARTH, OR THAT YOU WANT THEIR BUSINESS. IF YOU DON'T TELL THEM, HOW CAN YOU SELL THEM?

When you've ordered Silk do you accept Sateen?

Almost a foolish question, but—not quite!

There are still some people who order Kellogg's Corn Flakes and are given a substitute "just as good"—and accept the imitation.

The difference between

Kellogg's CORN FLAKES

and the "just as good" kind is even greater than the difference between silk and sateen.

The great difference is in the flavor and the nutriment.

Be sure that you ask for and get Kellogg's. It is the original.

Keep Cool!

KEEPING cool is not a matter of keeping still. The people who get the most enjoyment and the least discomfort out of summer days are those who go right along with their regular business and ignore the weather.

We can all take a lesson from the up-to-date and progressive merchants of our town. They never admit it is too hot to do business. Every working day in the year their stores are open to receive us. Every day the newspaper brings us their invitations in the form of Advertising.

Why should we not respond to those invitations as readily on warm days as on cool?

They set us a good example when they say: "Come people, we are ready to serve you even if it is hot."

The enterprise of the store that advertises for our patronage throughout the summer, as well as the rest of the year, indicates a store worth trading at.

Let us read the advertisments rather than the weather report—and let us patronize the merchant who similarly disregard the weather and who show that proper spirit of disregard by advertising continually.

You can obtain helpful advice on advertising free of cost and without obligation by consulting the Business Department of the EXAMINER.

EIGHTH INNINGS RALLY WON LAST GAME OF THE SERIES FOR BRANTFORD

Stark Was Touched for Four Hits in a Row and the Assault Was Enough to Give Brants a 4 to 2 Victory---Chase Was Invincible With Men On.

An eighth innings rally by the Brants yesterday which netted them three runs, robbed the Petes of their chance to make it three straight from Rube Deneau's team, the visitors winning by 4 to 2. The game saw the first appearance in a Peterborough uniform of iPtcher Eddie Stark. It was incidentally his last, as the ex-Erie and Hamilton twirler was released last night by Manager Blount. Stark did not pitch a bad game of ball at that. He was inclined to be wild, but in the first seven innings he allowed only four hits and one run. Stark, however, blew up in the eighth. With one gone he started the trouble by passing Burns. Nelson flied to Welsh, and with two down the danger looked over. You never can tell, however, and four singles in a row chased three runs over and the ball game was gone.

Chase, Deneau's good left-hander, was on the slab for the Brants, and the southpaw delivered a mighty nice brand. Scout Maguire, of the Detroit Americans was in the stand loking him over, but Chase did not allow the presence of His Scoutship tp bother him. He was cool and steady, and with men on bases he was invincible. On one occasion Kelly and Stark led off with singles. Chase made a beautiful play on Blount's bunt to get Kelly at third. He then caused Byrne to roll one at Nelson, forcing Stark. Welsh walked and Dad Stewart came up with the bases full and two gone. Chase promptly struck out the hard-hitting right-fielder breaking the third strike over for him.

There were some fine fielding features including three double plays. Left-fielder Welsh contributed the fireworks, however, when he made a sensational catch of Forgue's drive to left. The ball was hit on the nose and was ticketed a sure double, but Welsh ran back to the barn and sticking up his gloved hand pulled the ball down while running at full speed. It was a circus grab, and Welsh got a big hand from the crowd.

First Innings.

Brantford — Burns grounded to King; Nelson singled through short. Deneau hit to Byrne, who tried for Nelson, at second, the runner beating the throw. King, however, got the ball over to Rooney in time to get Deneau. Ivers flied to Stewart.—No runs, one hit, no errors.

Peterborough—Blount walked and went to second on a passed ball. Byrne sacrificed, Ivers to Roth. Welsh scored Blount with a sacrifice fly to Deneau. Stewart drew a pass. Stewart died stealing, Lamond to Roth.—One run, no hits, no errors.

Second Innings.

Brantford—Taylor singled over second with three and two on him. Roth hit into a double, Stark to King to Rooney. Forgue flied to Welsh.—No runs, one hit, no errors.

Peterborough—Rooney grounded to Roth. King drove a liner into Ivers' hands. Fox popped to Ivers. — No runs, hits or errors.

Third Innings.

Brantford—Lamond walked on four successive bad ones. Chase hit to Rooney, forcing Lamond at second, Fox making a pretty catch of the throw. Burns flied to Welsh in short left. Nelson doubled over Welsh's head, scoring Chase; but was out, Welsh to Byrne, trying to take third on the hit.—One run, one hit, no errors.

Peterborough — Kelly grounded to Forgue. Stark died the same way. Blount singled over second, the first hit off Chase, and stole second. Byrne flied to Burns.—No runs, one hit, no errors.

Fourth Innings.

Brantford—Deneau fanned. Ivers flied to Welsh. Taylor singled to left. Roth forced Taylor on a smash which Stark partially stopped. Fox getting the ball over to King.—No runs, one hit, no errors.

Peterborough—Welsh fanned. Stewart hit to Forgue and was safe on the shortstop's bad throw. Rooney cracked a single through Chase, the pitcher knocking the drive down. King died on a high drive to Lamond. Fox hit a fly to right, which Deneau dropped, Stewart scoring. Lamond got Rooney flat-footed when he bluffed a throw to second to get Fox stealing and then whipped the ball to third.—One run, one hit, two errors.

Fifth Innings.

Brantford — Welsh made a sensational one-handed catch of Forgue's smash to left, which looked like a sure double. Lamond walked. Chase hit to Stark, who threw to Fox to force Lamond. The latter was off the bag, but threw to Rooney in time to get Chase, and Lamond was run down when he tried to go to third.—No runs, hits, or errors.

Peterborough — Kelly singled over second. Stark hit past Roth. Blount bunted to Chase, who nailed Kelly at third. Byrne died on a grounder to Chase, the runners advancing. Welsh walked, filling the bases. Stewart fanned.—No runs, two hits, no errors.

Sixth Innings.

Brantford—Burns was easy on a fly to Stewart. Nelson lifted one to King. Deneau grounded to Fox.—No runs, hits or errors.

Peterborough — Lamond made a nice catch of Rooney's foul. King dropped a single into left. Fox lifted a foul fly to Nelson. King was out, stealing. Lamond to Roth.—No runs, no errors.

Seventh Innings.

Brantford—Ivers grounded to Fox, Rooney making a nice play on a low throw. Taylor was hit, and stole second, going to third on Stark's bad throw. Roth walked. Forgue bunted to Stark and was out, Roth advancing. Lamond flied to Blount.—No runs, or hits; one error.

Peterborough—Kelly fanned. Stark singled through short. Forgue nearly nailing the drive. Blount singled to left. Byrne forced Stark with a bounder to Nelson. Welsh grounded to Forgue.—No runs, two hits, no errors.

Eighth Innings.

Brantford—Chase grounded to Fox. Burns walked. Nelson flied to Welsh. Deneau singled to right. Ivers singled to centre, scoring Burns. Taylor singled to short. Roth singled to centre, scoring Deneau and Ivers. Forgue was hit, filling the bases. Sterling replaced Stark and fanned Lamond.—Three runs, four hits, no errors.

Peterborough—Stewart singled past Ivers. Rooney hit to Roth, who tagged Stewart and then pegged Rooney out. King doubled to left. Fox walked. Kelly forced Fox, Forgue to Roth.—No runs, two hits, no errors.

Ninth Innings.

Brantford — Chase walked. Burns bunted to Sterling and Chase was out at second. Nelson fanned. Burns stole second. Deneau died on a smash to the box.—No runs, hits, or errors.

Peterborough — Miller batted for Sterling and was safe when Ivers dropped Forgue's throw. Blount popped to Forgue. Byrne forced Miller at second, Forgue to Roth. Welsh flied to Burns.—No runs, no hit, one error.

CONNIE MACK ONLY MANAGER WHO IS SATISFIED

Of sixteen managers in the American and National Leagues only one is not complaining; only one is not wanting some one thing to make his team a championship team.

If you think that the value of some ball players is overestimated, listen to the managers.

Frank Chance—A combination of hitters and run getters approaching the Cobb-Crawford combine would make a pennant winner out of our team as it now stands.

Hugh Jennings—Give me one of four of the White Sox pitchers and I would claim the pennant right now; just one more pitcher that I could rely upon.

Joe Birmingham — Give me my regular team and one more reliable right-handed pitcher and we would be up right at the top.

Branch Rickey—Give us two hitters and we would have a team that ought to win a championship or at least satisfy everyone.

Clark Griffith.—All I need is one hitting outfielder to help out. That would make us the pennant winner.

Bill Carrigan—Wagner back in shape, and a finished first baseman and we'd win another championship.

Jim Callahan — Two hitting outfielders and the pennant is ours.

Henry O'Day—We need a shortstop and with a top notch man there we'd go right along.

John McGraw—Needs a third baseman, of higher calibre to make the pennant a cinch.

Fred Clark—One more catcher and an outfielder who can hit and he would claim the pennant.

George StallingsA first baseman, and a finished catcher to handle and steady young pitchers, and his team would be up near the top.

Miller Huggins—A hitting outfielder and one more pitcher—and the Cards would be there or thereabouts.

Wilbur Robinson—A shortstop and one more reliable pitcher.

Red Dooin—A shortstop to make the team formidable.

Charlie Herzog—A finished catcher, and a hitting outfielder, and his team would look best in the circuit.

Judge from that how much luck enters into the making of a ball club. Suppose Chance had happened to pick up a man nearly as good as Cobb, or a hitting second baseman. His team would be right in the pennant scramble. Suppose Herzog had stumbled upon a pitcher like Johnston. The Reds would be figuring on a pennant.

New stars spring up every year and such accidents do happen. First year men sometimes develop suddenly into world beaters—and turn a team from hopeless to a contender. Glance over the lineups—Zabel, Conzelman, Acosta, Wyckoff, Pennock, Niehoff, Doak, Fritz, Uhler, Farrell, Evans, of Brooklyn.

The White Sox failing to find any hitting outfielders such as they needed, and adding to their already strong ed, are adding to their already strong in the draw besides judgment and brains.

CANADIAN LEAGUE NOTES

Ottawa Free Press.—Pitcher Roy Whiteside, a big right hander from the University of Illinois, who has been out one year in the Three-I League, will join the Ottawa hurling staff on their return home Thursday. Whiteside is in Iowa now and accepted terms this morning. It will take a couple of days to reach the Capital. The Senators tried to land h mlast season, but he had already booked up with a western club. Smejkal and Kubat have played against him and claim he will star in this league. While at the University of Illinois he was looked over by the Chicago White Sox. He is free for the reason he signed up in the Three-I League on an non-reserve contract.

Hamilton Spectator: There is a direct contrast between the leaders of the two frontrunners in the Canadian League—Doc. Reising and Frank Shaughnessy. The former has little to say either to his players or the umpires, while "Shag," he of the "crab" reputation, is continually panning some person.

In the two games already played here by the Londoners, Reisling has refrained from kicking of any sort. True, the umpires, McPartlin and Miller, have done very well but there have been chances to object that Reisling has never taken advantage of. He is, apparently too busy making the best of his opportunities to make foolish attempts to have the arbitrators change their decisions.

Reisling's quiet, fighting style is bound to result in success.

Hamilton Spectator: Paddy Dougherty is in St. Joseph's Hospital and the pitching staff of the Athletics is as a result badly crippled. The left-hander has not been himself since the locals played in Peterborough and yesterday was suffering such pain and anxiety that he was sent to the club physicians, who ordered him to go to the Hospital. He will probably be there about a week and in the meantime the club will have to worry along with an important series with Ottawa in the Capital without him.

Dougherty has been coming strong and his illness, while not serious is widely regretted. He is a willing lad and even yesterday was anxious to go in against London despite the doctor's orders that he not pitch. Donohue, Dolan, Shears and Manager Yates will have to look after the hurling in Dougherty's absence.

Outfielder Wilcox, formerly with Peterborough, was a visitor to the ball club headquarters this morning seeking a job. He was released by Curly Blount, if he wanted a job he didn't go the right way about it, apparently, for the club officials state he was after a president's salary.

Impossible!

"I was outspoken in my sentiments at the club this afternoon," said Mrs. Garrukous to her husband the other evening.

With a look of astonishment he replied: "I can't believe it, my dear. Who outspoke you?"

MORAN IS CONFIDENT

Says He Will Beat Jack Johnson on Saturday Night

PARIS, June 24.—If Frank Moran, of Pittsburg, is not heavyweight of the world after he meets Jack Johnson here Saturday night the aforesaid Frank will be much surprised. It's true, Moran thinks he'll win—really thinks so, or I'm no judge.

Moran was tapering off in his training to-day when I went out to see him at Butry-Sur-Plage. He looked fine, strong, active and with the clear eye and rosy skin of the well-trained fighter. After I looked him over I really thought myself that, perhaps, he can bring home the bacon—about $1,000,000 worth — when he meets the big black. And he sure thinks so.

Tom Kennedy, of New York; Willie Lewis, the old-time scrapper from the east side, and Jimmy Hatton, were on the job to give Moran his workout to-day. Lewis, quick, active, a real boxer, had mighty little on Moran when they sparred. Neither Kennedy nor Hatton showed anything like the white hope's strength.

Moran was lightning fast on his feet. He boxed so well that Lewis rarely landed a glove on him, and he stood up to Kennedy and Hatton with stiff short-arm lefts which made them back away early in the rounds. This short-arm left to the body, Moran says, is the blow which will beat Johnson. He thinks that Johnson's dissipated life must have got to his stomach and believes that if he can sink his big freckled fist once or twice into Johnson's midriff the negro will soon forget all his cleverness and be easy picking.

Has Plenty of Confidence.

"There are a lot of people who think Johnson can't be beaten," Moran said to me. "Well, they thought that of John L. Sullivan, didn't they? But Corbett turned the trick. They thought Jeffries was a cinch at Reno, didn't they? And you heard of what happened there. It's the same thing with Johnson now. No man can follow the primrose path (he said that—Moran's a college product) and be there as a fighter. Johnson has had his day. I am young, have lived clean, have all my energy and will use my head in the mill. I'll cut him down.

"Another thing, Johnson's the champion. He'll have to lead to me. If he thinks I am going to carry the fight to him and let him pick me to pieces with counters, he's got another guess coming. I'm going to fight my fight and not his fight. He may lead me for the first few rounds, but when the finish comes I'll be on top."

Moran certainly looks good. He has clearly trained hard and faithfully and as good a judge of what fighters should be as Willie Lewis is enthusiastic over his condition. Personally, I would not care to predict what Moran will do with Johnson. Men who know him well say he is an in-and-outer. If he has one of his good turns on when he meets Johnson he may win, but my impression is that he will need every ounce of skill, strength and determination he possesses to trim the big black champion of them all.

Usual Reports Circulated.

Reports were in circulation here to-day that Johnson had been offered big money by a gambling syndicate to "lie down" to Moran and that the champion had refused. It is mighty doubtful if any such offer was made. There is not enough betting on the mill o warrant the payment of such a sum as would tempt Johnson. Odds to-day were general at 2½ to 1 that the black would win, but perhaps less money has never been wagered on a big fight than this one is calling out.

Some few short-end fanciers have placed money on Moran to win. They pin their faith on his ability to keep away from Johnson's uppercuts for ten or twelve rounds. After that, they believe Moran's cleaner living and better stamina will tell.

BASEBALL

Harold McCormick and Kirby, of Mobile, another former Giant, are having a great race for the batting leadership in the Southern league. A few days ago they were tied for first place with a mark of .359.

The Albany Club of the New York State League, which is managed by Eddie Phelps, the former Brooklyn catcher, is proving a financial failure and there is some talk of giving up the franchise, rather than lose more money.

The Southern League is having another such race as the Federal. Only two and one-half games separated the Chattanooga team, in first place, and the Birmingham team, in sixth place at one time this week.

Charley Herzog gave his German athletes a great chance on his first appearance at the Polo grounds. He removed three players during the game and each time he filled the position with one of his Teutons. When the final out was made seven of the nine Redlegs in the game were Germans.

When the Feds become tired of paying salaries to players who are prevented from earning the same by order of the courts the jumping from the two major leagues to the Feds. will cease. Johnson is doing no pitching and it is expected that Marsans, Davenport and Schulta will be just as idle in a few days.

Sheton Lejeune, the player who gained fame by his wonderful throwing but has failed to shine as a major leaguer, is leading the Western League in batting with a mark of .429. In forty-seven games he got 17 doubles, eight triples and three home runs.

The Giants proved themselves good "mud horses" in the first game against the Reds. Despite the fact that rain fell heavily and made it difficult to handle the ball, McGraw's men went through the game without a misplay. The Reds made enough for two teams.

Mike Doolan has developed a .309 batting average in the Federal league Mike has made eleven doubles and five triples this season. This is quite a little different from what Mike did as a National leaguer.

The present western trip of the Washington club is one of the worst the club has had since the old days when it was the joke outfit of the American League. Pennant hopes were high in Washington until the team went west. They have fallen flat since that time.

STANDING IN FIVE LEAGUES

The Petes would have been out of the cellar yesterday if they had beaten Brantford. But they lost and are still at the foot of the rung, with however, good chances of climbing out before long. All three leaders lost, so that the Petes did not drop any further back in the pennant race. It is a grand old battle right now, and the next few days will find some changes in the standing. Ty Cobb Arrested For Fighting

DETROIT, Mich., June 25.—Tyrus Raymond Cobb, the famous centre fielder of the Detroit American League Baseball Club, was arrested recently in the butcher shop of W. L. Carpenter, on Hamilton boulevard, while engaging in a fist fight with Harold Harding, twenty years of age, one of Carpener's employees. Harding told the police that Cobb assaulted him after the ball player had drawn a revolver on the proprietor Carpenter confirmed the charge and said Cobb attacked Harding when the latter attempted to interfere.

Cobb was taken to the Beethune avenue police station and held pending an investigation. Several friends offered to furnish bail for his release, but even if Cobb is allowed his liberty he will not be allowed to play ball for several days. He broke his right thumb during the scuffle with Harding.

The only explanation which could be obtained from the ball player after his arrest was that the butcher had insulted Mrs. Cobb. Carpenter denied the charge, but said that Cobb rushed into the butcher shop, made the allegation and then started trouble.

A purchase made at the store earlier in the day is believed to be responsible for the affair. Cobb claimed that his wife told the butcher the purchase was not satisfactory, and during words which followed Carpenter insulted her. Cobb said he went to the butcher shop to demand an apology from the proprietor.

A dance will be held at the Chemong Park Pavilion, Wednesday night, July 1st, to open the season; with Asa Huycke's orchestra in attendance. Mr. Huycke has been engaged to furnish the music for the regular weekly dances every Thursday night and this in itself should assure every one at Chemong and Peterborough of the effort being put forth by the Regatta Club to make the summer an enjoyable one. The Regatta date will be announced early in July and arrangements have already been completed for the annual excursion from Chemong Park to Stoney Lake on Peterborough's Civic Holiday, for their annual Regatta.

CARD OF THANKS.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert A. Craig, 581 Patterson Street, wish to thank their friends for the kindness and sympathy shown them in their recent bereavement:

When we see the precious blossom
That we reared with tender care
Rudely taken from our bosom
How our hearts almost despair.

Round the little grave we linger,
Till the setting sun is low,
Feeling all our hopes have perished
With the bud we cherished so.

Another voice is heard from heaven saying: "Asleep in Jesus 'tis better far."

BASEBALL.

Once again the Arrows defeated the Veemanites to the tune of 16—12. The Veemanites were leading up to the last stanza when the Arrows made a desperate break for supremacy and nosed out ahead of Mgr. Veeman's crew by four runs, after pulling down a three run lead. The game was fast and snappy throughout, except for the last innings, when the Arrows commenced their artillery. The features of the game was a home run by A. Jackson and a flying line stab by P Schweier of the Arrows. F Sharpe in the box for the Arrows, did superb pitching, while his blonde brother did the receiving.

Although Rutherford Park is far from being a ball diamond, some nice plays were enacted on both sides and the Veemanites had three pitchers knocked out of the box.

The Veemanites are not content with this second trouncing, but are clamouring for another game. They'l get it—in the neck.

The teams were:

Arrows—1b., A. Sharpe; 2b., A Jackson; 3b., J. Schweier; s.s., W Rose; c.f., F. Jackson; l.f., N. Green r.f., E. Francis; p., F. Sharpe; c., C. Sharpe.

57th REGT. HOME FROM PETAWAWA

Col. Clegg Was Complimented on Showing of Local Contingent by Col. The Hon. Sam. Hughes, Minister of Militia

12,000 MEN IN CAMP

The 57th Regiment Peterborough Rangers, two hundred and seventy strong, returned from the training camp at Petawawa this morning, arriving in the city about 8:45 o'clock this morning. The local force went through the three days' strenuous work without a mishap of any description, and acquitted themselves in a splendid manner, in the manoeuvres at the camp. During their stay at Petawawa there were 12,000 soldiers in camp, so that it can be seen that thel ocal contingent were but a very small part of the total strength of the camp. The local regiment was complimented on its appearance and discipline by staff officers and others in authority at the camp, and the citizens have reason to be proud of the showing the regiment made at camp. Colonel Clegg received warm words of praise from the Minister of Militia himself for the work of the regiment. Peterborough was the third strongest city corps in camp, the two larger being the 48th Highlanders and the 6th Royal Scotch of Montreal.

The locals arrived at Petawawa half an hour before the schedule time on Sunday night, and were ordered to march to Chalk River, 12 miles away the next morning. Owing to the fact that rations had not been issued to the local corps, they did not leave the camp until about two hours and a half after the rest of the White force, but caught them at noon. Tactical manoeuvres were engaged in on the march, and the regiment with the rest of the 9th Brigade, which formed part of the White force, bivouaced at Chalk River that night. The next morning they were on their march to the camp, and about ten o'clock met the opposing cavalry force and succeeded in driving it back. On the return march and in the battle the locals were the leading regiment of the 9th Brigade which was under command of Colonel Preston. The White forces were under Col. John Hughes.

That night they bivouacked at Tissel siding. On Wednesday the 57th formed part of the Advance Guard as the column moved off toward Petawawa camp. Once again they forced the enemy back, until they were again in their entrenchments near the Petawawa camp. His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught, Minister of Militia, and Premier Borden watched the manoeuvres on Wednesday and the previous day. Major Bennet, of the local force was a field umpire.

The staff of the local regiment consisted of Colonel Clegg, Officer Commanding, Majors Bennet and Mills, Acting Quartermaster A. G. Carruthers, Acting Paymaster Major V. Eastwood, Medical Officer Hon. Mapor J. H. Eastwood.

The khaki uniforms will be returned to the Armouries to-night, where they will be received by the company officers. To-morrow night the Annual Inspection of the Regiment will be held, and the Muster Roll Call, and all men who attended the camp, and who have handed in their khaki uniforms, will be paid.

Stock Markets

A. E. Stratton & Co., Brokers, report the following:

NEW YORK, June 24—The Stock Market to-day declined very sharply, which shows that I was right in warning you not to carry much long stock for the sake of catching the last two or three points that may still be left on the bull side, and showing that I was correct in advising the sale of Can., US., St. Paul, LV., and RK., as well as ACP.

Can. declined two points and it is not my fault if you are not short above 28. I still consider it a sale around 28.

US declined to 60, I still consider it a good sale around 61.

ACP is a sale around 70.

RK as well as RBC may also be sold.

Will be able to tell you to-morrow night whther the real bear market predicted by us for this summer has started in earnest.

NEW YORK, June 25.—Latest reports indicate unsettlement in the stock market until new developments are digested. The most powerful interests in the financial world are understood to have a firm grip upon weak spots by reason of the generally liquidatipl condition of the securities market and cheap money rates.

The opportunities presented by the setback in the standard list to those with ready cash should not be neglected.

With the elmination of weakness and uncertainties the inception of a great boom may be anticipated.

Influential buying orders are reported under N.F.K., Atch., S.P., C.P., and G.Q. Weakness in leading activities is due to some extent to "Protection."

HOW THE GOVERNMENT BUNGLED THE BILINGUAL SCHOOL QUESTION

A Detailed History of What Was Done to the Original Clause 17 and Present Sorry Attempt to Evade the Blame—Facts For the Interested Elector.

Here are a few facts on the bilingual school question which should be digested by the conscientious elector.

In the first place, at the last elections Sir James Whitney pooh-poohed the question, taking the position "Why, what's the use of all this bother? There is no such thing as a bilingual school in Ontario."

And yet a commission was appointed to investigate the matter. The report was presented, but still the people were not satisfied.

Then followed a direct statement from Hon. J. J. Foy, Attorney-General, who stated that there could not legally be any bilingual schools in Ontario.

What Dr. Reaume Said.

A few days after the Foy declaration, Hon. Dr. Reaume, Minister of Public Works, speaking in the eastern section of the province, said:

"That was made on Mr. Foy's own hook and was the expression of his personal opinion on the subject." Then he goes on: "You know, I find the biggest opposition to bilingual schools is where people have not got them, and consequently do not know much about them. However, the Government have taken a stand. Sir James Whitney's attitude is that while English should be made the language of the schools so far as practicable, and while every child should receive an English education, we are not against the French-Canadians and Germans having their children started in their mother tongue as a means to an end, and having their mother tongue taught in the schools as a subject when so desired by trustees representing the people of the school sections."

Speaking at Hawkesbury, he is reported to have said: "The Prime Minister (Sir James Whitney) said to me— 'Go and tell the electors of that district (Prescott) that the teaching of the French language will not be abolished in the Province of Ontario.'"

Dr. Merchant's Report.

The Government sent Dr. Merchant out for a report on the school question, and his summary showed an unsatisfactory condition in many schools of the province. So the Government passed what is known as Regulation No. 17. That is the first regulation No. 17.

Members of the Government publicly declared that the Government intended to stand by that regulation; yet it was shortly afterwards repealed and a new one issued.

But the new regulation raised a howl of protest from the Conservative press.

The objection to the new regulation was that it shifted the responsibility for deciding as to the extent and character of the teaching in the schools from the Government to the inspectors, and made it possible to the inspectors for political influence in any local constituency to affect the character of the instruction.

What the Press Said.

Here are a few of the remarks from Conservative papers regarding the change made to clause 17:

Toronto Telegram (Conservative): Dr. Pyne's explanation of his volte face is totally inadequate. It means that either he is ignorant of the dangers of bilingualism or reckless of its consequences. Afraid to grapple with the question, he shifts the burden upon the shoulders of subordinates. In that way he fondles the hope that he may satisfy everybody. He cherishes the illusion that he may realize the aspiration of every petty politician which is to run with the hare and hunt with the hounds.

Kingston Standard (Conservative): Probably the explanation is that the Minister of Education did not think at all, which unfortunately seems to be one of his failings. An agreeable man personally, not even his best friends will presume to say that he had made a success of the Department of Education. He seems to lack both administrative and executive ability. This is bad enough, but that he should lack backbone is absolutely inexcusable in a Cabinet Minister. When, then, added to this is his crawl on the bilingual issue, it seems to us that the time has come when his next further crawl should be out of the Whitney Cabinet, and if he is not willing to crawl, then his going should be expedited.

Kingston Standard (Conservative): The Spineless Minister of Education.

Orange Sentinel: It is idle for the best friend of the Government to argue that concessions have not been made, and what gives the Sentinel the greatest concern is that the thing is done with some subtlety. There is an absence of that robust frankness that we have become accustomed to look for in the policies of Sir James Whitney. It is impossible to hide the meaning and effect of the change.

Ottawa Citizen (Conservative): Obviously the action was caused by political expediency, as the Hamilton Herald plainly states. Possibly it was a "Government" backdown, as charged by the Toronto Telegram.

What Mr. Rowell Says.

"Yet in the face of that Mr. Hanna says the big issue in this contest is —is this to be an English-speaking Province? If it is the big issue, why did not the Premier refer to it in his manifesto? They have issued their campaign book, and though some eight pages are devoted to educational matters, yet not in that book from beginning to end do they discuss the question of bilingual schools.

"This is an English-speaking province and an English-speaking province it will remain. The regulations of the Education Department should be framed and the Department administered in full recognition of this fact. This has been our view today. It was in view of that that in the very first address I delivered as leader of the Liberal Party I stated our position as follows:

"To provide thorough adequate training schools a sufficient supply of competent teachers and thus ensure under proper regulations that the pupils in every school in the Province receive a thorough English education."

The Whole Case.

Such is the whole history of the red herring produced at the eleventh hour and presented locally by R. J. Soden, Dr. Sutton, and others to lead temperance men from the Abolish-the-Bar trail. It would be a reflection upon the intelligence of readers to point out where the double-dealing has been done, and why there should be any further reference to this matter.

The Conservative press has raked the party over the coals for its twisting and turning, and the present effort to foist the matter on to Rowell will fail utterly. The blame is so manifestly connected with Dr. Pyne and his colleagues that no one will be misled by the gasping efforts of the Government when it finds a great moral issue sweeping in on it.

HOW TO OBTAIN GOOD DIGESTION

The Stomach Must Be Toned and Strengthened Through the Blood

The victim of indigestion who wants to eat a good meal, but who knows that suffering will follow, finds but poor consolation in picking and choosing a diet. As a matter of fact you cannot get relief by cutting down your food to a starvation basis. The stomach must be strengthened until you can eat good, nourishing food. The only way to strengthen the stomach is to enrich the blood, tone up the nerves and give strength to the stomach that will enable it to digest any kind of food, is through a fair use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. The one mission of these pills is to make rich, pure blood that reaches every organ and every nerve in the body, bringing renewed health and activity. The following case illustrates the value of Dr. Wiliams' Pink Pills in curing indigestion. Mrs. T. Reid, Orangeville, Ont. says: "I have much pleasure in testifying to the reliability of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. For several years I had suffered greatly from stomah trouble. Several doctors prescribed for me, but their medicine did not help me. After every meal I would suffer great pain, and would often be attacked with nausea. I grew weak and had almost lost all hope of recovery. At this juncture I decided to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, whih were recommended to me. In these pills I at last found the right medicine, and I at last found the right medicine, I am once more in good health. I have much pleasure in sending you my testimonial in the hope that it will encourage some suffering persons to try this remedy."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all medicine dealers or will be sent by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Conservatives At Owen Sound Behind Rev. T. A. Roger

OWEN SOUND, June 25.—Alderman R. D. Little of this place, hitherto a leading Conservative, is going to vote against the Conservative candidate. "I've got to vote for the policy that I've believed in all my life," he said, "even if my party does not take it up."

Dr. R. Howey, another Conservative, is speaking at Rodger campaign meetings. "The party lines are obliterated in face of this issue," he said. "Our chance has come to get rid of the bar, and we ought to take advantage of it, even if we do have to wrench ourselves away from our party."

Rev. Father Kelly Was Esteemed By Norwood People

The whole community learned with regret this week of the intended removal of Rev. Father Kelly, pastor of St. Paul's Church in this village, and also of the Church of Our Lady of Mount Carmel, Havelock.

Rev. Father Kelly has received word of his appointment to the parish of Parry Sound, same to take effect about the middle of next month.

He will be succeeded here by Rev. Father Galvin, principal of the Catholic High School, Peterborough. During his pastorate here, Rev. Father Kelly has greatly endeared himself to the members of his congregation and has also won the highest respect and friendship of those of other denominations. For his congregation he has always been on the alert to promote their social, moral and spiritual welfare, and has brought about many pleasing improvements in the church property.

Father Kelly has also been an admirable citizen—always ready to assist financially and otherwise in any good civic movement. He is an honorary director and active member of the East Peterborough Agricultural Society. He has also taken much interest in all kinds of athletics, being greatly esteemed by the young men of the town.—Norwood Register.

"THE TERMS OF SURRENDER"

By Louis Tracy

Diving through a press of traffic, he reached the opposite side of a small square. A congestion of street-cars and other vehicles cleared during a brief interval, and looking back he saw the old man standing motionless, gazing up at the sky. At that instant a ragged urchin, carrying a bundle of papers, seemed to recognize Rafferty, and spoke to him.

The Irishman, called back to earth, bent over the youth, and, evidently, obeying a generous impulse, added his own store of "returns" to those of the boy, patted him on the head, and pointed to a doorway.

Power could have repeated with tolerable accuracy every word that passed, though the notable din of New York was quadrupled in that particular locality:

"Say, how's immy, Mr. Rafferty?"

"Ex? Faix, he's mighty bad, but God is good, and mebbe he'll recover. Is it takin' in yer returns ye are? Well, now, here's some Idon't want; sojust add thim to yer own shtock, an' mind ye'l he afther takin' the money to yer mother. She needs it more'n I do, the poor soul."

Then the man of faith recrossed Sixth Avenue and was lost to sight.

In his room tht night Power wrote to Marguerite:

"My dear Meg.—This is my first and last letter to you; so I pray you read it with sympathy. To-day I bought a ring at a jeweller's, intending it tobe a token of our promised marriage. I am sending the ring, and I ask you to wear it in remembrance of one who must remain forever dead to you. The life of happiness we planned has turned to Dead Sea fruit; for I have been struck by a bolt from Heaven, and marriage becomes an impossibility. I would explain myself more clearly if explanation were not an insult. But I must say this—no man could have forseen the calamity which has befallen me, which has laid in wait throughout the long years to overwhelm me at last. That is all I dare tell you. Foregive me, dear one. I would not willingly cause you a pang; but Fate is stronger than I, and I am vanquished. Do you know me well epough to accept this statement in its crude truth? It cannot be gainsaid, it cannot be altered, time itself cannot assuage its rigors. Do not write to me. I have no fear of reproach, which would never come from your dear ips, but your strong, brave words would wring my very heartarings. And yet, I ove you, and will grieve till the end that you should have been reft from me. Farewell then, my dear one.

Next morning he paid a visit to the clergy-house connected with the cathedral on Fifth Avenue. He asked a priest who recived him if anything was known of an old man named Rafferty, who lived on West 27th Street, and had a grandson named Maguire.

"Yes," said the ecclesiastic. "I know Rafferty well, and esteem him most highly. In all New York there is no more God-fearing man."

Power smiled. "Fearing?" he questioned.

"Well, I accept the correction. 'Serving' I should have said."

"And he really exists?"

"Undoubtedly. Why do you ask?"

"I fancied that, perhaps, the age of miracles had not passed."

"Who says it has?"

"Not I. But I come here for a specific purpose. I mean to provide Rafferty with the sum of fifteen dollars weekly while he lives, and, if his grandson recovers from an accident he sustained yesterday, a further sum sufficient to maintain, clothe, and educate the boy unti he is taught a trade. My banker will co-operate in a trust for this purpose. Will you or one of your brotherhood, act with him?"

Thus it came to pass that Rafferty like Job, was more prosperous in the end than in the beginning, and died when he was "old and full of days"; but he had lived five long years to bless the name of his benefactor.

That evening Power took train to the West. He prepared MacGonigal for his coming by a telegram, never thinking that an event which lay in the category of common things for him meant something akin to an earthquake at Bison. He was enlightened when a broas band, "headed by the mayor and a deputation of influential citizens" (see Rocky Mountain News of current date) met him at Bison Station, where an address of welcome was read, the while MacGonigal and Jake beamed on a cheering multitude. At first Power was astonished and secretly annoyed; then he could not help but yield to the genuine heartiness of this civic welcome, which contrasted so markedly with his last dismal home-coming. He made a modest speech, expressing his real surprise at the community's progress, and promising not to absent himself again for so long a period.

Then he was escorted in a triumphal procession to the ranch. It was the organizers' intent that he should sit in an open carriage in solitary state, in order that thousands of people who had never seen him should feast their eyes on "the man who made Bison," while it was felt that, if he were not distracted by conversation, he would giv emore hed to local marvels in the shape of trolley-cars, a town hall, a pubic library, a "Mary Power" insitute, and a whole township of new avenues an dstreets.

Bue he declined emphatically to fall in with this arrangement, and, if his subconscious mind were not dwelling on less transient matters, might have been much amused by noting how MacGonigal, Jake, and the mayor a man previously unknown to him) shared the honours of the hour. Nothing could have proved more distasteful personally than this joyous home-coming; yet he went through the ordeal with a quiet dignity that added to his popularity. For, singularly enough, he had not ben forgotten or ignored in Bison. MacGonigal, the leader of every phase of local activity, never spoke in public that he did not refer to "our chief citizen, John Darien Power," nd his name and personality figured in all matters effecting the town's rapid development.

He was deeply touched when he found the ranch exactly as he had left it. He imagined that Jake and his family were iving there; but the overseer had built himself a fine house close at hand, and the Dolores homestead was altered in no respect, save that it seemed to have shrunk somewhat, owing to the growth of the surrounding trees and shrubberies.

When, at last, he and MacGonigal were left together in the room which was so intimately associated with vital happenings in his career, his stout partner brought off a remark which the ordered ceremony of the railroad depot had not permitted.

"Wall, ef I ain't dog-goned glad ter see ye ag'in, Derry!" he said, holding torth a fat fist for another handshake. "But whar on airth did ye bury yerself? Between yer friend Mr. Dacre an' meself, the hull blame world was a'arched fer news of you; but you couldn't hev vanished more completely ef Jonah's whale had swallered you, or you'd been carried up to Heaven in a fiery chariot like Elijah."

"Hello, Mac!" cried Power, eying his elderly companion with renewed interest. "Whence this Biblical flavour in your speech? Have you taken a much-needed religious turn?"

"It's fer example, an' that's a fac', Derry. Since you boosted me inter bein' a notorious charac-ter I've kind o' lived up ter specification. That's no gettin 'away from it. Ye can't deal out prizes to a row o' shiny-faced kids in a Sunday School without larnin' some of the stock lingo, an' bits of it stick. But don't let's talk about me. I want ter hear about you. Whar hev you been?"

"It's a long story, Mac, and will take some telling. Just now, looking around at this room and its familiar objects, my mind goes back through the years. What did you say to Nancy when she wrote and asked what had become of me?"

MacGonigal, who had made quite a speech at the reception, and had been unusually long-winded during the drive, reverted suddenly to earlier habit.

"Who's been openin' old sores?" he inquired.

"No one. Nancy wrote to me before she died. That is all."

"Look-a-here, Derry, why not leave it at that?"

"Unhappily, I cannot do otherwise. But I have a right to know exactly what happened."

"It wasn't such a heap. She cabled an' wrote, an' I had to tell her you was plumb crazy about—about yer mother's death. That was the on'y reason I could hand out fer your disappearin' act. Pore thing! Soon after she got my letter she gev in her own cheques."

"Have you met Marten recently?"

"He was in Denver last fall."

"And the child—the little girl—did you see her?"

"Yep. Gosh, Derry, she's as like her mother as two peas in a pod."

"Is Marten fond of her?"

"Derry, that kid kin twist him round her little finger; but he's a hard man ter move any other way."

"Where does he live?"

"In Europe, fer the most part. He's out of mines an' rails—in the West, anyhow. Last I heerd, he was puttin' through a state loan fer the I-talians."

"Quite an international financier, eh?"

"That's what the papers call him. Guess it's Shakespeare's English fer a dog-goned shark."

"You know Willard is dead?"

"Know! Didn't I celebrate with a school-treat for two thousand kids?"

"Mac! Haven't they taught you better than that at your Sunday Schools?"

"Thar's a proverb about skinnin' a Rooshan an' findin' a Tartar. That's me; all the time, when any of that bunch shows up on the screen. What d'ye think Marten kem to Denver for?"

"I can't imagine."

"He wanted ter buy the ranch. No, not the mine," for MacGonigal misread the amazement in Power's face, "just the ranch. Said he was anxious for little Nancy to own the property whar her mother lived as a gal."

"And what did you say—or do?"

"Handed him a joint straight outer the refrigerator, all fixed with mustard. 'Marten,' says I, just like that, 'Marten, ef you want yer little gal ter grow up good an' happy, don't let her suspicion thar's such a place as Dolores on the map. 'Why?' says he, lookin' black as thunder' 'Because,' says I, 'it's well named when thar's one of the Willard family on the location. Ef any children kin play around here an' be happy, they'll be Derry Power's, not yours. Sorry, Derry, ef ye didn't wish me ter rile him; but, till you was given up fer good, the one spot in Colorado his money couldn't buy was this yer house an' land'"

And again did MacGonigal fail to interpret his hearer's expression, nor did he ever understand the tragic import of his words. The story of Nancy's transgression was buried with her, and the grave seldom gives up its secrets. Moreover, was she not nearly seven years dead? And seven years of death count in the scale of forgetfulness as against seventy and seven of life.

CHAPTER XVIII.
THE SECOND GENERATION.

Marguerite Sinclair did not write. Perhaps, tucked away in a corner of Power's heart, a tender little shoot of hope that she might be moved to disobedience and revolt blossomed for a while. But it soon withered. She did not break the silence he had imposed on her. The quiet weeks passed. The vessel in which the girl and her father had travelled to London had already returned to South America; but never a word came from Marguerite. So far as externals went, Power seemed to have settled down again to the life of the student and the recluse from which he had been so rudely withdrawn. Beyond a rearrangement with Jake, whereby that pillar of the community was given the stock-raising business, while Power retained only the ranch, together with the paddocks and orchards in its immediate vicinity, there was no change in affairs at Bison. MacGonigal was offered a controlling interest in the mine; but he scoffed at the proposal. The proceeds of his third share would amount to nearly a quarter of a million dollars for the current year, and his personal expenditure did not exceed a fifth of that sum.

(To be continued.)

An Irish Rebel

A Story For St. Patrick's Day

By NORA M'CARTHY

It was in 1798 that the last attempt of any importance was made to free Ireland by violence. These revolutions have always been the work of the Catholic party, which lives almost anywhere in Ireland except in the province of Ulster, where many of the people are Protestants. So Ireland from the beginning of her revolts has been in the position she is now with reference to home rule, Ulster against the rest of the island.

One of the most earnest rebels in this 1798 trouble was Patrick Mulligan, a young fellow, who, like many another Irishman, was named for St Patrick, who introduced Christianity into Ireland.

After the Irish revolt of 1798 Pat was found to be so deeply dyed in treason that all his inventive powers, assisted by those of his friends, were not sufficient to keep him from indictment and trial, and he was sentenced to be hanged by the neck until he was dead. When the judge put on the black cap he asked the condemned man if he had anything to say why sentence of death should not be passed upon him.

"Divil a word, your honor," said Pat, with an impressive bow to the judge, "have I to say why sentence of death should not be passed upon me, for I'm the worst rebel in Ireland, but I have something to say when I shall be hanged. I have the honor to bear the name of the patron saint of Ireland. This year St. Patrick's day comes on Friday, two weeks from tomorrow, and I should be obliged if your honor would sentence me to die on that blessed day."

The judge granted this modest request and after he had passed sentence asked Pat just why he wished to be hanged on the saint's anniversary. Pat replied that St. Patrick was stronger than the king of England and would have a care for any one who should be swung off on that day.

The following two weeks were a series of receptions on Pat's part, everybody he knew coming to the jail to see him and bringing him delicacies. Instead of acting like a man who each day was twenty-four hours nearer the gallows, the nearer drew the time of his execution the merrier he grew. When asked by his friends why he was in such good spirits he said that he was named for St. Patrick, was to be hanged on St. Patrick's day and divil a bit would the saint suffer him to hang at all.

His faith affected his friends to such an extent that they set about trying to get a pardon for him. But Pat had given the government so much trouble, not only in times of open rebellion, but of unrest, that they were determined to get rid of him. So Pat's friends were obliged to try another plan. One of them, a cobbler, riveted together some straps to go under his arms with a hook at the back of the neck. Another told Pat of the plan to save him from death, while a third the night before the execution got the sheriff drunk, and in the morning he was not in a condition to officiate on the scaffold. So he appointed a deputy, and that deputy was the man who got him drunk.

When Pat was brought out to be hanged he made a bow to the crowd waiting to see him swung off and said: "Good morning to you. It gives me great pleasure to afford you amusement on this blessed morning." He was led up on to the scaffold and, acting on the instructions he had received, objected to the rope on the ground that it was not safe, being too light and might let him down and hurt him. So another rope was produced, and the deputy sheriff when he came to slip the noose over Pat's head contrived to catch the end in the hook at the back of the neck.

Now, there were those present who, if they had perceived what was going on, would have reported the fact, and though Pat might have been saved for the time being, he would have later been strung up in earnest without waiting for another St. Patrick's day to come around. So the deputy was obliged to go through the motions, and the rope was put around the neck of the culprit. It was intended that the hook should relieve the strain entirely, but it did not work as well as expected, and Pat was jarred senseless.

The deputy was obliged to let him hang an hour, but by setting ahead the hands of his watch he reduced the time to forty minutes. Then Pat was cut down, put into a coffin and driven away in a cart.

The jogging of the cart resuscitated him, and he was about to sit up when he was held down by a friend, and it was not till the cart struck a wood that he was taken out of his gruesome receptacle. He was then given a disguise and some money that had been collected for him and told to make for the coast and take the first vessel sailing for America. Pat bade them all goodby and the next evening was concealed on a ship about to sail for Philadelphia.

Pat found the United States recently revolted colonies of England, and there were as many patriots there as in Ireland. So he was much pleased with his surroundings and spent the first few years in his new home trying to organize an invasion of Ireland by his friends with a view to helping her to an independence similar to that gained by the American colonies. But finally he settled down and became an American citizen.

Nerves Were So Bad
THOUGHT SHE WOULD GO OUT OF HER MIND.

Diseases of the nervous system are very common. All the organs of the body may be sound while the nerve centres may be affected.

Many women become run down and worn out by household cares and duties never ending, and sooner or later find themselves with the nerves shattered, and the heart action weakened.

On the first sign of any weakness of either the heart or nerves, flagging energy, or physical breakdown, do not wait until your case becomes hopeless.

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills will at once quieten the nerves, strengthen the heart and build up the entire system.

Mrs. Archie Goodine, Tilley, N.B., writes:—"When I was troubled with my heart two years ago, I was very bad. My nerves were so unstrung that sometimes I would almost go out of my mind. I doctored myself with everything I could get, until at last I got four boxes of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, and they have cured me. I cannot speak too highly of this wonderful remedy, and will recommend it to all sufferers."

Price, 50 cents per box, or 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

TWO HUSBANDS.

A Humorous View of the English and American Business Brands.

In the American Magazine James Montgomery Flagg writes humorously about husbands. Following is an extract from what he has to say about the American business husband:

"This animal is very popular and justly so. He comes in a variety of colors, white, tan, deep red, mottled, brown, and sometimes green. The white variety is generally desired. There is no animal known that will take the amount of abuse and neglect that this one does, and still be devoted and affectionate. Hence his popularity. They are limited in intelligence, their one thought being the collecting of money. They will thrive on almost anything—scraps at the table, a few hot words or anything lying around the room that comes handy."

Of the English husband he says:

"The march of the centuries has made no change in this sturdy animal. Their love of hunting and killing is perhaps their most endearing quality. They will never distress you by coming home bleeding or mangled as they do not attack animals of their own size. They will eat anything except rare food properly cooked. This is technically known as patriotism. Fanciers in England claim preposterous human qualities for them, but this may be laid down to native enthusiasm.

"Applications of arnica are excellent for bruises."

A Cup of Coffee.

As a matter of fact, the secret of good after dinner coffee is merely strength—say a tablespoonful to each cup. The true test of coffee making is not after dinner coffee, but the mutinal pot. The French, as a rule, make execrable cafe au lait, not to mention their perverted taste for the bitterness imparted by chicory. The best coffee I've found and I make it every morning myself is in Germany. Austria, the United States and the South American republics. The secret of it lies neither in boiling nor percolation (which is the better method never can be settled), but in using lots of coffee. The average English cook expects a tablespoonful of ground coffee to produce as much liquid as the same quantity of tea.—Brazilian in London Opinion.

"Full Many a Flower."

Aunt Lindy had brought around her three grandchildren for her mistress to see. The three little darkies, in calico smocks, stood squirming in line while Lindy proudly surveyed them.

"What are their names, Lindy?" her mistress asked.

"Dey's name' after flowers, ma'am. Ah name' 'em. De bigges' one's name' Gladiola. De nex' one, she name' Heliotrope."

"Those are very pretty," her mistress said. "What is the littlest one named?"

"She name' Arthuficial, ma'am."—New York Post.

And to Spare.

"Mrs. Alden has five children. If there were seven more, how many children would Mrs. Alden have?"

Several hands were raised.

"Anna may tell us," said teacher. "How many children would she have Anna?"

"Enough."—New York Post.

8 BOXES CURED PSORIASIS

Mrs. Nettie Massey, Consecon, Ont., writes: "Three doctors described my trouble as psoriasis and one said I could never be cured. The disease spread all over me, even on my face and head, and the itching and burning was hard to bear. I used eight boxes of Dr. Chase's Ointment and am entirely cured—not a sore to be seen. I can hardly praise this Ointment enough."

A Rainbow Kiss.

Bacon—I gave my wife a rainbow kiss a few minutes before I left home this morning.

Egbert—What is the world is a rainbow kiss?

"One that follows a storm."—Yonkers Statesman.

The Reason.

"What are all these men doing here?" asked the visitor to the jail.

"Most of them," answered the guiding official, "are doing time for doing others."—Exchange.

Denis had just been ordered—with the rest of the regiment, of course—to "do his bit" of foreign service. He hastened round to Uncle Mulligan, long since pensioned off, with the great news.

"India—eh?" chuckled the old warrior. "Well, you'll find it a bit more than warm, my boy."

"Is it very hot out there, uncle?"

"Hot? I should say so!"

"How hot is it?"

"Well, I couldn't rightly say how hot it was, Denis, but I remember once when I was out there we were having target practice. We were only firing at 800 yards, but not a single hit was registered by the markers. The Adjutant was complaining, the Seargeant-Major was nearly off his head, but it was no good. Never a man could even hit the target.

"Then the 'cease fire!' was blown, and the adjutant stamped off to the targets to see if the markers had gone to sleep. When he had gone about 300 yards we all laughed, because he had fallen over. But what do you think brought him down? Why, a mound of solid lead, formed by the bullets that had been melted in the sun!

A PAGE OF THE BEST HUMOR OF THE WEEK

Closer Than a Brother.

"That French count sticks very tight to your skirts, Mae!"

"Yes. I fancy he must be the original plaster of Paris."

Provocative.

"I bet her a dollar that she wouldn't let me kiss her."

"What did she do?"

"She pursed her lips."

She Could.

"They say women have no sense of humor," he remarked. "Tell me, can you see a joke?"

"Oh, very plainly," she replied (looking straight at him.)

Quite a Depression.

Mr. Skids: "I want you to be as economical as possible, my dear. Times are very dull, and I want to continue to be able to look the world in the face."

Mrs. Skids: "I should say they were dull, when the only way a man can look the world in the face is to let his wife go round without any clothes."

Condolence.

Sympathetic Friend: "There's wan comfort, Mrs. McHinnery. Noo that yer puir man has gone to a better warld, ye ken where he is o' nights."

Mrs. McHinnery (grimly)—I still thee ma doots."

Like Other People.

Skits: "What gift do you suppose a man specially needs to be able to write humor?"

Skittles: "Oh, I don't know; but, I suppose, to be free from the troubles he jokes about."

Either a Good Enough Reason.

She: "If you insist upon knowing, there are two reasons why I can't marry you."

He: "And they are?"

She: "Yourself and another man."

There's a Reason.

Mother: "Bobby's so good, so unselfish! The dear boy always insists upon sharing his pies with his sister!"

Visitor: "Do you make them?"

He Don't Have To.

City Boarder: "I suppose you hatch all these chickens yourself?"

Farmer: "No; we've got hens here for that purpose."

Brakes

Dolly: "'Tis love that makes the world go round."

Cholly: "Er—yes; but butcher bills and rent slow the old thing up some."

A Vacuum.

"I put my best thoughts into that last book of mine."

"You certainly did."

"But you haven't read it."

"No, but I've been talking with you."

THE GREAT ADVENTURE

"Dash it all, let's be gay; let's go to the picture palace!"

Self-evident.

"I'm pretty sure Jones is in love."

"What makes you think so?"

"Why he's just bought a motor-cycle built for two."

An Epigrammar of Dress.

A woman's clothes should express her personality, rather than her husband's pocketbook.

The chief ambition of a woman should be to be able to change her dress as often as she changes her mind.

"The apparel oft proclaims the man"—and exposes the woman.

Located.

"What do you consider the chief end of man, Billups?" asked Barrowdale.

"Well, in these days of the tango," said Billups, "I should say that man's chief end was his feet."

In the Country.

Stranger—How far is it from here to Farmer Brown's?

Mr. Hays—Ten patent-medicine signs.

A Refining Influence.

Frost: "Do you think that the auto has an ennobling influence?"

Snow: "Well, speaking personally, we have been fined and refined."

A Frog in His Throat.

"Why didn't you study your French lesson last night?"

"Please, teacher, my throat was so sore I couldn't scarcely speak English."

No Occasion to Worry.

The owner of a private lake was not a little agitated to see a man composedly fishing in the pond, right beneath an immense sign prohibiting trespassing. With hasty steps the irate owner hustled for the waterside. "Look here!" he explosively exclaimed. "Can't you see that sign? Don't you know you are trespassing?" "I want you to distinctly understand that this lake is privately owned and privately stocked, and that fishing here is not permitted!"

"Just a moment, my dear sir," was the calm rejoinder of the fisherman, as he withdrew his line and rebaited the hook. "Would you mind telling me what kind of fish you stocked the pond with?"

"I stocked it with black bass," cried the excited owner, "and I don't propose"—

"That's all right sir," interjected the fisherman, casting his line. "There is no occasion to worry. I am fishing for pike."—San Francisco Argonaut.

At Home: A Watch

"Jones was telling me he expected some money soon. Did he get it?"

"I guess so. He doesn't ask me the time any more."

Quite Simple

"Mr. Varsity, I want to ask you a question," remarked the "Arts" maiden to her partner as they entered the conservatory.

"A thousand if you like," replied the gallant collegian.

"What is a kiss?"

The young man taken aback, but quickly pulled himself together, and firmly said, "this is."

"Sir," replied the indignant seeker after higher culture, "you misunderstand me. The interrogation I put to you was a mathematical problem which I thought might interest a student from the university."

"It does, it does" said the junior, as he twirled his light mustache, "but if it's a conundrum, I give it up."

The maiden's eyes sparkled, and there was music in her voice as she threw out the answer. "Why, it's nothing divided by two."

Easy Figuring

"How do you figure the cost of your wife's new gowns?"

"By an inverse ratio. You know the less of the dress, the more of the cost."

Pot and Kettle

"That Mrs. Brown is a very cruel woman. When her Tom and my Jack were fighting she pulled Jack's hair."

"Why didn't you prevent her?"

"Well, I was boxing Tom's ears and didn't see what she was doing."

An Error

"I beg your pardon, but you're standing on my foot."

"Oh, excuse me. I thought it was the foot of the man sitting down."

He Deserved It, Too

"Why Euclid," exclaimed Ptolemy, "what can be the matter? You've pulled out all your hair and seem not to have slept for several nights."

The renowned geometrician raised his fevered glance to his royal patron's face

"Sire," he faltered in a hollow voice, "they have sprung the servant girl problem on me."

Out of pity the king granted him two weeks' vacation.

Jealous

"Which of your stories do you consider the best?"

"The ones the other fellows write before I get around to it."

PLAT DU JOUR: CROAK-ETTES.
Ambition.

Some Coffee.

Davis is a lover of coffee, and unless it is both strong and good the waiter at restaurant or hotel soon hears from him. Recently he went into a restaurant for dinner. On raising his cup to his lips he made an ugly face and then beckoned to the proprietor.

"What do you call this stuff?" he asked.

"Coffee," meekly replied the man, somewhat surprised.

"Coffee!" repeated Davis, with scorn. "I could put a coffee-bean into my mouth, dive into the bay, swim up the Humber, and I'll guarantee that any one could ball up much better coffee than this over the entire route."

Quite Likely.

Jack Goodfellow: "Well, old man, I'm going to save my money now. And what do you think I'm going to do with my first hundred dollars?"

Tom Tightwad: "Pay your entrance fee to a home for old men."

Smashing.

"I have a set of dishes that belonged to my great grandmother."

"Really! Ours are all new. You see, we've always kept maids."

Not for Him.

"Can I get a drink here?"

"Yes. There's an old oaken bucket in the well."

"There isn't any old thing in the cellar in there!"

The Reason.

"The Comeups declare their ancestors came over with the very early settlers."

"Well, then they couldn't afford to deport them."—Baltimore American.

And What Happened Then?

O'Brien—Oi can say one thing: Oi'm a self-made man.

Casey—Is it boastin' ye are, or apologizin'?—Philadelphia Ledger.

A Heroine.

"What is a heroine?"

"A girl who knows she can't sing and can't be coaxed to try."—Lexington Lance.

Neighbors.

"The people next door play the graphophone incessantly."

"Still, they seem kind-hearted. They have offered to loan us any records we like."

"I should prefer to borrow some of those we don't like and thus get them out of commission for a few days."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Small Boy (to charitable lady): "Please, mother says she's much better of the complaint wot you gives 'er quinine for; but she's awful ill of the disease wot's cured by port wine and chicken broth."

Why Certainly

"Why is it some men look so awkward when they're dancing?"

"Probably because they look so awkward when they're not."

It Was Fate

The weary wayfarer had stopped the pedestrian and told him his tale of woe, and it was really a pitiful tale. He had had nothing to eat since the previous morning and was nearly famished.

The pedestrian's heart was touched and he tendered the weary wayfarer a dime, but the latter hesitated.

"Couldn't you give me something else?" he asked, faintly.

"Too small?" asked the pedestrian, sharply.

"No, sir; not at all," replied the weary wayfarer. "But couldn't you give it to me in nickels?"

"Why, you impertinent scoundrel, if you don't want"——

"Oh, yes, sir; yes, sir; I'll take it," interrupted the weary wayfarer. "It's not your fault! It's fate! That's what it is! Fate! Oh, it's an accursed device," he added, bitterly, as he took a dime savings bank from his pocket and slipped the coin into it. "I swore I'd put every dime I got into that, and I have been given fifty cents this morning and haven't had a bite to eat yet."

He gave the bank a vicious jerk and started on to look for a nickel or a quarter.

Awful

Harry: "I understand Gertrude married a man who made a big fortune by a lucky speculation in soap."

Grace: "Yes; and he disgraced her while they were on their honeymoon."

Harry: "How did he do it?"

Grace: "Gertrude wanted the other passengers to think an ocean voyage was an old story to them, when her husband, almost as soon as they were on board, pointed to a row of life preservers and asked the captain what was the idea of all the extra tires."

Sandy was walking along the road in deep thought, and it was his minister who brought him to earth again with:

"Halloa, Sandy! Thinking of the future, eh?"

"No," replied our hero, moodily; "Tomorrow's the wife's birthday, and I'm thinking o' the present."

"My husband is just getting over a spell of sickness, and I want to buy him a shirt," said Mrs. Binks.

"Yes, ma'am," replied the assistant. "Would you want something in a stiff front and cuffs?"

"No sir," said Mrs. Binks. "The doctor says he must avoid anything with starch in it."

A famous woman novelist was once asked why she had not married.

"I have three things about the house," she said, "which represent so closely the characteristics of the average man that I don't want any more of him."

"What do you mean?" her friend asked.

"Well," the novelist replied. "I've got a dog that growls all the morning, a parrot that swears all the afternoon, and a cat that stays out all night."

A certain reverend divine, who had long enjoyed a very excellent living in the metropolis but who was now on his deathbed, was visited by a young expectant, who modestly inquired after his health.

"Ah," cried the dying clergyman, "you care little about my health; it is my death you are looking after, young man."

"You are mistaken, sir, I assure you, for I am looking after your living," was the outspoken reply of the other.

Prisoner—It is difficult to see how I can be a forger, your honor. Why, I can't sign my own name.

Judge—You are not charged with signing your own name.

"No," said the old gentleman sternly, "I will not do it. Never have I sold anything by false representations, and I will not begin now."

For a moment he was silent, and the clerk who stood before him could see that the better nature of his employer was fighting strongly for the right.

"No," said the old man again, "I will not do it. It is an inferior grade of shoe, and I will never pass it off as anything better. Mark it 'A Shoe Fit for a Queen,' and put it in the window. A queen does not have to do much walking."

Father and son went for a stroll one sweltering day recently. As they passed a vender of ice cream the boy turned to his father and said, lovingly:

"I wish you'd buy me some ice cream, fader, I do feel warm."

His father gazed at him for a few seconds in mild surprise, and then exclaimed:

"No, no, Ikey, my poy; but I'll tell you vot I'll do. I'll tell you some ghost stories vot'll make your blood run cold."

Father—Come, my son, I cannot allow you to stay out so late at night. When I was your age, my father had me in every night at 7 o'clock.

Boy—Very queer father you must have had, then.

Father—A jolly sight better father than you've got, you young rascal!

He walked into the employment agency, with a smile and born-tired look, as well as a few other things.

"Any vacancies for a man like me?" he asked, as he arranged himself comfortably along the counter.

"What is your trade or profession?"

"My trade or profession?" he repeated, yawning. "I'm a coronation program seller."

"I see!" said the clerk dryly. "No, we have nothing in that line open just now!"

"I'd take something else if it suited me and I thought I could do it properly, you know," he went on, making himself more comfortable on the counter.

"As, for instance?"

"Well," replied the born-tired, "I wouldn't mind calling out the names of stations on board an Atlantic liner, or something of that sort!"

She appeared to be somewhat excited when he came home that night, and he naturally asked the cause.

"The man in the top flat has fallen in love with our cook," she said.

"What of it?" he asked.

"He's been trying to get her to run away and marry him."

"Do you mean the man who practices on the cornet every night?"

She said she did; and he made a dive for his pocket.

"Tell the cook," he exclaimed excitedly, "that I'm a poor man, but I'll give £10 if she'll go."

It Was a Good Tip.

A benevolent old lady looked out of her parlor window one day and saw a man walking up and down the sidewalk, apparently in great dejection. There was something pathetic and appealing in his manner; so she took a dollar, put it in an envelope and wrote on the envelope, "Never say die."

She slipped out of the house in the most casual manner she could assume and handed the envelope to the man as she passed him.

Next day the same melancholy man called at her house and presented her with a five dollar bill.

"It's funny," he said; "you're the only one that backed that horse called 'Never Say Die.'"

DERBY AND JONES.

Mrs. Jones: I did so enjoy your sermon this morning; I dreamt I'd won the King's Plate.

Her Own Method.

There is more than one way to keep an account book. The method of one woman is in the direction of simplifying the distracting matters of debit and credit.

Mrs. Twiller is extravagant in her expenditure for housekeeping, according to her husband's ideas. With a view to rectifying this failing, he recently bought her an attractive little account book, and carefully explained its use to her.

"Now," he said, "here is a $20 bill. Put down what I give you on one side, and your expenditure on the other. When that money is gone you shall have more."

A few days after, he asked to see the book, which Mrs. Twiller produced with an air of modest pride. On one page was written "Received from John $20." On the opposite "Spent it all."

Taking Ways

"That fellow's a great mimic. He can take off anything."

"Yes, even umbrellas."

Father—My child, if I should die penniless, are you well prepared to fight your way in the world of life?

Daughter—I think so, father. I've been thru three engagements already.

SYMPATHY!

The Reader: And a norful great lion came and etted up the p—poor little P—prince.

By the restaurant pay desk stood the manager, greeting each outgoing and incoming guest with a seraphic, managerial smile.

The smile grew broader, and, if possible, sweeter, as an elderly gentleman, looking well fed and comfortable, approaching to pay his bill. When he had collected his change he turned and noticed the beaming manager.

"By the way," said he, "you say on your bills-of-fare that you are always glad to receive suggestions from customers as to any possible improvements that occur to them?"

"That is so, sir—that is so!" answered the smiling one. "Have you any suggestion you wish to make?"

"Well—er—yes, I have. You state that you make your own sausages in this establishment, do you not?"

"That is correct, sir—we do!"

"Well, then, I would suggest that you let some one else do it. Good morning!"

A tourist called at an inn in Donegal and ordered a roll and butter and some tea. It was brought, and on cutting the roll he found a black beetle in the middle.

"Here!" he called to the waiter, "take this and show it to the proprietor."

"I wouldn't be afther showing it to the proprietor if I wor you, sor," said Pat.

"Why not?" inquired the tourist.

"Terrible mane man, the proprietor is, sor. Shure, he'll be afther chargin' ye for a mate tay."

Little Bobby, who had been taken for a Sunday walk in the park, was much interested in watching the swans while a keeper was feeding them.

"Papa," he asked, "is that a papa swan or a mamma swan?"

Which one do you mean, Bobby?"

"That tired-looking one over there with the feathers all pecked off the top of its head and the one the others won't let get any of the bread."

"That, my son," replied his father sadly, without even troubling to look, "is the papa swan."

Only last week that infatuated pretender, Augustus Perkly, on entering a ballroom said to the footman in a loud, peremptory tone of voice:

"Please tell my coachman to bring the brougham back in three hours."

The footman went, and two minutes later, as Perkly was standing up to dance with Miss Blonde, he returned to say, in a voice audible thruout the room:

"Your coachman says he can't come back in three hours, sir, because he's got another 'fare' for then, sir."

Clever Boy

"Do you know the parables, my boy?" said a bishop once.

"Yes, sir," he replied.

"And which of the parables do you like best?"

"I like the one," he answered, after a moment's thought, "where

Puzzled Diner (to restaurant waiter): "What have you got for dinner?"

Puzzled Diner: "Give me the third, fourth fifth, sixth, eighteenth and nineteenth syllables."

One day a Scottish boy and an English boy, who were fighting, were separated by their respective mothers with difficulty, the Scottish boy, tho the smaller, being far the most pugnacious.

"What garred ye ficht a big laddie-like that for?" said the mother, as she wiped the blood from his nose.

"And I'll fight him again," said the boy, "if he says Scotsmen wear kilts because their feet are too big to get into their trousers."

"That isn't a complexion," replied Miss Cayenne. "That's a disguise!"

Dear Editor;

My little brother and I would like to join the Smiling Face Club. Would you please send us a button? I am sending a little poem I composed.

Mary had a little lamb,
But was only one year old;
And every time the lamb went out
It always came home with a cold.

SELECTING POULTRY AND HAM

Heer is the rule for selecting poultry and ham, given by a dealer who buys and sells large quantities of dressed fowl and who buys not merely for signs of age, but for general "good eating" qualities, writes Laura Leonard.

"I always look at the breast first thing," said the dealer. "It should be well rounded. Then I turn the bird over and look at the back. Along either side of the backbone there should be a little ridge of fat. Look at a few chickens and you will see what I mean. If those ridges of fat are lacking you can take it for granted that the fowl or chicken will not cook tender or eat well, because the animal is not well nourished. If the ridges are there the bird is a safe one to buy, even if it is not so young. It will make good eating.

And let me tell you how to get the best flavour in roasting a chicken. Don't cook it breast upward, as so many cooks claim you should. Start it cooking breast downward, so that the fat from the back as it melts may run down to the breast and make it juicy and and tender. Moreover, if there is gravy in the pan and the breast lies in this gravy, this also aids in making it rich and juicy.

"The second thing to look for is pin feathers. When fowls are dressed and the feathers removed, the pin feathers are last of all to be removed. If there are a good many pin feathers the bird is an old one. This is a guide, even in picking out refrigerator chickens.

"My choice for chicken is on weighing about three and a half or four pounds. This is the tender, yet well formed age, and if a bird of this weight shows the fat ridges and has a good many pin feathers, it is a safe purchase."

"The reason why so many people find duck meat tough," said this man of wide experience, "is that their cooks do not know the proper method of cooking a duck. Many think that a duck should be cooked like a chicken—that it should be set into a hot oven and be baked at top heat. But this is a mistake. This treatment will make a young duck tough.

A duck is very oily, and this oil must be gently rendered from the oil cells and allowed to percolate through the lean meat. If the bird is put int a very hot oven the oil is rendered too quickly and runs off into the pan so that the lean meat loses what might be called the necessary larding process to make it tender.

The same method of cooking applies to geese."

This man's way of judging a ham is ne that every housewife should know.

"When I see a ham or a shoulder that is flat in apeparance," he says, "I discard it. In selecting I choose one that is chunky in appearance. Then I know that it will not be all fat inside, but will have plenty of good lean meat on it.

"My second rule is to buy only hams having thin skins. Thick skinned hams and bacon come from old animals and these have lost the prime flavour which we may more safely expect from younger animas.

Aplump or chunky ham, with a thin rind or skin is pretty sure to make the best eating."

GUARD BABY'S HEALTH IN SUMMER TIME

The summer months are the most dangerous to little ones. The complaints of at that season, which are cholera infantum, diarrhoea and dysentry come on so quickly that often a little one is beyond aid before the mother realizes he is really ill. The mother must be on her guard to prevent these troubles, or if they do come on suddenly to cure them. No other medicine is of such aid to the mother during hot weather as is Baby's Own Tablets. They regulate the bowels and stomach and are absolutely safe. Sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Wiliams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

CRUDE THOUGHTS FROM THE EDITORIAL PEN

Encourage your child to be merry and to laugh aloud; a good, hearty laugh expands the chest and makes his blood bound merrily along. Commend me to a good laugh—not to a little sniggering laugh, but to one that sounds through the house; it will not only do your child good, but will be a benefit to all who hear, and be an important means of driving the blues awayy from a dwelling. Merriment is very catching and spreads in a remarkable manner. A hearty laugh is delightful harmony; indeed it is the best of all music.

* * *

Make a home; beautify and adorn it; cultivate all heavenly charms within it; sing sweeter songs of love in it; bear your portion of toil, and pain, and sorrow in it; con daily lessons of strength and patience there; shine like a star in the face of the darkest night over it. High on the pinnacle, above all earthly grandeur, all gaudy glitter, all fancied ambitions, set the home interests. Feed the mind in it; feed the soul in it; strengthen the love and charity, and truth, and all holy and good things within it.

* * *

Learn to keep your troubles to yourself. The world is too busy to care for your ills and sorrows. Learn to stop croaking. If you cannot see any good in the world, learn to keep the bad to yourself. Learn to hide your pains and aches under a pleasant smile. No one cares to hear whether yau have the earache, headache or rheumatism. Don't cry. Tears do well enough in novels, but they are out of place in real life.

* * *

The perfect home is one where no least detail of courtesy is omtted between husband and wife, parents and children, masters and servants; but where the good breeding is not the slavish obedience to a set of fixed rules, but of honest respect for individual rights and heartfelt desire on the part of each one to be as agreeable and beloved as possible.

* * *

Our life abroad is but a reflex of what it is at home. We make ourselves in a great measure at home. This is especially true of women. The woman who is rude, course and vulgar at home, cannot be expected to be chaste and refined in the world. She cannot shake them off. They are woven into the web of her life.

* * *

A good example is the best teacher. Precepts are useless if contradicted by our daily living. If we are slaves to our evil passions, how can we teach our children self-control? If we sometimes speak or act an untruth, we cannot expect them to be truthful. Do not scold; do not use harsh words; for they will surely be reflected in your children.

* * *

It can no longer be taken for granted that women are destitute of business ability, and the man who looks with contempt on her as adviser and helper is getting away from the path that leads to peace and plenty—the path that was designed for them in the beginning when it was given to the man and woman together to have dominion over every living thing that moveth upon the earth.

* * *

Praise your wife sometimes. She works hard enough as a general thing with small compensation and less cheer than any other member of the family. You like to be told that you can do your particular kind of work better than any one else can, so why should you withhold the same merited praise from the woman who makes and keeps your home bright for you?

* * *

It is not a mere accident of disposition whether we persistently look on the dark and gloomy or on the brighter side of things, but a habit of mind which we can cultivate or allow to die through want of use.

Learn to laugh. A good laugh is better than medicine. Learn how to tell a story. A well told story is as welcome as a sunbeam in a sick room.

REMEDIES FOR SPOTS AND STAINS

After spring housecleaning is over every housekeeper usually finds on her hands many things which were put aside in the busy cleaning days to be attended to later. Many of these things, sometimes the accumulation of years, are fit only for the scrap heap or rag bag. More and more women are coming to value the fact that rubbish heaps of old clothes and wornout household articles in the attic are a menace to health and safety, for they invite dust, germs, and fire.

But there are many things, doubtless, that are worth repairing—gloves that need mending and cleaning, a rug that is badly stained but not worn out, a picture frame that needs brightening up and other articles that need cleaning and mending.

For all these material ailments and defects, patent cleansers, paints, or stains are sold, and if directions are followed, results are generally sure and satisfactory. But the average woman thinks that every detail in the somewhat involved directions may not be important and so the remedy fails and she blames the maker.

For instance, with one of the best up-to-date cleansing fluids came directions to place the fabric to be cleaned on blotting paper or many folds of soft old cloth. The woman who does this will find that the pattern of the article cleaned will be reproduced in discoloured lines on the blotting paper, the fluid eating the grease and dust right out. If the blotting paper is not used the fluid will form a ring in the fabric almost as unsightly as the original dirt.

Again, if you are using a patent varnish or stain, and instructions bid you first sandpaper the woodwork, use sandpaepr vigorously. The patented article cannot perform miracles.

Here are some of the simple remedies for removing spots of various sorts:

Paint—If the paint is fresh, turpentine, alcohol, or naphtha will probably take out the stain. If hte stain is old and dry, try chloroform. Put the portion of fabric to be cleaned over several thicknesses of clean cloth before trying to clean it.

Grease—Use French chalk for grease spots. Apply it thickly and let it stand for several days. If this is not effective, sponge the material first on one side, then on the other, with spirits of wine. Then press over a piece of thick linen.

Candle Wax—Put a sheet of blotting paper under the spot and another over it. Heat with flatiron and the wax will be removed by the blotting paper.

Milk—White soap and warm water should be used to take out milk stains. It should be used immediately.

Ink—There are various good ink eradicators on the market, and it is well to have a bottle of one of these on hand. Another method is to dip the ink-stained article into milk. The milk should not be allowed to dry on, but if it does not remove the ink within a short time it should be washed out and a fresh application of milk made.

Tea Stains—Clear warm water should be used to remove tea stains.

Coffee—Pour boiling water through the coffee stains as quickly after the coffee is spilled as possible. This is a never-failing remedy if the spots are fresh. Otherwise it may be necessary to repeat it several times.

Rain Spots—When cloth that has not been sponged is spotted from the rain, spread a damp cloth over the material and iron.

Ice Cream—Anything on which ice cream has been spilled should be sponged with chloroform. Use several thicknesses of clean white blotting paper under the spotted article.

Grass Spots—As soon as grass stains are detected on summer frocks dip the stained part in alcohol.

To Improve Expression As Well As Complexion

No face is really beautiful that lacks expression. Do you realise that continual use of powders and creams tends to spoil pliancy of skin and elasticity of expression? Why not quit cosmetics, use something better, which won't clog the pores or make the skin dry, pasty or oily? Ordinary mercolised wax acts quite differently from any cosmetic. It wonderfully improves any complexion, giving it life and expression. By gradually, harmlessly peeling off the thin veil of surface skin, it brings to view a pure, soft, spotless complexion, delicately beautiful and youthful. Every druggist has this wax; it is seldom more than an ounce is needed. It is spread on nightly like cold cream and washed off morning. In a week or two the transformation is complete.

Wrinkles do not of course enhance the expression. Neither do the pasty things many use to eradicate them. A treatment free from all objection is made by dissolving 1 oz. powdered saxolite in ½ pint witch hazel: use as a wash lotion. This soon removes even the most obstinate wrinkles.

PROTECTING YOUR EYES FROM SUN

If there is one time when the eyes are more severely taxed than at any other, it is during vacation months. Free from the whirl of business or social affairs, the fair vacationist grasps the long-sought opportunity to indulge her love of reading or delicate embroidery.

Quite generally she reads while reclining in a comfortable hammock under the trees or stretched at full length on porch or bedroom couch. "I know it's not right," says one independent girl, "but it's my vacation, and I'm going to be comfortable."

A noted occulist who considers the happiness of a patient as well as her physical good, insists that there is no harm whatever in reading in a recumbent position if the head is well bolstered up and the light shines on the book over the left shoulder. Nothing is more fatiguing to the eyes than attempting to use them when a strong light is pouring straight into them. The habit of reading in the hazy light after sundown is equally injurious.

However, while it is in close application, such as reading and sewing, that the eyes do their hardest work, few persons realize how constantly these indispensable aids to existence are kept on duty. They are the only duplicate membes of the body which must wor kabsolutely in unison or totally upset their owner's mental and physical balance.

It behooves the summer girl, therefore, to rest her eyes as well as her body. In the first place, make a point of sleeping so that the light shines over your head. It pays also, now that old Sol rises so early in the morning, to invest in a rich green shade through which the light cannoe penetrate and force the eyes into harness before you are ready to get up.

Many women have an idea that it helps the eyes to open them the first thing in the morning, into an eye-cup filled with some mild antiseptic. The best occulist disapproves of this. It washes out the natural secretions of the orb, and if a stimulant is needed for the lids, it is much best sent it with a glass dropper.

One of the most sensible fashions of summer is the fancy for lining hats and parasols with green. This throws a wonderfully restful light on the eyes and relieves them from the merciless glare of mid-summer sun. Both pongee and white parasols can be had that show the lining or an edging of green.

TO RELIEVE BURNING FEELING.

After an all day ride or a long tramp the burned, dry feeling of the lids can be assuaged by dropping a weak solution of boric acid—one part acid powder to thirty parts water—into the eyes. It is easily accomplished by puling down the lower lid to from a little socket.

To remove a bit of sand or dust from the eye, look up while some one else puts down the lower lid gently. Failing to find it there, the patient should look down at the floor, while her companion puts one finger on the middle of the lid quickly, but not harshly, turns it back by the lashes with the other hand. It is looking steadily up or down that makes this assistance effective.

The end of a perfectly clean handkerchief or a bit of cotton which has been slightly dampened to smooth the fine lint, should be employed to brush away the offending particle. A handkerchief which has been used for any other purpose must never be brought near the eyes.

One last word to the girl who wears glasses. Be sure that the centre of the lens is directly in front of the eye. If headache comes on unexpectedly go to an optician and have him straighten out the frame or nose piece.

WHOOPING COUGH

Mrs. Charles Lovell, Agassiz B.C., writes: "Seven of our nine children had whooping cough the same winter and we attribute their cure to Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. We always have it in the house, and recommend it as the king of all medicines. I was formerly completely cured of protruding piles by using Dr Chase's Ointment."

EAT SLOWLY.

Hurried eating, which to-day is all too common, is bad. Eat slowly. There is no doubt but that "bolting" the food is one of the most prolific causes of indigestion, dyspepsia, constipation, torpid liver, headache, and many other symptoms and disturbances that might be mentioned.

While prevention is the best cure, there is every reason to believe that the majority of the people who suffer from digestive disorders would derive great benefit by taking plenty of time to "Fletcherize" their food, that is, chew it thoroughly before swallowing. Thorough mastication is also essential for the preservation of the teeth, for neglect to use these organs encourages decay and brings about their early loss.

THE BRIDE'S HOUSEKEEPING

The average bride has so little experience in household management that her ideas as to kitchen furnishings are rather limited, to say the least. She buys her fixings with very little knowledge as to their real usefulness and finds as a rule that her first expenditures are small compared to those she will be obliged to make later as she discovers her actual needs.

She should learn something about pots and pans before buying. She should know just what wares should be used in cooking. Then, too, she should learn what utensils she really needs and what she can easily dispense with. It is much wiser to have a few good pieces which will be useful than to have a large number of impractical little devices which may be used once or twice. For instance, knives are used for preparing practically every meal. Bread must be cut, potatoes, vegetables, and fruit cut and pared, so that the knives should be of the best steel with firmly riveted handles.

Jelly moulds, on the other hand, will not be used more than once or at the most twice a week, and then only one mould. So why have a limited supply of knives and a number of expensive, useless jelly moulds?

In buying pots and pans, the young bride should be careful to have them not only of the best ware, but of the proper size. For example, it is foolish to buy a number of big pots and pans when there are only two or three to cook for. A big utensil takes so much more time to wash and dry and is clumsier to lift about, to say nothing of taking up so much more space when not in use. The bride should bear in mind the differe it uses she will have for pots and buy the exact size.

There will be considerable use for a small family of a couple of small pots holding about a quart for warming up canned vegetables, for boiling eggs, etc. Then there should be one bigger pot, holding about two quarts to two and a half, for making cocoa or warming milk, etc. Two pots holding three or four quarts will be needed for cooking potatoes, vegetables, etc.

By thinking out her uses for pots and pans in this way, the young bride will find that she obtains utensils of the right size and shape, whereas buying in a haphazard fashion, her kitchen is soon cluttered up with a lot of useless truck. These pots should all have handles and covers to fit, also. Handleless pots and pans are impracticable and dangerous. In selecting covers for the pots the bride should try to obtain the kind the knobs of which are a part of the cover, not merely screwed on.

All the pots and pans should be bought in the same finish if the kitchen is to look well afterward. This can never be if one pot is in grey enamel, another in blue, and so on.

An Alsatian Quarrel

By DWIGHT NORWOOD

Ever since the Franco-Prussian war there has been bad blood between the inhabitants of Alsace and Lorraine and the German soldiers stationed there to keep them subservient to their conquerors. True, those provinces were wrested from Germany, and many of their inhabitants are Germans. It is the French citizens who are restive under German rule.

Among those French Alsatians who returned to their homes after the war which lost these provinces to France was young Jules Laurant, eighteen years old. His mother was a widow, not yet forty, and still fair to look upon. One of the German officers belonging to the army of occupation met her and desired to marry her. But she was not willing to give her son a stepfather, and she was too patriotic to marry a man whose business it was to keep her country under a foreign yoke. Besides these reasons, she had no love for her admirer.

Captain von Gottschalk was not especially pleased at his refusal and considered Jules Laurant responsible for it. Consequently he took a great dislike to the young man. But Jules did not even know the captain had proposed to his mother. Quite likely had he known it he would have vigorously opposed it; but, being ignorant of the matter, he had nothing to do with the refusal.

One day when Von Gottschalk was marching at the head of his company some persons standing on the sidewalk looking at the soldiers jeered. It happened that Jules Laurant was there. Captain von Gottschalk was very wroth with those who had insulted him and his command and saw Jules standing near them. Jules had not uttered a sound. He had fought the Germans, and they had conquered. He was not the man to jeer at them, though he burned to have another chance to oppose them under arms.

Von Gottschalk, feeling this was a good opportunity to vent his spleen on Jules and withal being very angry, walked right past those who had given the insult up to Jules and cuffed him. Jules was unarmed, while the captain held a sword in his hand. Jules could not retaliate at the time, but he could challenge his insulter to mortal combat.

Jules went home and told his mother of the circumstance, explaining to her that it was not only his wish, but according to custom, that he should send a challenge to Von Gottschalk. She agreed with him, though she saw that the matter was a misfortune to both of them. The captain would be supported by the German government, and Jules, if he won in the fight, would be made to suffer, for the captain, so far as was known, had merely resented an insult to himself and his company which no officer of the German army could brook and retain his commission. For these reasons Mme. Laurant took the affair deeply to heart.

Captain von Gottschalk was an accomplished swordsman.

To make a show of magnanimity he gave Jules the choice of terms and weapons, though as the challenged party he was entitled to this choice himself. Jules, who consulted his mother in everything, was advised by her to choose pistols at ten paces.

The night before the meeting Jules left his waking in the morning to bid his mother. She gave him a glass of wine to drink before going to bed into which she had dropped a soporific powder. As soon as he had gone to sleep she took his clothes into her own room and, throwing herself on a lounge, rested for the few hours remaining before going on to the ground. Then at the first sign of dawn she put on her son's clothes, wrapped a muffler around her throat and the lower part of her face, pulled a felt hat down over the back of her neck to conceal her hair and waited for her second.

Whether she revealed herself to him or not on the way to the meeting has been kept a secret with much of what followed. On reaching the ground it was suggested that she take off some of the extra clothing that concealed her identity, but she refused. Being placed at only ten paces from her adversary, he would easily have recognized her had it not been for her muffler and the brim of her hat, which she pulled down over her forehead. Two signals were given—the one to aim, the other to fire. Between the first and the second signal Mrs. Laurant lifted the brim of her hat and pulled down her muffler, exposing her face.

Never was a man more thoroughly paralyzed by irresolution at a critical moment. Should he shoot a woman—a woman to whom he had proposed marriage—or permit her to shoot him? Before he had made up his mind which to do she had fired and put a ball into his chest that dropped him on the ground.

Mrs. Laurent's identity was exposed to all the attendants. Realizing what an unfortunate affair Captain Von Gottschalk had fallen into, they pledged each other to secrecy, and he was hurried to a hospital. He recovered and suffered the usual formal reprimand for fighting a duel, three months confinement in a fortress. And that was all that was ever known about the affair.

Jules was still asleep when his mother returned. When he awakened she told him all and convinced him that it was to his and her interest that the matter should be kept within the small circle of those who knew about it. With this in view, he went away till the excitement had blown over.

Mrs. Susan oDbson, Spring Hill Mines, N. S., writes:—"It is with pleasure that I write to you in praise of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. I was troubled with dyspepsia, and could not eat without suffering much pain; also had sick headaches frequently, and my nerves were in bad condition. About ten years ago I took a thorough treatment of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, using altogether 21 boxes, and since then can eat anything, have been freed from headaches, and my health has been greatly improved in every way. I gained 14 pounds in weight, and feel sure I owe everything to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. You may use this letter, and my neighbours can tell you of my condition before using this treatment."

RHEUMATISM AND BRIGHT'S DISEASE

Prof. Boileau Was Quickly Relieved of Both Afflictions by Using Rheuma

If you suffer from any form of Rheumatism, remember that RHEUMA goes to work quickly to remove the cause, not simply to relieve the distress. Many years' use has demonstrated that it goes to the seat of the disease and expels the poisonous matter through the natural channels—the kidneys, bowels, liver, and skin.

"For many years I was troubled with Rheumatism, also with Bright's Disease of the Kidneys. I suffered awfully. Tried many advertised remedies. After using your truly remarkable preparation, RHEUMA, I was fully cured."—Prof. C. J. Budlong, Sound View, Conn.

RHEUMA is guaranteed by Warne Drug Co., who sell it for 50 cents a bottle.

SAFE FROM GERMS.

It Was Easy For the Pullman Porter to Convince the Doctors.

A party of physicians were on their way to a medical convention, and they had gathered in the buffet car to discuss professional matters. The talk had begun with proper cleanliness in bandaging. It had progressed to that point where sneezing was condemned for the germs it disseminated, when the engine whistled to announce an approaching station. The porter entered. He waved his whisk broom.

"Brush you off, suh?" he asked of one of the doctors. The doctor turned on him.

"Just exactly what I've been contending," he said beatedly. "There's one of the finest little systems of spreading germs that ever was invented. This porter comes in here and he brushes me off; then he brushes you and you and you, and every one else, and starts a lot of germs flying round in the air to be breathed in and start disease. I say that germs ought not to be disturbed in public. It's dangerous. They ought to be let alone—not thrown up into the air by all this brushing!"

There was a moment of silence. The porter grinned foolishly. He stood first on one foot, then on the other. He grinned again, then waved his brush.

"Come on, doctah," he begged; "come on and let me brush you off! Pshaw! Don't let that idea about microbes bother you any! What little breshin' I'm going to do ain't going to disturb no germs. No, suh!"—Youth's Companion.

Atop of Mount McKinley.

Archdeacon Stuck in his account of his climb to the summit of Mount McKinley, "The Ascent of Denali," gives this description of his impressions upon reaching it: "Immediately before us, in the direction in which we had climbed, lay—nothing; a void, a sheer gulf many thousands of feet deep, and one shrank back instinctively from the little parapet of snow basin when one had glanced at the awful profundity. Across the gulf, about 3,000 feet beneath us and fifteen or twenty miles away, sprang most splendidly into view the great mass of Denali's Wife, or Mount Foraker, as some white men misname her, filling majestically all the middle distance. * * * And never was nobler sight displayed to man than that great isolated mountain, spread out completely, with all its spurs and ridges, its cliffs and its glaciers, lofty and mighty, and yet far beneath us. * * * Beyond stretched, blue and vague to the southwest, the wide valley of the Kuskokwim, with an end of all mountains. * * * It was, however, to the south and the east that the most marvelous prospect opened before us.

An Acrobatic Feat.

The fresh air kid had discoursed for thirty minutes on the acrobatic wonders of the vaudeville stage.

"Huh, that ain't so much," sniffed the farmer's son at last. "We've got something in this very barn that will turn without moving."

"Hain't neither! What is it?"

"Milk."—Detroit Free Press.

NATIVE INNS IN JAPAN.

Where You Shed Your Shoes Before Going to Your Room.

The entrance to native inns in Japan is most always a roofed vestibule with a well trodden earthen floor backed by a raised platform about twenty inches high, forming at once a seat and the outer extension of the first floor.

A scattered line of shoes, sandals and geta belonging to the guests usually lie along it, and at one side is a cupboard where umbrellas and footgear are deposited. A big drop octagon clock on the wall, a low desk, a hibachi and a pile of cushions generally complete the office equipment.

The traveler's jinriki customarily deposits him in the vestibule, at the edge of the platform, beneath the overhang of the roof. Shouts of "O Kyaku san" (honorable visitor) apprise the master and the maids that a guest is arriving and all hurry forward to receive him, uttering cries of welcome and bowing glossy black heads to the floor.

As the traveler sits on the platform a servant removes his shoes and others divest him of his wraps. Shoes are seldom cleaned, and if they be wet or muddy they are left untouched. Habitual frequenters of inns often provide themselves with foot coverings to slip over shoes and thus be able to wear them to the apartment. Without them one must don the heelless slippers furnished or go to one's room unshod.—Kansas City Times.

Magnificent Voracity.

One of the most noteworthy importations in the slaughter of the gypsy moth has been an active green beetle, a tiger in the moth world. Here is a terrible creature indeed—a creature of intrepid ferocity and magnificent voracity. Beside him the hog is a beast of most delicate appetite. The green beetle would devour ten times his weight in gypsy moth caterpillars in a single day and be ready to duplicate this performance on the morrow. His nominal two seasons of active life are a wild orgy of slaying and feasting. His span of mortality includes a mere fortnight of larval life and two brief summers of adult existance, representing less than five months of activity altogether, but during this time he will normally devour nearly 650 gypsy moth caterpillars or pupae as big as himself. A single pair have been observed to eat 2,000 caterpillars within eight weeks, gluttony almost beyond belief.—Century.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

THE NEW GARAGE

Whenever the Getterys spoke of the garage they tried to do it casually, but they were unable to prevent their chests from swelling. There was sufficient excitement living in a real house after all the years of apartment dwelling, but to have a garage that came to you in sections by parcel post, warranted to be set-upable by a child of six. Anyone could tell that it was meant to be a garage and the Getterys felt that it gave them a standing that was exceedingly pleasant. That they owned nothing to put inside it was merely a minor annoyance.

"Why don't you keep chickens in it?" brightly suggested young Welsh, who was calling steadily on the eldest daughter. Little he knew that the remark might cost him his whole prospective matrimonial future. Sadie Gettery stared at him coldly. "Really," she said in icily smooth tones, "one does not keep chickens in one's garage, does one?"

"Help!" chattered young Welsh faintly. "Forgive me—I know so little about garages; My grandfather owned a grocery waggon once, but since then the family has walked or taken the street cars. Don't you think it looks like rain?"

Billy Gettery, aged 10, never forgot the day when he burst in upon his mother while she was entertaining ers. "Ma! Oh, ma!" he had cried out. "Kin our crowd have the woodshed to play Indians in and keep our tools in? And kin Shorty keep his dog there?"

"William," said his mother in awful tones, "kindly keep out of the garage and do not allow the boys in it at all. I am surprised at you! Go upstairs at once and wash your face and hands! Really, Mrs. Tatcher, we thought we were getting into a nice neighbourhood, but some of the children William picks up seem to have been reared in the slums."

Even Gettery, himself, felt a proud satisfied little thrill when he was talking on the train with Jinks, who still lived in the apartment building, and was able to murmur that he was laying out a garden in his new yard utilizing space immediately in front of the garage.

Jinks pricked up his ears and addressed Gettery with actual respect. "Oh!" he grasped. "I didn't know you'd got a car! Fine doings! What'd you get?"

Gettery coughed and frowned a little. "I haven't actually got it yet," he admitted. "I'm—er—considering several makes. I don't like to jump in on a proposition like that without knowing what I'm doing."

"Of course not," agreed Jinks! He spread the news that Gettery certainly was prospering.

Gettery took to gazing in the display windows of the automobile stores thoughtfully, and Mrs. Gettery one day told him fretfully that she was the only woman in their set who had to walk or take a street car. "What," she demanded, "is the use of having a garage if one doesn't use it?"

"But suppose one does not have money enough to buy one's self a buzz waggon?" demanded Gettery, who had a certain sense of humour "How long since you have begun to use the fashionable brand of grammar that is patronized by our daughter, Maria?"

"It's perfectly ridiculous," Sadie Gettery told him peevishly, "to say you can't afford a car father! Why, we have the garage all ready and that's a great deal to subtract from the cost! I saw a bargain sale in cars advertised just the other day! You want to consider that we've got the garage!"

"It's a shame not to use it," said his wife. "It seems wasteful, John! I'm always so humiliated whenever some other woman has to bring me home in her car!"

"We have a garage and a pint of gasoline," admitted Gettery, grimly, "but I can't see that their possession justifies us in buying a machine to go with them, dad-binged if I do!"

"The boys all think it's mean we can't play in the woodshed," declared Billy Gettery, mournfully.

"If you refer to the garage again by that name," said his mother, "I shall send you to bed, William! You see John, what contempt the neighbours have for us, owning a garage and no car to put in it! Why, think of the saving there would be, having the garage all ready!"

Gettery bought a car.

When it came home the Getterys were so happy they resolutely forgot how they would have to scrimp in order to pay for it and feed it.

"And it's real economy," insisted Mrs. Gettery, "our having the garage all ready for it."

"Say," interrupted the man, who had driven it out, "the car won't go into that box of yours out back. It's twice as big as the door! What'll I do with it?"

There was an awful silence.

"Just drive it up into the parlour," said Gettery, when voice came back to him. "We'll move out into the garage. The blamed thing's got to be put to some use, I suppose!"

The Salt Sea Legend

There is a legend in the Norse scalds which explains why the sea is salt. The "bountiful Frodi," whose mythical reign was a golden age indeed, possessed a quern, or hand mill, which ground out gold and peace, but which would grind out stores of anything desired by its owner. Two giant maidens, ruled over by Frodi, were the grinders. In an evil day a sea rover came upon the scene, slew Frodi and carried off the quern and the two giant maidens who worked it. When the sea rover's vessel was right out at sea he ordered the maidens to grind salt. At midnight they asked if they had not ground enough. The sea rover, angry at being awakened from his sleep, commanded them to grind until morning. Now, the giant maidens naturally enough worked very quickly, so as they went on grinding the load of salt grew so heavy that it sank the ship, and now the sea will continue salt forever.

OTTAWA EXHIBITION

Every year the Central Canada Exhibition grows larger and larger—newer and greater exhibits—increased accommodation and the gradual addition of new buildings of a better class have all tended toward the uplifting of each department until now for 1914 the management can well and truthfully say "Each of the most colossal of its kind."

This year $50,000.00 is being spent upon a new Agricultural and Horticulture Hall in which Flower lovers and Vegetable growers will delight to display their many different winning beauties—born of Nature.

The dates decided for the Great Show this year are September 11th to 19th, and although exhibitors must have their every exhibit in place by the eleventh of the month as a surety to the general public the gates for the admittance will not be open to them until Monday, September 14th.

Of special interest for the Exhibition this year will be the greatly increased and extended Prize List—several very attractive and much sought after classes having been added with prizes corresponding accordingly.

It has been decided to pay all freight upon live stock and cattle from the province of Ontario and Quebec—the same as last year, a measure that resulted in an enormous increase in exhibits in those departments and one that was most gratifying to the management.

For those who look for entertainment of a lighter nature The Big Way and its many thousands of attractions and unusual spectacles for 1914 promise to greatly surpass anything ever previously offered.

In front of the Grand Stand the big sensational show will be "NERO, AND THE BURNING OF ROME," a classical spectacular performance, completely staged and vividly illustrated by thousands of participants, and a greatly increased and extended illumination of fireworks, second to none and provided by the world's celebrated T. W. Hand Firework Co. of Hamilton, Canada. As additional features to add to the splendour and glory of the occasion Two Wild West Shows—Cheyenne Days and Frontier Life—have been contracted for at enormous cost, to give special performances daily, as will also a most extended list of extra vaudeville features which are rapidly being arranged for and of which one very special item is the world renowned Professor Hutchison in his sensational Balloon Ascension with ten distinct and separate parachute drops at each performance. The latter is an extra daily feature of this year's fair.

From every day on now, the management will be on the look-out for new features to add to the already large list of thrilling and sensational wonders as well as the securing of entries for each and every department of the big Exhibition. It is not a bit too early to make up your mind and to commence to look forward to attending the Big Fair this year so as not to miss one of the greatest attractions ever occurring in Canada.

For Prize Lists, Entry Blanks and more and complete information, apply to E. McMahon, Manager and Secretary, Central Canada Fair Office, 27 Sparks St., Ottawa, Can.

MR. JOHN BELL'S CAMPAIGN SONG

To the Editor, "The Examiner."

Dear Sir,—As far as I can see, the Rowell Government will force men against their will, while the Whitney Government leaves all men free. Which of the two is the most holy? In Mexico there is a war of force, between three men. What about Dear Old Ireland? Will they fight? We hope not. But men will fight when they are forced.

Tax liquor and tobacco high.

Sun of My Soul, Thou Saviour dear,
It is not night if Thou be near;
O may no earth-born cloud arise,
To hide Thee from Thy servant's eyes.
When the soft dews of kindly sleep,
My wearied eyelids gently steep,
Be my last thought how sweet to rest
Forever on my Saviour's breast.

I see a picture on the street,
Reminds me of a Grit dead beat,
Corkscrews and liquor of high grade
It was a grand corkscrew Brigade.
Whitney's men are of a better brood.
Their temperance measures have been good.
In the Bible, is there one word?
That forces men to serve the Lord.

VOTE FOR ME

Things generally come the way of the man who goes after them.

The devil being a lady we must expect to find some changes in the world.

If you want to avoid being annoyed by flies in your house keep them outside.

When a man courts trouble it doesn't take him long to get her to consent to be his.

Perhaps the chief requisite in the movement is a "safety first" conscience.

People who believe everything they hear might be lucky if they were a little deaf.

Neither suffragist nor anti-suffragist adopts the shrinking, thornless violet as an emblem.

A man may be as old as he feels, but a woman is generally older than she thinks she looks.

If you are not getting better yourself it is hard for you to believe that the world is getting better.

In This Home — Receipts Book and Medicines Kept at Hand All the Time.

There is no better safeguard against disease and suffering than a good cathartic medicine. In the great majority of homes Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are constantly kept at hand, because they quickly awaken the action of liver, kidneys and bowels, and cure the most common ills of life.

Mrs. Thos. Smith, Jamestown, Ont., writes:—"Dr. Chase is no stranger in our home, for we have two of his Receipt Books in the house. My father and my husband's father each had one, and I have been familiar with it ever since I can remember. It was only natural that we should use the Kidney-Liver Pills, and we found them so satisfactory in regulating the digestive system and curing the common ills of life that we always keep them on hand. Many a time these pills have saved me much suffering and prevented serious disease. We also keep the Ointment in the house all the time."

BOTH SIDES ARE CONFIDENT

Liberal Organizer Says that Mr. Rowell Will Carry Sixty or Seventy Seats on Monday.

IN CHURCHES TO-MORROW

Special Wire to The Examiner:

TORONTO, June 27—Enquiries at the headquarters of the Liberal Temperance and Conservative Government parties this morning indicate that both are confident that the balloting on Monday will show their success and the defeat of the other fellow. "The Opposition may naturally gain a few seats," said a leading Conservative, "but they need thirty-seven actual gains to carry the Province. It is ridiculous to imagine they'll do that." On the other hand, a Liberal organizer, who has travelled from one end of the Province to the other, says there are bright prospects for carrying in all sixty or seventy seats. Both sides admit that the campaign is by no means closed. It will likely be carried into hundreds of Churches on the Sabbath by the ministers on both sides of the question of abolish the bar. And on Monday well organized workers on each side will bring voters into the polls till the last minute.

Presentation to Mrs. Cragg

Is Honoured by the Mark Street Ladies' Aid Society

An interesting event took place at the home of Mrs. Payne, East City, on Thursday afternoon, at the meeting of the Mark Street Ladies' Aid, when the members said farewell to Mrs. (Rev.) C. E. Cragg, and presented her with a china dinner and tea set. The presentation was made by Mrs. J. H. Smith, while the following address was read by Mrs. Speer:

Dear Mrs. Cragg,—On the eve of your departure from our midst, to take up duties in a larger field, the ladies of Mark Street congregation desire to express their deep regret therefor. We wish also to express yo our keen appreciation of the many services which you have cheerfully and unremittingly performed while you have been with us.

As a slight token of our appreciation and love, and as a small but tangible indication of our esteem, we ask you to accept this china set.

It is our hope that both you and Mr. Cragg will be spared long to use it, and that in the larger future that lies before you, you will be reminded of those warm friends you have left behind in the ladies of Mark Street.

Mrs. Cragg made an appreciative reply, expressing regret at her departure from Peterborough.

REGIMENT INSPECTED

Peterboro' Rangers Make Good Showing at Annual Review Before Colonel Hemming of Kingston.

A FINE TURNOUT

The annual review of the 57th Regiment took place last evening on the Green confronting the Armouries. The inspecting officers were Col. T. D. R. Hemming, Lt.-Col. Duff and Capt. Lambert.

The crowd of spectators was immense and much interest was evinced in the various manoeuvres which took place during the course of the inspection. At 8 o'clock the Regiment was marched out and the inspecting officers walked through the lines while the band rendered selections. The Regiment was then drilled by Col. Clegg, after which the various companies were put through a course of manoeuvres by their respective officers. Nor was attention to the ambulance corps neglected. One of those present, supposedly wounded, was bandaged and placed on the ambulance, and in this proceeding the spectators demonstrated great interest.

The following constitute the Regimental staff:

Lt.-Col. E. B. Clegg.
Majors G. W. Bennett and J. Mills.
Adj. D. Walker, (Capt. and Brev. Maj.)
Signalling Officer, Lt. C. H. A. Ackerman.
Quartermaster, V. Eastwood.
Medical Officer, J. H. Eastwood, (Capt.)
Paymaster, L. M. Hayes, (Hon. Maj.)
Chaplain, Rev. J. C. Davidson, (Hon. Maj.)

The officers are:

Captains—W. H. Cluxton, R. T. Hounsell, D. Walker, A. P. McLean, R. P. Watt, A. W. McPherson, W. Langford, W. R. G. Higgins, A. G. Carruthers.

Lieutenants—M. Comstock, J. Gemmell K. G. Loch, M. H. Park, W. G. Hall, B. H. Meyers, A. F. Hagerman, C. R. Cameron, C. H. Ackerman, W. R. Tupper, N. H. Campbell, E. Worth, W. G. Worth, B. Tait, and S. Shook.

The Inspecting Officers had not time to speak to the troops, for 11 o'clock struck before the roll was called. They were apparently favourably impressed, however, and the three best companies in order of merit are: No. 3, No. 8 and No. 6. This is so far as drill is concerned. There are other things to be taken into consideration before the prize is awarded, however, and this will be determined by the staff officers. Drill for the season is now over and satisfaction is expressed at the attendances and season's work.

MR. GILLESPIE'S CLOSING WORDS

The fight in the election campaign is now over; and I have had much to encourage me and nothing to regret. I have conducted the fight fairly and have done my part to make it a clean, manly fight, to keep it on the high plane the importance and character of the supreme issue demanded.

In all this contest I have never changed or varied my position on the temperance question—which is abolition of bar, club and shop licenses, which is the real issue.

Within the past few days my opponents, it seems, in order to cloud the real issue, have put forward an issue which even Sir James Whitney never mentioned in his manifesto, namely, the bilingual school question. If my opponents are satisfied with the Government's position on that, which has been condemned by one of the staunchest supporters of its general policy, I have no reason to complain.

My position on the bilingual question is naturally the position of my leader, whose policy is the making of ample provision in the way of teachers, etc., so that every child in the Province shall be given an English education—and who says "Ontario is an English-speaking Province and English speaking it must remain. I would not deprive any child of foreign parents learning its own tongue but it must also be taught English."

I have, in this contest, stated my position, followed a straight course, and feel that the policy I advocate on the main, and other questions entitles me to the support of the honest and progressive elector, who wishes to help the success of the principles he believes in.

Yours faithfully,
G. A. GILLESPIE.

WHY THE ELECTORS SHOULD BE DEAF TO SCHOOL CRY

Mr. Burnham's Recent Declarations Against French and What He Said Two Years Ago.

WHEN IS HE SINCERE?

In view of the statement of Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., in the Review of a few days ago in which he expressed the opinion that the bilingual school question was the chief issue of the present election, stated for the purpose of blurring the main issue, the temperance question, it is interesting to read the same gentleman's remarks in the House of Commons on November 26, 1912, and reported in Hansard, pages 134 and 135, as follows:

The allegation has been made indirectly that there is in this country a conspiracy for the extinguishing of the French Canadian race—a race that has borne itself with all the honour and distinction that we should look for in one of the foremost races of the world. There is at the present time a conspiracy on foot to deprive them of their language, and to deprive them of their language is to deprive them of their customs, their history, their traditions and of their institutions. Whether it is proposed that this shall be accomplished by—means of the Government, or in some other way, let me say, representing a large number of English-speaking people who, I know, hold the same opinion, that much as we have been inclined to differ from them in the past, and often as we have had to meet them in keen debate, nevertheless bearing in mind their loyalty to the Empire in the past, and their loyalty in the present, and their recognition of Imperial needs, we will never even at the sacrifice of the English language go back upon or prove recreant to such a people. AS FAR AS I AM CONCERNED I WOULD PREFER NEVER TO SPEAK ANOTHER WORD OF ENGLISH IF IT MEANT THAT THE FRENCH-CANADIANS SHOULD BE DEPRIVED BY FORCE OF THE RIGHT TO SPEAK THEIR LANGUAGE WHENEVER THEY FEEL SO INCLINED.

MR. ROWELL'S MESSAGES TO THE PEOPLE OF ONTARIO

Leader Outlines His Policy and Promises to Completely Wipe Out all Hotel and Club Licenses at Next Session if Returned to Power.

IN REGARD TO SHOPS

To the Electors of Ontario:

There are many questions upon which I might ask the favourable vote of the electors of the Province, but one issue stands out paramount above all others, and that is the abolition of the bar.

Ontario is against the bar. The people of Ontario have been waiting for years to get the chance to wipe it out. They will have this opportunity on the 28th of June. I am receiving assurances of support from Conservatives all over the Province. Liberals who supported Mr. Borden in the last election are supporting us in this with equal enthusiasm. The tide is running steadily and strongly in favour of the abolition of the bar. The conscience of Ontario is thoroughly aroused and on Monday next every elector must give his vote for or against the continuation of the open bar in the Province of Ontario.

Church court after church court has declared against the bar and in favour of its abolition. You have on the one hand organized Christianity, and on the other hand the organized liquor interests. I believe the men of Ontario will rise superior to party ties and affiliations and take advantage of this opportunity to wipe out the bar. I appeal to the young men of Ontario who believe in progressive legislation and improving the conditions of life in this Province to cast their vote and influence against the open bar. I appeal to the women of Ontario, who more than any other class have suffered from the curse of the open bar, to use their influence from now until five o'clock on Monday evening next to secure the closing of the bars. We promise, if returned to power, at the very next session of the Legislature to pass legislation completely wiping out all hotel and club licenses in this Province, and that no shop license will be permitted to replace any hotel or club license wiped out.

We promise to amend the existing Local Option law to permit any municipality to wipe out any shops that remain, on a majority vote instead of under the three-fifths handicap, as at the present time. We promise to make Local Option county wide as in the case of the Scott Act so that a by-law may be carried to close shops in the whole county on a majority vote, and you will have all the benefits of Local Option provisions for enforcement. We promise to impose such further restrictions upon any shops that may remain in the municipality as experience may show to be necessary to limit the operations of the traffic and effective to remedy its evils.

We will also put into force our tax reform proposals, give the municipal franchise to married women and introduce advanced labour legislation and other reforms already outlined in my election address.

The Government now recognizes that the Province is against the open bar, and is, therefore, seeking to shift the issue and divert public attention from the evils of the bar by an appeal to racial feelings. Do not be deceived or misled by these efforts to save the open bar. The eyes of the Anglo-Saxon world are upon Ontario at the present time. If we wipe out the bars on the 28th of June, it seems that Manitoba and other provinces will follow our example. Australia and New Zealand are watching the fight. It is the first time in the history of our Empire that there has been such a fight between organized forces opposed to the bar and the organized liquor interests. Every citizen may help to win the victory. It means a message of hope, comfort and inspiration to thousands of homes in this province and throughout the Empire. Will you not help? By your vote every bar and club license in this province will be abolished and the forces of progress and social reform will win one of their greatest victories on the 28th of June.

N. W. ROWELL.

SERIOUS CHARGE BEING MADE

Conservative Worker in Guelph has been Arrested. Said that Prison Guards Registered Illegally

CAUSES SENSATION

Special Wire to The Examiner:

GUELPH, Ont., June 17—That four of the Ontario Reformatory guards, Thomas Barr, Aex. Balfour, William Watt and W. A. Tweedley, registered as manhod suffrage voters, swearing to residence in Guelph and giving as their address names of hotels, when, as a matter of fact, their living rooms were, and still are, at the Prison Farm, one mile east of the City, is the serious charge made by supporters of the Liberal candidate Mayor Samuel Carter. Thomas Grimshaw, one of the workers of Mr. Schofield, the Conservative candidate, was arrested last night on a charge of perjury in connection with the registration of one man, a horseman, and absentee.

It is alleged that Grimshaw presented an affidavit, swearing that May was a resident of Guelph and that he was a resident here. Grimshaw was later released on $3,000 bail.

SATURDAY, JUNE 27, 1914

HOW THE MATTER STANDS.

We are told by Mr. Soden that he is a better temperance man than Mr. Gillespie. No one believes that; and there the matter ends.

We are also told that the present Government has been, and is, a stronger "friend of temperance" than the Rowell party. If a Liberal were to dispute that it would be regarded as prejudice. But when Conservatives dispute it with an emphasis represented by their coming out flat-footed against the Government we can begin to think that there is nothing in the claim.

The present Government shows its interest in the temperance cause by opposing the most sweeping proposal of temperance reform ever presented at a general election; a proposal that involves the life and happiness of the individual, the welfare of the home and family, the prosperity and sobriety of the community, and the business interests of the country.

Honest temperance friends of the government see the government's hostility to real temperance reform and pronounce against it. The latest prominent friend of the Government to turn is the editor of the Orange Sentinel, who makes a big sacrifice for conscience sake and comes out flat against, and is working against the Government because it is opposed to abolition of the bar.

The Government must be a pretty bad friend of temperance when a man breaks the strongest party and society affiliations to oppose the Government as an enemy to "Anglo Saxon civilization."

The present Government shows its friendship for temperance reform when it shuts up, shuts off, or muzzles every candidate of its colour who honestly comes out in favour of the policy of wiping out all bar and club licenses.

Mr. Doughty, who was so well though of by the people that he was ected Alderman in Toronto, got the regular government nomination as candidate for Riverdale. But when he declared in favour of wiping out the liquor traffic and in favour of tax reform, he was deprived of the nomination. He did not think the present Government was a very strong friend of temperance, and he is now fighting strong against it or, if it is preferred, in favour of Rowell's policy.

There was another Conservative alderman to take Mr. Doughty's place, in opposition to the machine party candidate, Mr. Hilts. He says he is still a Conservative in everything else, but he doesn't believe the government wants the liquor traffic hurt and he is supporting Rowell in his policy of abolishing the citadel of the liquor traffic—the licensed bar.

The Whitney policy of keep-the-bar is not in the interests of temperance, while Rowell's policy is a straight temperance proposal.

There must be something good in it when honest, conscientious men turn their backs on the Government because of its opposition to this policy.

There must be someth[illegible] when men whose religious [illegible]ions and association are as wide asunder as the poles—differ in all things but in their unanimous hostility to the Government which refuses to throttle the liquor traffic.

There must be something in it when a distinguished Catholic cleric, life Rev. Father Minehan, the Father Matthew of Toronto, comes out straight and strong for the Rowell policy and his theological antithesis, the editor of the Orange Sentinel, breaks with his party and comes out in condemnation of the Government which is so great a "friend of temperance" and is working for the triumph of the Rowell policy.

The present Government cannot be a very strong "friend of temperance" when the great moral and religious forces of Toronto, at Thursday night's meeting in Massey Hall was presided over by a Catholic priest, surrounded by ablest ministers of the Presbyterian, Methodist and Baptist churches in the city of Toronto, all differing in faith and practice, but all one in their hostility to so great a "friend of temperance" as the present Government; and earnest advocates of the policy that would wipe out the licensed bar and licensed club—the policy of Mr. Rowell.

The present Government may be a great "friend of temperance," but there is a mighty big difference of opinion on the point.

Both the temperance people and the liquor interests are of the same belief in this regard.

Church councils, synods, and conferences, Christian ministers and thousands of Christian supporters of the Government in other things don't believe that the present Government is a "friend of temperance" because it opposes the policy they favour—the aboition of the bar.

The liquor interests do not believe the claim that the present Government is a friend of temperance, and a foe to the liquor traffic because the liquor traffic is behind the Government to a man, in this crisis in the moral welfare of the Province.

And Mr. Soden would make us believe that he is a better friend of temperance than Mr. Gillespie; yet Mr. Soden is the candidate of a government that is so great a friend of temperance that the liquor interests are on its side. Mr. Soden is fooling only the temperance men who want an excuse for voting against a principle because the Government they favour is opposed to it.

This is the time that tries men's souls; that tests their honesty; that puts their principles to the proof.

Every elector must vote one of two ways. He must either vote in the interests of the liquor traffic or he must vote so that his ballot will strike the deadliest blow at the desolating traffic that has ever been given by an Ontario ectorate.

Where do you stand? What stand will you take? No matter how you try to chloroform your conscience you know in the bottom of your heart that as a Christian citizen, as a good neighbour, as a friend of the under dog in the fight against the strong drink slavery, your duty is to give a vote to wipe out the curse of the licensed bar.

[illegible]ny an unfortunate slave to appe- will vote to remove the ever-present temptation of the open bar, that his weakened manhood cannot resist. Will you help him, or hinder him; will you kill his vote, or give him a lift—to sober feet?

Do your duty. Take the bar out of politics by putting the everlasting lid on it.

Vote early on Monday and poll a vote that will leave no aftermath of regret and remorse, a vote that you can boast to your boy about; a vote that your conscience can make a chum of.

THE FAIR WAGE POLICY INSTITUTED BY LIBERALS

But Was Abandoned by the Conservative Party. Trades and Labour Protested to Hon. Dr. Reaume.

What is known known as the "Fair Wage" policy was first adopted in this country by the Laurier Government, and the late D. J. O'Donoghue was appointed "fair wage" officer. His duty was to visit places in which government contracts were about to be let, so as to decide what scale of wages should be paid by contractors before tenders were invited, the scale adopted being invariably the union scale where unions existed. The policy has since been in force in all contracts let by the Dominion Government, and is in force in contracts of this kind which are being carried on in Brantford to-day. The object of legislation of this kind, it will be readily understood, is to put an end to "sweating" and other unfair conditions.

In 1900 this policy was adopted by the Ontario Legislature on motion of the then member for South Brant, and that it was not ignored by the Ross Government will be gleaned from the following letter:

Ottawa, June 5th, 1914.

Dear Sir: Fair wage conditions were adopted in Ontario years ago in connection with contracts for public works. The clause provided that the contractors should pay their employees the prevailing rates of wages in the district in which the work was being carried on. In a case of dispute the matter was settled by the Ontario Department of Labour. Among the first contracts containing this provision were those for the construction of the T. & N.O. railway.

Yours truly,
GEORGE P. GRAHAM.

T. H. PRESTON, ESQ.,
Brantford.

Mr. Graham was a member of the Ross Government, and is, therefore, in a position to speak authoritatively.

The "Fair Wage" policy, it is known, has been systematically ignored by the present Ontario Government, and more than one deputation of workingmen has waited upon the Minister of Public Works to complain that it was not being observed in contracts for additions to the Parliament buildings, etc.—British Whig, Kingston.

ARTHUR HAWKES SAYS SIGNS POINT TO CANDIDATE'S FOR ROWELL

HARRISTON, June 26.—The rain which fell to-night did not dampen the enthusiasm of the yeomanry of Minto, who turned out in large numbers and helped to crowd the Town Hall to the doors to hear the final Liberal message off the campaing in WWest Wellington. Mr. James McMurchie presided. Thereception Mr. McEwing, the Liberal candidate, received augurs well for his success at the polls on Monday in redeeming West Wellington.

Mr. Arthur Hawkes was the chief speaker, and, in a forceful manner, reviewed the issues before the people, and eulogized Mr. Rowell for his courage, tact and statesmanship, and characterized him as a great leader. On the outlook for Monday, Mr. Hawkes said the growing expectation of a landslide was the most striking development he had known since he first came to Canada, nearly thirty years ago, and the working unity between progressive forces which had been established ought to continue, if the Liberal party showed itself worthy of its leader, regardless of what the numerical results of the polling might be.

Don't permit yourself to be sidetracked on any of these last minute whisperings. The unity of the Temperance people has driven the liquor interests to extremes.

EDITOR OF ORANGE SENTINEL DESERTS GOVERNMENT ON ABOLISH-THE-BAR POLICY

Bilingual Issue Raised on the "Stop Thief" Plan so He Asserts, to Evade Consequences Of Opposing Abolition-of-the-Bar

When the editor of the official Organ of the Orange Order of Ontario goes back upon a Conservative Government, there must be a mighty important reason for his action. Mr. W. Plewman associate and actual writing editor of the Orange Sentinel, and son-in-law of Mayor Hocken, of Toronto, publisher of the Sentinel, resigned his position because the Sentinel management is supporting the Government candidates who oppose the Rowell policy of abolition of the bar.

The editor of the Sentinel, Mr. Plewman, gives his reasons for deserting his party on a great issue in a letter to the press, in these words:

"Editor of The Star: In view of the fact that the Sentinel, the official organ of the Orange Association, to-day came out in open advocacy of the Government candidates, thereby imperilling the success of the great movement to wipe out thirteen hundred bar-rooms that are degrading the citizenship of this Province, I have resigned my position and secured my liberty to join with the multitude of other temperance Tories and Orangemen in campaigning for this sadly-needed reform. For that reason I crave permission to give publication to my views."

Mr. Plewman, the editor of the Orange Sentinel goes on to say more. These are his words uttered on his own responsibility, not the words of any other journal, but the published declaration of the editor of the Orange Sentinel, who further says:

"I was quite satisfied to work with the Sentinel while it took a neutral course in the present campaign and merely urged the electors to vote for the candidates who would go furthest in pledging themselves to keep English the school language of Ontario. But when I learned that the Sentinel was determined to come out openly for the Government candidates and urge the Orangemen to work for their election, thus, in my judgment, making the removal of thirteen hundred bar-rooms absolutely impossible unless a strong counter appeal from a similar source were made, I found myself under the strongest moral obligation to give expression to my sentiments.

HOPED TO AVERT IT

"I resigned on Monday, but no persons but Mr. Hocken knew of it until yesterday. I had not told even my wife, as I hoped that an open difference might be averted and no one be the wiser. But the appeal contained in the Sentinel printed yesterday, but bearing to-day's date, thrust me out as an advocate of the temperance cause."

Mr. Plewman's letter is too long for full publication, extending to nearly two newspaper columns, but its main features in reference to his recent action may be cited. He recites the history of the bilingual regulations. He says:

"It is a matter of common knowledge that in the year 1912 the present Government adopted certain bilingual regulations in the interest of the English language. At that time the Government had a right to pose as the English language party in Ontario. The regulations met the demands of the English-speaking people of the Province as expressed in the previous elections. They satisfied patriotic people, and they satisfied the majority of the electors.

CHANGED FOR THE WORSE.

But those satisfactory regulations were changed. By Mr. Rowell? No. By the present Government? Assuredly. Then at whose demands were they changed? Did the Orangemen want them changed? Did public school supporters want them changed? Did the English-speaking Separate school supporters want them changed? None of these. The fact that stands out pre-eminent, that no living soul in Ontario can challenge, is that splendid regulations in favour of a sound English education were amended to please Henri Bourassa and a handful of fanatics. And this was only last September.

"We all know that the Government is now appealing desperately to the race pride of Anglo-Saxons in the hope that they will save it from the defeat it deserves for getting on the wrong side of temperance sentiment, and it is saying that the bilingual issue is the supreme issue. But why did not the Premier say it was the supreme issue when he gave out the address to the electors that opened the campaign? Had he forgotten something? No, he remembered something; he remembered that the Government had been false to the trust reposed in it by the British people and that if the electors were reminded of the fact and were true to their conceptions of what is justice and what is good for all the people of this country, it would be overwhelmed.

CRYING "STOP, THIEF!"

Desperate predicaments require desperate recourses, and like the thief that would escape by crying "Stop, thief; stop, thief!" the Government is crying "Stop the betrayal of the English language." The electors of Ontario should certainly take it at its word.

The bilingual question raises a great patriotic issue like that of reciprocity. It is too big a matter for ordinary party divisions. It is the duty of Anglo-Saxons to put aside ordinary political preferences, to take a stand as Britishers, and vote in condemnation of those who betrayed the cause of the English language. If the electors of Ontario make this the chief issue, their anger against the Government will become so great, and they will make their condemnation of the Government's action so sweeping that only a handful of those who sacrificed their patriotic principles will be returned to the Legislature.

WHY HE RESIGNED.

The question may be asked, why, if I feel so strongly on this matter and I am a temperance man, and opposed to the bar, I have not taken part in the campaign ere this. My explanation is simply this. My position as associate editor of the Sentinel made it undesirable that I should go beyond its published utterances, and while it was taking a neutral position and giving the policy of banish-the-bar a fair chance, I considered it wise, with regard to the public service I believe I can render in that position, to take no active part in the campaign against the bar-room. But when the Sentinel determined to abandon a neutral attitude, and as it did this week to openly advocate the election of Government candidates, thereby imperiling the success of a great moral cause, then it became with me a matter of conscience. I decided to get my freedom, and to do that is in my power during the short time that is left before voting day to turn the tide in favour of temperance.

It is a very painful course that I am taking and it means considerable of a personal sacrifice. But whatever the full cost of my course may be, I will pay it gladly if thereby I encourage others to take a stand for the Anglo-Saxon civilization which we all hold so dear and for the elimination of the bar-room which has so often cursed Anglo-Saxon civilization. If the Christian people of this city vote according to their sentiments, and I believe by their talk that they will do so, Monday next will see this city Temperance Toronto.

But let not the temperance candidates make the fatal mistake of running away from the language question; if they use the facts as they should, the Government will find it a red hot coal on their hands.

W. R. PLEWMAN.

64 Hilton Avenue, Toronto.

No comment is necessary. The above facts speak for themselves and show that an honest and conscientious Orangeman, thinks and acts in accordance with the fact that in this contest THE SUPREME ISSUE IS ABOLITION OF THE BAR.

And Yet They Boast That The Law Has Been Enforced

The boast that the liquor laws have been enforced by the Government is flatly denied by the Marmora Herald in so far as that community is concerned. Here is part of the editor's words:

Believing that the liquor traffic is responsible for more poverty, crime and misery than all other causes, and having pledged our support to the "Abolition of the Bar," no matter which party may favour it, we could not consistently adopt any other attitude.

We also take this stand as a protest against conditions as they exist in Marmora. The village has become almost a bye-word with travellers and others, who have occasion to visit it from time to time. The drunkenness and profanity around the streets is a disgrace to any village, while the law is openly violated.

These conditions and the fact that the law is violated are known to the License Department of the Government and the Department by trickery and double dealing has apparently encouraged them. These may seem like strong statements, but we are prepared to prove them as we have been the statements we have made about local conditions in the past.

WHAT THE MONEY WASTED OVER THE BAR COULD DO

Not to mention the waste of manhood, wreckage of homes, the bar represents a tremendous economic waste.

Every year in Peterborough money is spent over the bars of the city to the amount of $800,000 a year, and including the receipts of the shop the money spent in drink will total about $400,000 a year.

The great bulk of the money thus wasted would, if the bars and shops were closed as they will be closed if you elect Rowell, would be spent among our merchants. Do you see the point?

This large amount is enough to pay and overpay the whole of the the city taxes for one year.

It is enough to pay the total cost of maintaining our public, separate and high schools for two or three years.

It is enough to pave several miles of streets.

It is enough to make every decent man to strike a blow on Monday to abolish the bar.

One can safely defy any man to mention any redeeming feature of the bar. Does it pay?

Will you vote to keep the bar?

How Labour Is Concerned In The Abolition Of The Bar

From the time that the Grit barons of England wrung Magna Charta, representing all the rights and liberties of British civilization, from King John—from that time to the present day, Liberalism has stood for the rights of the common people; has fought its battles and gained the rights that the common people—the people who toil, enjoy to-day.

This is a matter of history, a matter of fact as true to-day as in the past. Every law now on the statutes of the Dominion, except the Labour Day law, was placed there by a Liberal government.

Nearly all the Ontario laws in the interests of Labour except the Compensation law, was enacted by Liberal governments, and the Conservative Government, though sharply prodded by Liberals and Labour, held that back for seven years, and even now it is not in farce.

In that seven years the lack of an adequate Workmen's Compensation Act, has robbed working men, injured in their calling, or the families of working men killed, of millions of dollars which a good effective compensation act would have awarded them.

Rowell, the Liberal leader, is a leader in reforms for the benefit of Labour. His first great step is to strike off the shackles of the working man who is a slave to drink. Drink is one of the greatest enemies of the working man and his family, and abolition of the bar would be a big boon to Labour interests and the interests of industry at large.

If the closed bar would make all men sober, and if the wages of all workmen, sober by habit, or sober by lack of the bar, were pooled and equally divided, every workman would have a larger income than now when the bar gets the big end of many a pay envelope. The money wasted over the bar would go into the "Jackpot."

Abolish the bar is the first step to the benefit of Labour. Some workmen complain that neither party can be trusted. Try the Liberal party this time.

If workmen unite to arouse public opinion and public opinion makes itself felt, governments will be driven to do justice to Labour.

Voting to abolish the bar can be made an example of public opinion behind a great reform.

If workingmen help abolish the bar it will help raise the level of civilization and make thousands of working men, who are now drinkers, new men and a new force in the community—a force that cannot be ignored. Thousands of workmen now "fighting booze" would be fighting the battles of Labour, and by sober lives compel respect for their demands and rights.

What respect will be paid to workingmen (far too many), who do themselves and their families more deadly damage through drink, than any injustice of parties or politicians?

If the working man, if Labour interests, want to clear the decks for action in the battle for their rights, let them remove the wreckage of the bar by helping remove the bar.

Any working man who is true to himself, true to the interests of his family, true to a mate, that is fighting a hard battle against drink, cannot hesitate as to how he will cast his vote on Monday.

Think it over and you will see how the interest of Labour, whose prosperity and just rights mean the uplift of the whole community, can be served by the abolition of the bar.

SCOUT MASTER REPLIES TO ONE OF OLD BRIGADE

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—"A chiel amang us takin' notes and faith he'll prent them."

Scouts, attention!

"One of the Old Brigade" an ex-Boy Scout, wants to make it known to the public that the Scout movement is a failure, because, he asserts, that religious instruction is neglected. Will one of the Old Brigade tell me where he will find a higher code of honour, and a truer conception of the Almighty than among boys who are mentally and physically fit. A healthy body tends to pure thought, making it impossible for the well-trained and healthy Scout to break law No. 10. "Our thoughts are the text; our lives preach the sermon." If your correspondent will read Rule No. 3, promugated by the Governing Council re religious observances, he will find it reads thus: "Where a troop consists of Scouts belonging to various religious bodies, they should be encouraged to attend the service of their own denomination. When in camp any form of daily prayer and of weeky Divine Service in such a troop should be of the simplest character—attendance being entirely voluntary, and any boys whose parents object should be exempt from attendance."

This rule applies to the Peterborough Scouts.

It is a pity 'One of the Old Brigade' cannot find boys with whom he would care to associate, but did it ever strike him to train for Scoutmaster and so help boys who are wandering far from the fold, instead of standing aloof uttering the prayer of the Pharisee: "Lord, I thank Thee I am not as other men (boys)?

In conclusion, I would ask One of the Old Brigade to "be a Scout" and prove himself a Scout by coming forward and giving assistance. The harvest is plentiful and the labourers few.

James Milby, Scoutmaster
McGill Street, Peterborough.

Mr Soden's Evasive Attitude On The Temperance Issue

Why are the Temperance Organizations and the leaders in Church work in Peterborough County giving their solid support to Mr. G. A. Gillespie, the Liberal Candidate, in this campaign and refusing to give their support to Mr. R. J. Soden? The reason is simple: From the very first Mr. Gillespie has pledged himself, and he has given the Temperance Associations a signed statement to that effect, that he would support and vote for every advanced measure in the cause of Temperance, no matter by which side introduced.

From the very first, also, Mr. Soden has refused to give the Temperance People any clear-cut, definite statement that he would VOTE for advanced legislation, nor has he ever made such a statement in the public press. While refusing to commit himself as to how he would VOTE on Temperance measures, he has made great efforts to convince the public, through his meetings and in the press, that he was an even better supporter of Temperance measures than Mr. Gillespie. He has claimed that he has been persecuted by the officers of the Temperance organizations.

The public is entitled to have the facts. The following definite statement shows exactly how Mr. Soden has hedged and trimmed on the Temperance issue:

The Party Nomination

When Mr. Soden decided to try and obtain the party nomination he recognised that there were two elements in his own party. He needed the support of both or he could not get the convention. Therefore he told delegates who were opposed to the abolition of bar that he would not pledge his vote to any person on the Temperance issue and that if elected he would go to Toronto absolutely unpledged as to how he would vote. To others, like Mr. George Leader, he promised in private that he would vote for the abolition of the bar, the shop and the club license with either political party whether introduced as separate measures or collectively.

How is that for going two ways at once?

Shop Licenses

On May 19, 1914, Mr. Soden attended the convention of the County of Peterboro Temperance Association. He moved that the Association should ask the candidates of both political parties to pledge themselves to vote for the abolition of the shop as well as for the abolition of bar and club licenses. In impassioned tones he called on all those present to set principle above party and to stand together on the great temperance issue.

On June 6, 1914, after he had obtained his party's nomination, he was waited on by a delegation from the County Temperance Association and asked to pledge himself as to how he would vote on temperance issues, should he be elected to the Legislature. Among other things he was asked if he would agree to vote for the abolition of Shop Licenses. He replied: "I will allow no one to dictate to me as to how I vote on these matters."

How is that for standing by Temperance principles?

Had to Consult Others

On June 7, 1914, Mr. Soden became afraid that the County Temperance Association was going to take a strong stand against him and that it would hurt his chances of election. Accompanied by a leading Conservative he waited on Mr. A. B. Cunningham, secretary of the Temperance Association, and asked him to have the executive of the Association defer its pronouncement for 24 hours that he might go to Toronto and see if he would be recognized as a Conservative candidate if he went as far on temperance matters as the Temperance Association desired. Upon his return he announced that he had decided not to change his stand.

What do you think of a candidate who has to consult his party before he can decide what stand he shall take on a moral issue?

Three-fifths Handicap

When Local Option in Peterboro, after obtaining a majority of 510 votes, was defeated because of the three-fifths handicap Mr. Soden declared in public on January 3rd, 1910, before temperance workers: "That he would never cast another vote for the Whitney Government as long as it retained that measure on the statute books." He said more to the same effect.

On June 7th, 1914, Mr. Soden told Mr. A. B. Cunningham, Secretary of the Temperance Association, in the presence of a leading Conservative, that he was prepared to sign a statement that if elected to the Legislature he would vote with either political party on every possible occasion for the abolition of the three-fifths handicap.

On June 15th, at Young's Point, Mr. Soden said at a Public Meeting that the enactment of the three-fifths handicap "was the best thing that ever happened to the Country."

How is that for consistency?

Talk and Promise Compared

On Thursday, June 12th, in his Opera House Address, Mr. Soden dilated on the great curse of the liquor traffic and of shop licenses in particular. He declared his belief that the whole business should be wiped out. He neglected however, to say that he would VOTE for any such measure. Instead he said:

"To the extent of my own vote and my own influence, if returned, I MAY work towards the end that we desire."

What do you think of a candidate who contents himself with only saying that he MAY work for the abolition of something which he admits is a great curse?

Has Not Denied It

On June 13, 1914, the County Temperance Association, through the public press, charged Mr. Soden with having made a great pretense of being willing to support the temperance issue, and with having failed to say that he would VOTE in favour of temperance measures.

To date, Mr. Soden has not attempted to deny, through the press, the truth of that charge nor has he said that he would support such measures.

The Rowell Policy

The Rowell policy would wipe out 1300 bars including the treating system and 58 club licenses and would make it easy for municipalities to wipe out the 215 shop licenses that would be left, by enabling them to do so by a straight majority vote. After he obtained the nomination of his party, Mr. Soden told a number of Conservative temperance workers whose support he desired to retain, and who were dissatisfied with his actions, that he would vote for the Abolition of the Bar, Shop and Club Licenses either separately or collectively and with either political party. When they asked him to pledge himself in public to that effect. Mr Soden declined to do so. Mr. George Leader was one of these men. Mr. Leader has accused Mr. Soden of this in the columns of the Daily Review. Mr. Soden has not made any public explanation of his action nor denied the truth of the charge.

What do you think of a man who is willing to pledge his vote in private but not in public.

Mr. Soden's Funny Views

Mr. Rowell, if placed in power, has pledged himself to enact legislation that will abolish 1300 shop licenses and therewith the treating system, and 58 club licenses. Municipalities would be allowed to wipe out the shop licenses by a straight majority vote.

In a Telegram sent to the Toronto Daily Star, June 18, 1914, Mr. Soden said in effect that were Mr. Rowell to carry out his promise to the people, conditions would be worse than they are now. In other words, instead of having only 215 shop licenses in the province, these to be wiped out by a straight majority vote, Mr. Soden says he believes present conditions are better. Under existing conditions we have these same 215 shop licenses and 58 club licenses and 1300 bar licenses and the treating system, and none of these can be wiped out except by a three-fifths handicap.

Are not these funny views for a temperance man to hold?

Fooling the People

Mr Gillespie, through the press, recently asked Mr. Soden point blank if he would state openly that he would vote with either party for the abolition of the bar, club and shop licenses. Mr. Soden might have settled the point once for all by simply stating "I will." He did nothing of the kind. Instead, he dodged it. At the same time he pretended to answer it.

This was his reply: "My reply is that I will do far more than that." Note that when he said this he did not say how he would vote on these three issues either separately or collectively. Instead he evaded the question while appearing to answer it. Continuing Mr. Soden said:

"I am resolved, if elected, to myself move in the Legislature for the abolition of the liquor traffic in every form and I will invite and compel all those of BOTH political parties who are temperance men to show their hand."

That sounds fine. Really, however, it is only a piece of buncome. Mr. Soden knows—or should know, that he would have no power to introduce such a bill in the Legislature and that if he did introduce such a measure it would simply be thrown out by the Speaker. It would never even be voted on. Thus it would never be of any value to the cause of temperance. The liquor interests know this and are not the least bit alarmed concerning it.

The Ontario Legislature has no power to prevent either the manufacture or the importation into the province of spirituous liquors. All it can do is to prevent their sale. That is why such a measure as Mr. Soden speaks of introducing would be out-of-order and if introduced would be thrown out by the Speaker-of-the-Legislature.

Thus all Mr. Soden's pretence that he is a better temperance man than Mr. Gillespie is nothing else than a piece of stage play. It does not mean anything.

Is that a safe kind of a man to elect to the Legislature to take a straightforward stand on the temperance issue?

Mr. Gillespie's Position

From the very first, Mr. Gillespie has made his position on the Temperance issue absolutely clear. On June 6 he gave a perfectly satisfactory signed statement to the Temperance Associations, specifying how he would vote on Temperance issues. In addition, in his statement to the public of his policy on this and other matters, Mr. Gillespie said:

> "I am in favour of the abolition of the three-fifths clause. I will vote with either political party for its abolition and favor a straight majority vote on every possible occasion in the Legislature. I will vote with either political party on every possible occasion, for the abolition of the open bar, club licenses, shop licenses, and all other legislation looking for the restriction and abolition of the Liquor Traffic."

Mr. Gillespie has nailed his colours to the mast. We know exactly where he stands. He will do what he promises. VOTE FOR GILLESPIE.

Mr. Temperance Man — You fumed and grew hot when it nullified your local against the three-fifths clause option endeavours. Don't forget it on Monday.

A WORLD OF TRUTH IN THESE LETTERS

TO THE FATHER OF THE HOME

Do you want your boys who are growing up to be subject to the same temptations of the open bar that you have been. You may have been fortunate enough to have escaped but hundreds have not been, and if the bar-room is sustained your boy may be one of the unfortunate.

Don't you think your wife and yourself would rest easier at night when the boys were up town enjoying themselves if you knew that there were no bar-rooms into which they might be mislead. If you desire to assist in relieving that aching heart you will not hesitate to vote for the Abolish-the-Bar candidate, on Monday.

TO THE MOTHERS OF THE HOME

Would you not have a great weight lifted from your shoulders if you knew your boys could leave home without having to be subject to the temptation of the bar room. Will you be as sure of their conduct with the open bar as you would be without it. Do you think of the future welfare of your daughter who will become the wife of some young man who may be a victim of the bar. No one is safe while these temptations exist. While one man can take a drink and leave it alone, a dozen cannot do this, and the sociability of the bar is one of the greatest dangers. Mother, if you are thinking of your boy's welfare or your girl's future you will do all you can to enlist the voters for the Candidate who advocates Abolish-the-Bar.

TO THE YOUNG MEN.

Have you ever secured a position on the recommendation that you could drink intoxicating iquors. No employer would look favourably upon your application. Have you not noticed that the young men who get along are those who are not frequenters of the bar-room.

Aside from this if your mother and father have not spent many a sleepless night of worry, hundreds of other boys' fathers and mothers have, owing to the temptation the bar-room is for the young man. If you would relieve this worry, make yourself more secure, protect your sister from what may be a life of sorrow, and, at the same time, be as good a sport as there is in the City, vote for the Candidate who advocates Abolish-the-Bar.

Recital by The Pupils of Miss Mary Lonergan

A recital by the pupils of Miss Mary Lonergan, A.T.C.M., in the Assembly Room at the J. M. Greene Studio last night delighted their friends. Many of the piano pupils were very young, but they acquitted themselves in a manner reflecting credit upon themselves and their instructor.

The instrumental numbers were interspersed with vocal selections by Miss Masterton, Miss Lynch, and Miss Warmington, the entire concert providing a delightful evening. The programme was as follows:

Duet—"Little Fairy March," Mildred Greene and Miretta Grisdale.
Piano Solo—"Carnation," Margery Cox.
Piano Solo—"Reflections," Miss Ella Lynch.
Duet—"Fan Dance," Misses Boyle and Garvey.
Piano Solo—"Nightingale," Miss Lulu McGill.
Bocal Solo—"Forgotten," Miss Ella Lynch.
Duet—"Sweet Remembrance," Misses Mabel and Grace Whitby.
Piano Solo—"Moonbeams on the Lake," Miss Genevieve Garvey.
Duet—"Over the Waves," Muriel Goselin and Margery Cox.
Piano Solo—"Bluette Valse," Mildred Greene.
Vocal Solo—"When you are Near," Miss K. Masterton.
Piano Solo—"In Slumberland," Muriel Goselin.
Duet—"Valse Caprice," Misses Keneally and Thompson.
Piano Solo—"Constant Devotion," Miss Hilda Thompson.
Vocal Solo—"Tatters," Miss Helen Warmington.
Piano Solo—"At the Fountain," Miss C. Keneally.
Accompaniste—Miss Lonergan. A.T.C.M.

During the evening Miss Lonergan was presented with beautiful bouquet of roses, and at the conclusion was congratulated upon the success attained by her pupils. It might be added that all those who contributed to the programme were pupils of Miss Lonergan, except Miss Masterson, who kindly assisted.

THE SALVATION ARMY BAND IN ENGLAND

Mr. E. Hensley, the Secretary of the Peterborough Salvation Army Band, has forwarded the following letter to the "Examiner," which will doubtless prove of interest to some of our readers.

As you will know, the band arrived at Plymouth nearly three days overdue. I met the band at Plymouth and was delighted to see them. Although they were overdue, they spoke highly of their trip and especially of the courtesy shown by all the members of the crew, from the captain down to the stokers. Everything that possibly could be done was done to make our band comfortable. On leaving the ship, Captain Rostrum, the commander, asked the band to play on the tender before they pulled away from the ship. We were pleased to comply with the request, after which many rounds of cheers were sent up by the passengers, which fully demonstrated that Peterborough band had kept up its good reputation.

On arrival at the dock, a special train soon conveyed us to London. We arrived at London just before 4 a.m., to find the Metropolis still in slumber.

In the evening we gave a concert at Marylebone Hall. The place was packed at this our first appearance in London. Thursday night we were at the great Welcome Festival at the Albert Hall. There were over 10,000 present. There were contingents from each country in the world, and each came to the platform to be introduced. The contingents from America (U.S.A.), Sweden, Germany, Holland, and Denmark, together with Canada, were headed by a band. There was great applause and great sympathy shown when our band entered heading the Canadian contingent. The Peterborough band stands out in the public eye here.

Friday and aSturday we were at the Strand Hall, a special hall, holding 5,000 people, especially erected for the congress.

Sunday all day we were at Camberwell. A large theatre was hired for the occasion, holding 2,500 people. It was packed at night.

I have omitted Saturday. This was a great day. There was a procession from the Thames Embankment to Hyde Park, about three miles' march. The route was lined all the way. There were about 60 bands in the procession, and the papers say it was one of the best processions ever seen in London.

Monday was Canadian Day at the Strand Hall. We were kept busy. The hall was packed.

Tuesday we are at Tunbridge Wells. This is a beautiful place There was a great welcome for us here. We played on the bandstand in the park during the afternoon, and at night gave a concert in the large S. A. Hall. It was packed.

Glad to say all the men are well, but no matter where we go, there seems to be no place like the Electric City.

G. A. GILLESPIE
Liberal Candidate in West Peterborough.

On Saturday, June 6, I gave the Temperance Associations a signed statement that if elected I would vote with either political party on every possible occasion for the abolition of the 1,300 bars, 215 shop, and 38 club licenses in Ontario. I repeated this statement in my Opera House address June 18. Furthermore, if I ever get the opportunity I will vote to prevent the manufacture of liquor. I ask for your support and influence.

Other Business At Board Of Education Meeting

Miss E. F. Erskine of the King George School, wrote asking for leave of absence for part or all of September as she intended spending the summer in Europe. As Miss Erskine has been a valued member of the staff for some time the request was readily granted.

White Bros. wrote the Board reminding them that their account for carting blackboards from the old to the new East City school was overdue. The fact is that the firm in carting the boards broke several of them, and the matter was referred to the Propety Committee who will meet them in connection with the matter. The Board do not feel that they ought to pay for the carting of the boards when they were damaged in transit.

The resignation of Mr. D. A. MacKay from the Collegiate Institute staff was received and accepted.

The resignations of Mrs. Brown, Miss F. Jackson, Miss Totten and Miss E. Thompson were received and accepted.

LAST MINUTE REMINDERS

Do you know a hotel keeper who is working for Rowell candidates? You may but no one else does.

How many proprietors of liquor stores are hustling to elect Rowell?

The liquor interests need your support. What are you going to say on Monday?

The three-fifths clause saved 409 licenses from being wiped out. Are you going to vote with those and the other license holders?

Think of Mr. Rowell's ideal—a barless and prosperous Ontario with happy homes and every child afforded a good public school education.

Do you think the liquor interests are not prepared to open the money bags on Monday?

There was a majority of 811 for the abolition of the bar in Brantford. The three-fifths clause kept the bar-rooms open. How is that for the best Temperance Government Ontario ever had?

Those whom the liquor party cannot bribe, they are attempting to delude by false stories. Remember Rowell has put this issue up to you. It was yours in the first place. Don't desert it.

Don't waste time arguing with a man who professes to have strong temperance inclinations and is shifting about to find reasons for his present championship of the bar, you may as well put him down at once as a party man first, and a temperance man a few hundred miles farther down the route.

The best people of this country have with almost one voice—Anglicans, Catholics, Methodists, Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Baptists, Salvationists in their annual conferences and assemblies—publicly endorsed the policy of abolish-the-bar. What more comprehensive expression of intelligent and sane public opinion is wanted?

James K. Haverson, the legal advocate of the liquor interests lays claim to being the father of the three-fifths clause. He left the foundling on the door-step of the Whitney Government which adopted it. But its days are numbered.

Who are you going to join hands with on Monday—the distillers, the brewers and the whole rank and file of the liquor brigade, or with the Temperance organizations, the Churches of all Christian denominations and all the others who have joined hands against the traffic?

"I would rather see a sober man walking along a rough road than a drunken man staggering along a good road," said Mr. George Leader at Fairmount in reference to the liquor question as compared to material things such as good roads.

Leaving your party because you got none of the plums is a ward-healer's job. But leaving your party for a principle is a man's job—and a courageous man at that.

Mr. Voter, what a privilege is yours next Monday. Vote to kill a traffic which knows no law, nor holds sacred any fireside, nor any age, nor sex, and is the principal cause of crime, the occasion of much poverty, suffering and sorrow, and the greatest factor in much of the degradation of humanity and destruction of our race.

A sanctified sham is the man whol ives in hope for an opportunity to deal the liquor traffic a blow, but who will vote against Gillespie on Monday.

MR. SODEN CAN'T FOOL LIQUOR PARTY! CAN HE FOOL YOU?

Mr. Soden or somebody in his interests is hitting below the belt—misrepresenting Mr. Gillespie's position on the temperance question—duplicating the lying local option map.

It is declared that Mr. Gillespie is the friend of the shop and the bottle. This is shamelessly and shamefully false.

Mr. Gillespie is in favour of utter abolition of liquor licenses—bar, club and shop, and won't get a liquor traffic vote. Mr. Soden says he goes further then Mr. Gillespie, yet he will get every liquor vote.

It is asked why Mr. Rowell does not include abolition of the shop in his policy.

Sir James Whitney can answer and does answer that question. He opposes Rowell's policy of abolishing the bar and club licenses on the ground, among others, that it is in advance of public opinion—it would be much so if shops were included.

Mr. Rowell has framed his policy in sympathy with public opinion, as represented by the demand of temperance organizations, church courts, councils, synods and conferences; and as so far has he gone that Sir James Whitney says he has gone too for. None of these bodies mentioned shops.

But Mr. Rowell has not forgotten the shops. The first session of the next Legislature if he is returned, he will abolish the bar, and apply the British principle of majority rule to local option and abolish the shops. He will remove the three-fifths handicap, which two years ago kept all the bars, club and shop licenses in Peterborough in full and deadly play.

Mr. Soden declares for the three-fifths clause—he seems to be willing to declare for anything he thinks will help him justify his betrayal of his temperance co-workers and help his candidature. Mr. Soden is therefore, the true friend of the shop and bottle; and when he is digesting his defeat on Monday night he can rank as the "bottle-scarred" veteran.

Mr. Soden, it won't work. You can't ride two horses. You can't expect to have the liquor party vote solidly behind you and have honest temperance men keep step with them to the polls.

The only temperance men who can vote the liquor traffic ticket is the mon who permits his partizanism to strangle his principles.

He can't trust Mr. Soden's sincerity on his ability to carry out his promises. The liquor party doesn't believe Mr. Soden is sincere or able to carry out his promises made to delude temperance men. If it did it would not vote for a man, as it will do to a man, who pledges himself to destroy its business.

Mr. Soden can't fool the liquor party; can he fool you?

"OTONABEE" WAS ON FIRE

BARRIE, June 26.—Crowded with passengers, chiefly women and children, the Lake Simcoe Navigation Company's steamer Otonabee caught fire while out on the lake, bound for Barrie, yesterday afternoon. Prompt work with axes and hose saved the boat, and averted what promised to develop into a dangerous panic.

As it was, the situation looked so serious for a few minutes that the steamer was turned head on to the shore and sent forward at full speed.

The fire started in the woodwork at the top deck around the big smoke stack. For some time the wood had been smouldering, and finally a woman noticed smoke.

It was the signal for a rush to the lifebelts, women became hysterical, and vainly tried to fasten on the belts. The crew lost no time, and with axes broke away the wood around the stack, and a two-inch hose was turned on the smouldering wood.

The Otonabee had on board two hundred members of the Northern Baptist Convention, in session here, who had been taken to Big Bay Point as the guests of the company.

A Statement From Mr. Gordon

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—It is past my comprehension why a man who writes newspaper articles should deliberately lie about a public man. In yesterday's Times the statement was made that Mr. Rowell was connected with the liquor traffic and that he allowed his name to be on the wine list of the Ontario Club. Both the above statements are lying and deceptive representations, for which there is not a shadow of truth. In this mornings' Times, apparently the same writer deliberately lies again when he says that the firm of Gordon & Widdifield have threatened the Times with an action for damages unless the Times retracts the statement that Mr Rowell is a member of the Ontario Club. This is another lying misrepresentation, for which there is no shadow of foundation, and if the writer of that statement had the decency to publish the notice, he would not need to lie about the firm of Gordon & Widdifield, as he did.

I say his(that Mr. Rowell is not connected with the liquor traffic in any shape or manner.

I further say that Mr. Rowell never allowed his name to be published on the wine lists of any Club, any more than Mr. Burnham allows his name to be published on the wine list of the Peterborough Club, because he sits there enjoying the hospitality of the Club occassionally, evenings.

There is just as much right to say that the Reverend Canon Davidson is connected with the liquor traffic because he is a member of the Peterborough Club, as there is to charge Mr Rowell with being connected with the liquor traffic, because he happens to be a member of the Ontario Club.

It is very nearly time, in my opinion, that the man who wrote those mis-statements in the Peterborough Times should play the manly part, and state what is true, as far as he is able.

Yours truly,
G. N. Gordon.

Woman Drowns Self and Babe.

PRESCOTT, Ont., June 27.—The bodies of Mrs. Maud Mills of Edwardsburg and her 18-months-old child were found Thursday night in the St. Lawrence river, just east of Prescott. In view of the fact that the woman had threatened to drown herself, the coroner decided that an inquest was unnecessary. The bodies were interred yesterday afternoon.

Art Experts Find Treasures.

STOCKHOLM, Sweden, June 27.—Dutch art experts have discovered in the National Museum Gallery here two Rembrandt — "A Portrait of a Woman," and "Abraham's Sacrifice." Both pictures are said to belong to the master's early period.

PANIC ON STEAMER.

Lake Simcoe Excursionists Scared By Fire Alarm.

BARRIE, June 27.—Crowded with passengers, chiefly women and children, the Lake Simcoe Navigation Co.'s steamer Otonabee caught fire while out on the lake, bound for Barrie, late Thursday. Prompt work with axes and hose saved the boat, which had been turned head on to the shore at full speed.

The fire started in the woodwork at the top deck around the big smoke stack and finally a woman noticed smoke. It was the signal for a rush to the lifebelts, and women became hysterical and vainly tried to fasten on the belts. The Otonabee had on board two hundred members of the Northern Baptist convention.

Fire at Duart.

HIGHGATE, Ont., June 27. — Fire which started about midnight in the village of Duart, three miles east of here, destroyed the old hostelry known as the Kochler House, Ganges' cabinet shop, Lawrence Bros.' general store, a vacant store, several barns, and other smaller frame buildings. A bucket brigade was the only means of fighting the fire, which consumed everything within reach.

A LAST WORD FROM THE EDITOR OF THE SENTINEL WHO FOLLOWED CONSCIENCE

Mr. W. R. Plewman, the editor of The Orange Sentinel and son-in-law of Mayor Hocken, who resigned his position rather than say that the supreme issue in the Ontario election is not the abolition of the bar but bilingualism, has been asked to speak at many points. Being unable to do so because of the short time remaining before polling, he has issued the following statement:—

THE BAR MUST GO— THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE MUST STAY.

That is the slogan for the patriotic and temperance people of Ontario. It will win.

Not a Christian man dare vote for the bar. The power of God is working over the consciences of men. They must not resist. Let them be true to their principles, and the moral enthusiasm of Ontario will sweep into office a Government of men who will banish the bar and restore the safety devices for the preservation of the English language that were thrown away by the present Government in the vain hope of catching French votes. The new Government dare not do otherwise in defiance of the aroused sentiment of the people. In making their principles known beyond peradventure, and only by so doing, can the electors of this Province maintain and uplift Anglo-Saxon civilization. By defeating the Government they will serve notice on politicians once and for all that they must not cater to the liquor traffic or racial fanatics, and, by removing the 1,300 institutions that debauch our citizenship, they will bring Anglo-Saon civiligation near to perfection.

I have taken my stand in this campaign as a Tory, as an Orangeman, as a Temperance man, and as a Christian who loves his country and has faith in the willingness of his fellow-citizens to break away from party in the interests of morality and national welfare.

I believe there is no possible excuse for any Christian or Temperance man to vote for the bar. That is my point of view. Others may not see it, but I cannot get away from it, and can only follow the gleam. I beg of my fellows to do likewise, and to let every other consideration be ignored in view of the challenge to express their own moral and patriotic principles. If they do not do so, no matter how many reasons they may afterwards give for doing otherwise, men who look for their votes will violate these cherished principles at their pleasure.

I am the father of a boy six years old. Am I, for any reason I can conjure up or that cunning or mistaken men may put before me, to fail to remove the social temptations that are to be found on a hundred street corners that will damn tens of thousands of other men's sons, if not my son? I cannot do it.

I am one of eight brothers, seven of whom are living, one pouring out his life for the good of his yellow-skinned brothers in China. Four of these blood-brothers of mine are resident in Ontario, and, like myself, are doing all they can to heal up the wounds made by the liquor traffic as well as to destroy the traffic itself. In fourteen years I have never found any ecuse for voting against the Tory party, and so far as I know they have been of very much he same mind. But I will be very surprised if all of these brothers are not going to vote with me to deal the liquor traffic the worst blow it ever suffered at the hands of the electors. And not to vote only, but to work also.

I have been teaching Sunday School classes for eighteen years. To-day I have a class of sixty or seventy young men. How can I go on talking about the merits of sober and Godly living after dropping a ballot in the box for my party and against the removal of the open bar-room? Again I say, I cannot do it.

Let there be no mistake about it. On the 29th of June the electors of Ontario are going to condone truckling to both the liquor traffic and the French Nationalists, or they are going to elect a Government that will represent no party, but represent the patriotism and the morality of this British community. They must be true to their principles.

THE BAR MUST GO — THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE MUST STAY.

A LAST WORD FROM THE DOMINION ALLIANCE TO ELECTORS OF PROVINCE

Dear Sir,— Permit me a last word before voting on Monday. The campaign now closing has been a marvellous one, and the province has been stirred as never before. It is cheering to know that in spite of misrepresentations and maligning, our friends have maintained loyal to the cause, and refused to allow lesser issues to come in, or to permit politicians to side-step the main question.

Practically speaking the only criticism made of the Rowell policy has been that it does not include shops. It is not out of the mouth of the present government that this criticism should come. We temperate people must face the practical issue as it is, no matter what our individual opinion is as to what it should be. The issue in this province to-day is clear cut and definite. It is the "Whitney" policy or the "Rowell" policy, and the comparison is not between the Rowell policy and our ideals, but between the Rowell policy and the Whitney policy.

An example of the misrepresentation is the use for political party purposes of a statement alleged to have been made by me some time ago, in which I am reported to have said:

"The abolition of the bars would not be a solution of the question, and would merely have an ameliorative effect. The bars are not so much a menace as the shops, which form a depot of supply for Local Option territory and blind pigs."

Let me now say as emphatically as I can, that one of the strongest reasons for supporting the Rowell policy as against the Whitney policy is because of the effective manner in which it deals with the great evil of liquor shops as well as with the open temptation of the bar.

Sir James Whitney proposes to continue to protect the liquor shops of the province by maintaining the three-fifths requirement.

Mr. Rowell's policy attacks the shops in four ways.

1. He destroys the 1,441 bars and clubs of the province which act as feeders to the 217 shops, for these bars do much to form and develop the liquor habit that gives to the shops a large part of their trade.

2. He removes the three-fifths requirement and gives the electors the power by a majority vote to close the shops.

3. He allows a county vote upon the question of prohibition of shops, thus preventing one municipality from maintaining depots of supply for surrounding places that wish to be free from the liquor curse.

4. He promises to give married women the municipal franchise, thus adding tremendously to voting strenth against the shops.

As between the Whitney policy of liquor shop protection and the Rowell policy facilitating liquor shop abolition, no temperance man should hesitate for one second. Any use of my name to the contrary is dishonest and dishonourable.

May I be permitted one word more. We men represent more than ourselves. Wives, mothers, boys and girls of our land are voiceless and helpless save as we speak and act for them. They are the greatest sufferers from the liquor curse. Every sense of chivalry, honour and manhood impels us to action.

Let us on this great occasion, sink our party preferences and seize the opportunity of striking one great smashing blow at the legalized liquor traffic in the Province of Ontario.

Wishing you great success in this and all your work, I am,

Yours sincerely,
BEN. H. SPENCE.

COLLIER AT FAULT?

C.P.R. Counsel Declares That Her Error Caused Disaster.

NAMES SAXE AS CULPRIT

Butler Aspinall Delivers Three-Hour Summary of Evidence and Insists That Hard Porting of Storstad's Helm Brought About Collision —None of Crew of Empress Derelict, He Claims.

QUEBEC, June 27.—Because her wheel was first put to port and then, without the authority of the officer in charge, put hard aport when she had steerage way, Butler Aspinall, K.C., in the course of his address to the Empress of Ireland Wreck Commission yesterday afternoon, contended that the Storstad was responsible for the disaster on May 29, in which 1,016 people lost their lives. Mr. Aspinall asked the commission to find that the crew of the Storstad were inaccurate when they claimed the collier did not answer her helm and reasoned that the change in the course of the vessel on the port helm took her into the side of the stationary liner at right angles and at sufficient speed to cause the wound from which the Empress capsized. If no such change had taken place, he said, the two ships would have passed safely.

Mr. Aspinall further declared that to find that the Empress starboarded her helm, as assumed by the Storstad legal battery, would be to charge perjury to Captain Kendall, who claimed no alteration took place in the heading of his ship, and that she was stopped like a log in the water, as indicated by the signals heard on the collier.

In his address, which occupied three hours, only while scoffing at the idea of Captain Kendall telling a deliberate lie when he only recently faced death, did Mr. Aspinall become at all dramatic. For the rest he was calmly and coldly argumental, relieving the tedium of such an extended effort on the court-room by touches of humorous or cutting sarcasm. The crowd broke into a laugh when he described the unanimity with which the Storstad's officers recalled that they had ascertained that the vessel's heading was not altered by the porting or the hard aporting of the helm as "a remarkable affection for the compass under most unusual circumstances."

The first definite suggestion of personal responsibility for the disaster during the hearing of the commission was made by Mr. Aspinall when he held that Third Officer Saxe, who had taken the collier's wheel from the helmsman and put it hard aport, was "the culprit in the case." Saxe's argument that his action did not affect the ship, he said, "was an attempt to clear himself with his Norwegian cli[illegible]."

Mr. Aspinall said that no passengers had come forward to suggest that any of the officers or crew of the Empress had been derelict in their duties, while many had praised them for what they had done. There was no suggestion either that the officers and crew of the Storstad had failed to render all the assistance within their power. He was not arguing that there was not confusion after the collision, but he claimed there was no panic. The evidence showed how men of the Empress had stuck to their posts.

Chief Justice McLeod, who has been acting on the commission with Lord Mersey and Sir Adolphe Routhier, will leave with the Canadian and British assessors on Sunday for Montreal, and will on Monday make an examination of the damaged bow of the Storstad.

Consul to Make Inquiry.

MONTREAL, June 27.—It is stated that an inquiry into the collision by which the Norwegian collier Storstad sank the C. P. R. liner, Empress of Ireland on May 29, will begin in Montreal to-day by the Norwegian consul in this city, W. N. Johannessen, with a view to obtaining an account of the accident to be submitted to the Government of Norway. It is not proposed to place the blame but merely to get the information. Only the Storstad's crew will be witnessed.

Ten Thousand Out of Work.

MONTREAL, June 27.—Ten thousand able-bodied men are walking the streets in Montreal, unable to obtain employment. The vast majority of them are Bulgarians, Russians and Austrians, recent arrivals, and there are many from England and Scotland also. These immigrants are being brought in by the boatload, and the congestion is becoming worse from week to week. The situation is regarded as serious, considering that it is not midsummer yet.

Hon. Mr. Emmerson Better.

MONCTON, N.B., June 27. — Hon. H. R. Emmerson, whose serious illness at his home in Dorchester has been noted, had a bad turn yesterday, but last night was reported to be brighter and resting easily. The members of the family have been summoned and all are now in Dorchester except his sister, Mrs. Atkinson, and his daughter, Mrs. Bowes, who are expected from Ottawa to-day.

Lady Girouard Divorced.

HOPEFUL OF PEACE

Internal Settlement of Mexico's Affairs Is Looked For.

LEADERS MAY NEGOTIATE

Huerta and Carranza Are Expected to Confer and Settle Their Differences Without Outside Aid — General Villa Is Also Disposed to End Difficulties by Conferences Among the Leaders.

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., June 27. —A realization of the serious problems that will confront the delegates of Gen. Huerta and Gen. Carranza when they undertake to negotiate a settlement of Mexico's internal differences has not lessened the optimism of those best informed on the subject. There is no overlooking the danger that the new phase of the peace parleys may be futile, but the situation is such that indications of an amicable agreement outbalance the belief among some of those here that the settlement will come only with the capture of Mexico City by the Constitutionalists.

That the Carranza delegates will be here to negotiate with the representatives of Gen. Huerta is regarded as certain by those within the circle officially concerned in the mediation movement. Assurances on this point have been received, and, while direct word from Carranza himself is lacking, there is reason to believe that he will accept the invitation of the mediators to participate in separate conferences with the Huerta commissioners.

One of the things that have given encouragement to the optimists is the attitude of Gen. Villa. His disposition has been to be friendly to the efforts to settle Mexico's troubles by amicable means, and it was declared yesterday that Villa's course went to prove that he would agree to abide by any arrangement made by the two sets of Mexican delegates at this place.

It is realized, however, that with Zacatecas and San Luis Potosi added to the list of revolutionary victories the Constitutionalists may be disposed to drive a hard bargain with their fellow-countrymen.

Monterey Acclaims Carranza.

MONTERREY, Mex., June 27.—Gen. Carranza, Constitutionalist chief, arrived here with his staff and was welcomed by Gen. Villareal and a committee representing the city. A triumphal arch bearing the word "Welcome" was erected across the track near the railway station, and the city made a holiday of the reception. Enthusiastic cheers for Carranza continued yesterday wherever he appeared.

FATHER GNAM READ OUT.

Former Wyoming Priest Excommunicated From Church.

SARNIA, June 27.—The Catholic Register of Toronto announces that Father Gnam, the well-known Petrolea and Wyoming priest, has been excommunicated. The excommunication follows trouble between Father Gnam and Bishop Fallon of London, arising over the dismissal of an organist in Father Gnam's church some two or three years ago. The matter has been in the courts ever since.

The well-known Wyoming priest paid a visit to a local newspaper office yesterday, and, discussing the affair, he stated that he intends to publish a history of the whole affair from its beginning. Letters from a brother of the woman organist to Father McKeon will be published. Father Gnam states that he does not understand why Bishop Fallon does not receive the same censure of excommunication as himself.

Jews Want Their Other Day.

MONTREAL, June 27. — Jos. Cohen, barrister, is preparing a petition on behalf of the Jewish Grocers' Association, of Montreal, to be presented to the Dominion Government praying that the Lord's Day Act be so amended as to permit Jews to keep open their places of business on Sundays. It is believed the petition will be largely signed, as there are many thousands of Jews in this city.

HOSMER, B.C., KILLED.

Removal of Mining Industry Is Its Death Knell.

CALGARY, Alta., June 27.—Twelve hundred miners have been thrown out of work, and the town of Hosmer, not far from Fernie, B.C., is about to be abandoned by its population owing to the fact that the coal mines at that point, owned and operated by the C. P. R., have been shut down forever. The work of dismantling the machinery is well under way. The merchants and property owners are panic-stricken because the property is worthless without the mining industry, which alone supported the town. The unmarried men are already leaving. The Hosmer mines have been a big disappointment from the start.

Steamer Is Wrecked.

MONTREAL, June 27.— Through her rudder becoming fouled while crossing Lake St. Louise Thursday night from Cedars to Lachine, the steamer Lucia, belonging to the Montreal Light, Heat & Power Co., ran on a shoal in the lake and stove a hole in her bow. The steamer settled rapidly, but before the water reached the boiler and put out the fire Captain Theophile Proulx, who had charge of the boat, was able to sound signals of distress. Help came and the crew of eigh. escaped.

Woman Pastor For Ontario.

MONTPELIER, Vermont, June 27. —Rev. Alberta S. Phillips, who has been pastor of the Universalist parishes at East and North Montpelier for three years, has accepted a call to the parishes of Olinda and Blenheim, Ont. Miss Phillips is said by friends to be the first woman to occupy a Universalist pulpit in Ontario, and the second to be called to a pastorate in Canada.

Fears For Delayed Steamer.

BATAVIA, June 27.—The British steamer Kintuck of the China Mutual Steam Navigation Co., crowded with emigrants, was reported ten hours overdue and it was feared she had met with an accident in connection with the earthquake.

Hydro at St. Catharines.

ST. CATHARINES, June 27.—Hydro lights were unofficially tried on three streets of St. Catharines last night, and to-night the mayor will officially turn on the current.

Manufacturers in Brantford With Rowell

BRANTFORD, June 26.—The most noteworthy angle of the election to the disinterested spectator is the attitude of the manufacturers. In 1911, almost to a man, they voted for Borden. Now the majority of them are not only going to vote for Mr. Joseph Ham, the Liberal candidate, but they are taking a practical part in the campaign. One of them, Mr. John Mann, explained the reasons for this attitude. "I'm going to vote for Mr. Ham," he told the correspondent.. "because I want to see the bar go, and as soon as possible. If Mr .Rowell is returned to power, I am convinced that the bar and all the evils it causes will be eliminated. I employ quite a few men, and I know just how serious a menace liquor is to good work and to good living. Abolish the bar is the biggest issue that has come up in Ontario politics for many years, and when a chance is presented for wiping out the liquor traffic, no man ought to let party affiliations keep him from doing his duty.

"I would vote for Borden to-morrow. I voted for Whitney in the last three elections, but this time I'm for Rowell and abolish the bar. Outside of the temperance issue I don't see a great deal of difference between the parties, though I must say I think municipalities should have the right to determine their own system of taxation. But on this question of temperance the issue is clear."

Contributing Funds.

Mr. Mann is by no means alone among Conservative manufacturers in supporting the Rowell candidate. T. E. Verity, of the Verity Plow Works, one of Brantford's most important industries, who has been an enthusiastic Conservative for many years, has not only announced his intention of voting for the Liberal candidate, Mr. Ham, but has contributed to the general campaign fund of the Liberal party to further the cause of abolish the bar throughout the province.

PETES EVEN THE SERIES WITH THE SAINTS WON SLUGGING MATCH 10 TO 8 YESTERDAY

Bad Day for Pitchers---Each Team Using Two. The Saints Hits Totalled Twenty-Two Bases but the Petes Outscored Them at That. Game was Full of Good and Bad Baseball

In one of the weirdest and most exciting games of the season, after a contest featured by lusty clouting and loose fielding, the Petes evened up with St. Thomas yesterday beating the Section Hands 10 to 8. The homesters set up a lead of two in the first innings, chasing Wilkinson to the barn with none out, but they had to fight all the way to hold it and the game wound up with a Saint perched on second and third.

Each team used two pitchers. Wilkinson retired in the first after three runs had been driven over and was replaced by Ray Clement, who was found for eleven hits and seven runs. Tracey started for Peterborough, but was very wild and after hitting Craven in the third, and after McNellis had tripled, he was yanked in favour of Belting. The Saints put two runs over before the Swede retired the side and it was 4 to 3. Kustus made it even Stephen in the fifth when he cracked one over first base for a home run, but the Petes came right back in their half and chased three runs over the counting station. That left the figures at 7 to 4, but they did not remain long there. The Saints opened the sixth with two runs and the Petes promptly followed suit, and it was 9 to 6 when the seventh opened. Miraculously neither team scored in the seventh, but in the eighth the Cravenites put two more across and were once again within reaching distance. The Petes added one in their half, and blanked the visitors in the uinth, although a base hit would have tied up the ball game. Pinch-hitter Kopp was true to precedent however and missed three.

None of the pitchers seemed to have anything puzzling and it was a field day for the batters. The Petes got more, collecting fourteen, but the Saints had six extra base hits among their eleven. Their safeties included Kustus' home run, triples by Thrailkill, McNellis and Hadley, and doubles by Nevitt and Craven, the visitors' hits totalling twenty-two bases, nearly all the long distance swats were down the right-field line, and Dad Stewart chased the ball until his tongue hung out.

The game was a mixture of good and bad baseball. Both teams contributed costly boots and both showed some good fielding. Thrailkill grabbed several flies in left field in fine style, and Stewart made a circus catch of a high one. He stumbled just before the ball dropped and had to dive for the Spalding, but he came up clutching it. Fox accepted eleven chances nicely in the short field.

First Innings.

St. Thomas—Thrailkill flied to Stewart. Craven walked. Hadley hit to Byrne, whose throw pulled Rooney off the bag while Craven went to third. Fox fumbled Kustus' grounder and Craven scored. Kading hit intoa double, King to Fo to Rooney. One run, no hits, two errors.

Peterborough—Blount singled to centre. Byrne was hit. Welsh bunted along the third base line. He had it beaten, but Gillespie made the throw anyway and heaved badly. Blount scoring. Stewart singled between third and short, scoring Byrne and Welsh. Stewart was out trying to go to second on the play. Clement relieved Wilkinson. Roney flied to Craven. King singled on a bounder over Gillespie's head. King stole second going to third on Nevitt's bad throw. Fox grounded to McNellis. Three runs, four hits, two errors.

Second Innings.

St. Thomas—McNellis was out on a bunt to Tracey. Gillespie drew a pass. Nevitt doubled to right centre. Clement died on a foul to Byrne. Thrailkill grounded to Fo. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Peterborough — Kelly singled to right. Tracey bunted for a sacrifice and was safe when Clements' throw pulled McNellis off. Blount flied to Kustus. Byrne singled over second, scoring Kelly. Welsh popped to Kading. Thrailkill made a nice catch of Stewart's fly to left. One run, two hits, one error.

Third Innings.

St. Thomas—Craven was hit. Hadley tripled to right field, scoring Craven. Belting relieved Tracey. Kustus grounded to Belting. Kading bounced a hit over Fox's head scoring Hadley. McNellis hit to Fox forcing Kading at second, but Rooney dropped King's throw to get McNellis. Gillespie singled to left and took second on the throw to stap McNellis at third. Nevitt flied to Stewart, who slipped as the Spalding came to him, but grapped the ball nevertheless. Two runs, three hits, on error.

Peterborough — Rooney grounded to Gillespie. King flied to Craven. Fox fanned. No runs, hits or errors.

Fourth Innings.

St. Thomas—Clements fanned. Thrailkill grounded to Fox. Craven went out the same way. No runs, hits or errors.

Peterborough—Kelly grounded to Gillespie. Belting singled to left. Blount died on a liner to Thrailkill. Byrne singled to left. Welsh fanned. No runs, two hits, no errors.

Fifth Innings.

St. Thomas—Hadley hoisted to King. Kustus hit over first base for a home run. Kading walked. McNellis forced him at second, King to Fox. McNellis stole second. Gillespie popped to King. One run, one hit, no errors.

Peterborough — Stewart drew a pass. Rooney fanned. King doubled to left, scoring Stewart. Fox missed three. Kelly doubled to left, Thrailkill nearly getting the drive, King scoring. Belting singled over second, scoring Kelly. Blount died on a smash to Kading. Three runs, three hits, no errors.

Sixth Innings.

St. Thomas—Nevitt grounded to Rooney. Clements singled to right. Thrailkill tripled to right, scoring Clements. Craven died on a smash to Fox, Thrailkill scoring. Hadley grounded to Fox. Two runs, two hits, no errors.

Peterborough — Byrne bounced a hit off Gillespie's shins. Welsh scratched one on a bunt along the first-base line. Stwart sacrificed, Clements to Kading. Rooney hit to Hadley who headed off Byrne. Rooney started to steal second and Nevitt bluffed a throw and then shot the ball to third to get Welsh. His peg was bad and both Welsh and Rooney scored. King was passed and stole second. Fox flied to Craven. Two runs, two hits, one error.

Seventh Innings.

St. Thomas——Kustus grounded to Byrne, nice fielding by the third-baseman. Kading died on a bounder to Fox. McNellis walked. Gillespie grounded to Fox. No runs, hits or errors.

Peterborough—Thrailkill made a fine catch of Kelly's smash to left. McNellis grabbed Belting's smash on the run. Blount grounded to Kading. No runs, hits or errors.

Eighth innings.

St. Thomas—Nevitt tripled to right. Clements died on a grounder to Belting. Thrailkill scored Nevitt with a sacrifice fly to Welsh. Craven doubled to left, getting second owing to slow fielding. Hadley singled to centre, scoring Craven. Kustus died on a smash to Belting. Two runs, three hits, no errors.

Peterborough—Byrne was passed. Welsh sacrificed. Stewart singled to right, scoring Byrne. Rooney fanned. McNellis booted King's grounder. Fox cracked one a mile a minute into Kading's hands. One run, one hit, one error.

Ninth Innings.

St. Thomas—Kading hit to Byrne, who threw low to first, Kading going to second. McNellis flied to Stewart. Gillespie singled to right. Nevitt grounded to Belting Kopp hit for Clements and fanned. No runs, one hit, one error.

DIVERS' WORK WILL LIKELY BE IN VAIN

Confronted By Great Handicap. Position of the Empress Hulk Makes Salvaging Difficult.

RIMOUSKI, Que., June 27.—A forty-mile gale from the north-west again prevented the divers from resuming operations at the wreck of the Empress of Ireland.

Sitting in his cabin was Captain Kjerland, when The Telegram climbed over the rail of the Strathcona. He didn't seem very optimistic regarding the recovery either of the bodies or the mail and bullion aboard the sunken liner, lying ten miles away.

"It isn's as though she was standing straight up," quoth the big blue-eyed Norwegian, as he sketched a plan of the submerged vessel. "Her side is at an angle of 60 degrees, so steep that the divers tell me they had to climb up by the iron rivets and grab the portholes to clamber up to the deck. You can figure just how that slopes, too. It is dangerous down there, and dark. At the upper rail, 66 feet below the surface, the men say they can only see for ten feet."

Almost Impossible Task.

"How about getting in to the bodies and other things?" asked the reporter.

"Very difficult. Just think of drilling a hole through three-quarters of an inch of the hardest steel. Then there is a wooden wall, and then another steel wall. That would let the diver into the mail room. Then, to reach the bullion, he must penetrate another steel partition. There is a door, but the key is gone. Recovering the bodies in the various passages and cabins down in the depths of the ship would be almost impossible."

When the possibility of dynamiting was suzgested, the skipper that would be inexcusable. "They are in their graves, just as though they lay in that cemetery," indicatin the little graveyard at Father Point where lie three victims. "Why desecrate it? Probably the wreck will be no menace to navigation."

Dangerous To All.

According to the divers, falling in the water, as Cossaboom did from the Empress' hull, is, though the layman can hardly understand it, almost as serious as a fall through the air.

Square of jaw and hard as nails, Chief Gunner McDiarmid, of the cruiser Essex, in the uniform of the royal navy, moves briskly about his work, getting ready for the first opportunity to proceed to the wreck. Beside him, working on the pump, stands the Essex tar, Whitehead, the brave fellow who went down for Cossaboom's body. All this talk of fear and superstition on the part of the divers on account of poor Cossaboom's untimely end, down among the still dead, is mere imagination. All six divers present this morning were cheerful and eager to be at their task despite the unquestioned dangers.

TESTIMONY FROM THE INSIDE

Earnest advocates of prohibition have often pointed to the liquor traffic as the chief means of recruiting the population of prisons and convict settlements. Those who have always lived outside of prison walls are unanimous in their testimony as to the chief reason why so many of their fellow creatures are obliged to be known by a number instead of a name. To-day, from the inside of the prison the same testimony is emphatically borne. "Lend a Hand" is a periodical produced and published by the inmates of the Oregon State Penitentiary. Its editor is Number 6435. He is serving a life sentence. This paper is, from a notice on the cover that 'Court Records Prove that Alcoholic Liquor is Responsible for 75 per cent. of Crime; WHY Allow Liquor to be sold?' to the last page, where the editor says: 'we have considerable to say about whiskey, for that is what brought most of us here, away from our home and dear ones," a strong testimony to the fact that liquor is very largely the cause of crime. Clearly does "Lend a Hand" state "Capital punishment is not a deterrent of murder. . . . . Since the days of Moses murder has continued, and probably will so continue, but hanging is not a curse. Abolish the manufacture and sale of liquor and murder will be a rare thing."

Participating versus Non-Participating Life Policies Again

FIFTEEN YEARS AGO a Publisher of this City at age 43 took out a Ten Pay 15 year Endowment Policy of $2000, No 81226 in The Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada paying therefore an annual premium of $187.20.

The Non-Participating Premium would have been $170.40.

The extra paid for profits per year (for 10 years only was $16.80.

On the 1st of May 1914 the above Policy matured and he received in cash $2620.25.

Had this man taken a Non-Participating Policy he would have saved $168.00 extra in premiums paid for profits during the ten years but he would have lost $620.25 at maturity of Policy as he would have received only $2000.00 instead of $2620.25 as he did.

Where is there a man that would not like to invest money at such a rate and that too in the Largest and Strongest Life Insurance Company in the British Empire?

You are invited to call and investigate.

ST. JOHN'S CHOIR PICNIC.

Pretty little souvenirs, in the shape of life-like artificial pink carnations, the handiwork of Mrs. Langley of Water Street, who, with her husband, are members of the Choir, were distributed to those on board, during the downward journey of the Thursday's picnic, as reported in yesterday's issue. Mrs. Langley has been seriously ill and her many friends were pleased to see her convalescent after her operation in Nicholls Hospital.

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at St. Luke's Church, Downeyville, on Tuesday morning, June 23, when Miss Annie Twomey, daughter of Mr. Thomas Twomey, Downeyville, became the bride of Mr. Thomas Perdue, Downeyville. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Father Maguire, in the presence of only the immediate friends and relatives of the contracting parties. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Mary Twomey, while Mr. Simon A. Perdue supported the groom.

After the ceremony the happy couple and friends gathered at the home of the brides' parents, where a delightful dejeuner was served.

Mr. and Mrs. Perdue will reside in Ennismore.

FITZPATRICK—TORPEY.

The bride wore white embroidered voile over silk, and white panama hat with plumes. She also wore the groom's gift, a pearl pendant. She was attended by Miss Anna Condon, who was also attired in white voile. Mr. F. T. Hurley was best man. The groom's gift to the bridesmaid was a gold pin with amethyst settings, and gold cuff links to the groomsman.

After the ceremony the bridal party and a few intimate friends assembled at the home of the bride, where a sumptuous dejeuner was served.

The bride was the recipient of many pretty and costly gifts, as well as several substantial cheques.

Mr. and Mrs. Fitzpatrick left on the evening train for points west, the bride travelling in a navy taffeta suit. On their return they will reside in Asphodel.

It doesn't groove, nor glaze if properly oiled and even dropping won't break it. It's two stones in one—one side coarse, for fast cutting, the other fine, for finishing. Here's convenience and a money saving—two stones at the cost of one. In big machine shops and manual training schools all through the country, this stone is rapidly replacing all others. LIQUOR CASES IN POLICE COURT

Another array of drunks faced Magistrate Dumble in this morning's police court.

A young man who appeared for the first time, was fined $5.00 for conducting himself in a drunk and disorderly manner and when put in the cells he managed to break a pane of glass in one of the windows.

Edward Shearer is certainly an early morning drinker as he was charged with being drunk this morning, but was discharged, but as he had not paid a previous fine will spend ten days behind the bars.

An elderly man, who is a resident in the North End of the City, was charged with assaulting his wife and inflicting bodily harm. He pleaded guilty and said it was unfortunate he had done so. The case was remanded until next Thursday.
